Male beautiful people are the ones who insist on playing on the skins team in a basketball game. This is done because tanning is still the number one priority of all beautiful people. You will be able to recognize them quickly if you look for the little alligators on their shorts, and the little British flag on their sneakers.

Female beautiful people are the ones who insist on walking around in shorts and a tank top from the first day of spring on. Sadly, there is a high mortality rate due to late season snow storms and frostbite.

Personally, my favorite place to watch is on the balconies of Orchard Hill. It's amazing what you can see with a good pair of binoculars. Now if you'll excuse me, I have to job. Watching's hard work.

If the allegations were true...

Wednesday night, the Collegian held its front page story until 9:30 p.m. when they heard from me about the final decision on the Cameron speech. As I explained to the Collegian reporter, after meeting with representatives from the gay community, I told them if Cameron did support the execution or killing of gays, or an outright quarantine of gays, I would be the first to denounce him, and certainly would not bring him to speak. Cameron personally assured me he has never, nor does he now support any of those positions. Another thing I made clear to the representatives and the Collegian was I did not support the removal of constitutional rights for gays and lesbians.

However, I wonder who is taking the most humane and responsible position to the gay community and society at large, if not only individuals with the AIDS virus, but those with outright symptoms, continue to be allowed to be sexually active.

The New York Times on Sunday said one million Americans have the virus. According to some reports, one-quarter of these people will get the symptoms and die. If AIDS continues to spread at its current rate, and there is no reason to assume it won't, and when these 250,000 people begin to die, (that's not including those who will contract the disease) most will wonder what the hysterical screaming was all about.

Chicago shares it's treasure as Koko Taylor visits Noho

By WILLIAM SPAIN
Collegian Staff

Chicago is a very lucky town. Home to the finest blues bars in the United States, it offers a non-stop festival of top-name performers. A lot of the talent, jealously guarded, only breaks out on the road a few times a year. Musicians like Son Seals, Sugar Blue, and Luther "Guitar Jr." Johnson are standard weekend fare in Southside night clubs. We only get to see them once in a while.

One of that city's finest exports, Koko Taylor and the Blues Machine, rolled into Northampton on Tuesday night to play a pair of shows at the Iron Horse Coffee House. Dubbed the "Queen of the Blues" (although for us real fanatics, "High Priestess" might be more appropriate), she is one of the people who can really deliver heart-wrenching songs of love, drinking and being scarred by both of them.

Her voice should be listed in the dictionary as one of the definitions of "throaty." It should also be given the status of national treasure. She sings with so much feeling that you can watch the tear ducts give. But, as she tells of the pain and bad times that generate the blues, she retains a sense of humor about it all. The tune "You Can Have My Husband But... Please Don't Mess with my Man" is an excellent example of this.

Probably the highlight of her brief performance was her rendition of "I'd Rather Go Blind." This song is one of the best blues tunes I have heard anywhere and anytime. The band kept cutting back to let her carry it and then breaking in with some awesome guitar playing. Myko Robinson and Eddie Kane provided further pyrotechnics toward

FRIDAY FILM FOLLIES

By DON LIPPER
Collegian Staff

Lot's of new movies are coming to the malls today. Some of them are great and some should probably be boycotted.

First the good news, Sleeping Beauty is back and better than ever. This feature length cartoon is a welcome relief from the 2 hour toy comercials that call themselves entertainment these days. The Disney classic returns to the Hampshire Mall.

If you wanted to create a movie that is the negative reciprocal of the sweet "Sleeping Beauty" Disney film you'd make 9 1/2 Weeks or "Lying Ugly" as I like to call it. This piece of pseudo-intellectual trash stars Kim Basinger (Fool for Love and others) as a nice young woman who goes out and finds her Prince Repulsive (Mickey Rourke). What follows from this auspicous teaming is an abusive, degrading relationship that lasts, you guessed it, 9 1/2 weeks. Some people have wanted to picket against this movie because it is anti-woman. I would suggest boycotting it because it is anti-entertainment, anti-good.

Just Between Friends stars Mary Tyler Moore and Ted Danson (Cheers) as a couple whose marriage is broken up by the wife's best friend (Christine Lahti). This story of the eternal triangle centers on how the affair destroys the friendship of the two women who still want to be friends.

Off Beat stars Judge Reinhold (Beverly Hills Cop, Stripes and others) as a librarian who is forced to pretend he is a police officer in order to help out a friend. This comedy takes that premise and goes as far as it can go with it. Meg Tilly (Agnes of God) also stars.

According to another movie this week anyone can get into law enforcement, even juvenile delinquents. Band of the Hand marks the feature film directoral debut of Paul Michael Glaser (Starsky of Starsky and Hutch). The movie seems to be a cross betwen the old show The Mod Squad and NBC's Miami Vice. The story centers on five young men who are judged as incorrigible and are sent into the Florida Everglades under the thumb of a tough Vietnam vet. These five guys who at first share only their mutual hatred, must later depend and trust each other to survive. After their rigorous ordeal, the guys decide to go back and clean up their old neighborhood by taking on the big drug kings. I don't know about this one.

Weekend Best Bets: If none of the aforementioned movies strike your fancy, the Pleasant St. Theater has two great movies this week. The Trip to Bountiful stars Geraldine Page as Carrie Watts, an aging woman who has just one wish, to return to see her childhood home before she dies. This is an uplifting, touching and often funny film. See it.

Huey Long is a documentary about the popular yet tyrannical Louisiana governor and senator who, had he not been assasinated, could have become America's first dictator. This film is a portrait of one of the most pivotal figures of our century.

the end of show with a little classic duelling. These two guys are definitely good enough to stand on their own, but teamed with Koko, Bince Chappelle on drums and bass-player Jerry Murphy, you have a combination that is hard to beat.

I must admit, however, to experiencing some frustration during the evening. First, the Iron Horse provides no room for dancing and the music of Koko Taylor begs for it. Second, the fact that they press two shows into one night can leave one wanting. The show was not more than an hour and a half long. In the Windy City, that is barely time to get warmed up. It is perhaps understandable in that, given her let-it-all-out style, her voice takes a considerable pounding. After all, I certainly would not want anything to break. That would deprive of me of the pleasure of seeing her again -- something I will go to great lengths to do.

SONGS FROM LIQUID DAYS (Columbia) Philip Glass

Phillip Glass gets some big help

Songs from Liquid Days is different than any other Philip Glass album in terms of the use of outside performers but in terms of sound it is a direct link to the music which he has written in the past few years, particularly "Civil Wars."

Using lyrics by Paul Simon, Laurie Anderson and David Byrne among others Glass composed this song cycle to be sung by Bernard Fowler, The Roches, Linda Rondstat, Janice Pendarvis, and Douglas Perry. But don't be confused, this is definitely not a pop album. It relies on Glass' swirling orchestral melodies, now more orchestral than ever. "Songs from Liquid Days" marks the ever quickening pace of Glass' march towards being a traditional composer. It now appears that "Mishima" with its guitars was an exception rather than a change of direction.

The lyrics on the album are better than expected. Paul Simon's "Changing Opinion" centers around determining the origin of a hum. It is a masterpiece rendered beautifully by Bernard Fowler. Also turning in a strong vocal performance is, and I am the last person one would expect to say this, Linda Ronstadt.

In toto: "Songs from Liquid Days" is no "Einstien on the Beach" but because the score Glass wrote from "Civil Wars" is still It is an experiment which works. (PW)

PRESSURE COOKER (Alligator) Clarence Gatemouth Brown

There is more to the blues than ZZ Top would let on to. Pressure Cooker, originally released in France in 1973, reveals a more jazzy side to the blues. Closer to the John Mayall's blues-jazz fusion of the late sixties and early seventies. Brown's guitar playing mingles with the piano and organ of American bluesicians in exile Jay McShann and Milt Buckner respectively. Gatemouth Brown's playing is nimble and subtle, and with the exception of playing a riff that sounds like a tisket, a tasket on every song it is basically flawless. (PW)

DIFFERENT LIGHT (Columbia) The Bangles

If you can forget that this is an all woman band and if you can ignore the single "Manic Monday," then Bangles fans and harmony lovers can take this album to heart. Backed by punchy tunes similar to their previous material, some vibrant vocals, and an intense push from their label, the Bangles are sucessfully using this album to barnstorm the country.

As indicated, "Manic Monday" (written by Prince) is the requisite "different" tune on the album and it fails. A rambling lament to disorder, "Manic Monday" falls flat with its inane lyrics, overproduced vocals, and spacey background effects.

Now for the good stuff. "Walking Down Your Street," easily the best tune on the album, brings to mind the last Bangles single "Hero Takes A Fall." Here's a tune where the harmony and clear vocals dominate, the rhythm moves on effortlessly, and where the lyrics of passion are uncluttered by wild fantasy.

Other standouts include the fashion ode "Walk Like An Egyptian," "If She Knew What She Wants," and an uplifting tune of adoration "In A Different Light." Buy the album if this intrigues you, and if you're a Bangles fan, keep your eyes open for their return.

BLACK AFFAIRS

UMass shows increase in black enrollment

By TRACEY KEMBLE
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts at Amherst has experienced an increase in black student enrollment, while there has been a decline at other colleges around the nation.

Tim Rhinehart, director of undergraduate admissions at UMass, said there has been an increase over the past five years. "There are not enough qualified black students graduating from in-state high schools, therefore more than 15 percent of the black students are from out of state," he said.

According to Rick Townes, assistant director of the Collegiate Committee for the Education of Black and other Minority Students, "the reason we can't get high-caliber students from in-state is because we cannot compete with what the other schools can offer."

Townes said universities such as Boston University and Northeastern offer better financial packages than UMass, which gives fewer scholarships.

The quality of black students has increased over the years due to programs such as the Challenge Program, designed and headed by Assistant Director of Admissions Rudolph Jones to identify gifted black students at an early age. "The goal of Challenge is to train high school students during their sophomore year so they will be able to pursue a post-secondary education," Jones said

"The Challenge program is not a remedial program. Students have to be recommended by their teachers or counselors. Their transcripts get reviewed and then a final decision is made on acceptance," he said, adding that the program helps students with their study skills, analytical reasoning, time management, and overcoming math phobia, Jones continued.

The schools currently involved with the Challenge program are Madison Park, Jamaica Plain and Dorchester high schools in Boston, Classical and Commerce in Springfield and Holyoke High School. Chelsea High School is expected to become a part of the program in September.

Townes said statistics have revealed that black students attending UMass do not have a higher dropout rate than white students.

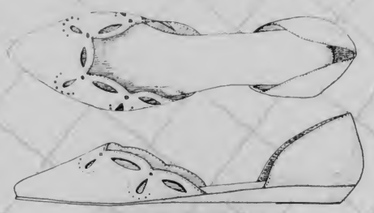
Afro-Am holding career day

The Afro-American studies department will hold an alumni career day from 3 to 5 p.m. next Thursday, April 17, in the Collegiate Committee for the Education of Black and other Minority Students library.

Graduates of the department will be on hand to discuss and answer questions about their careers and students' career possibilities.

Participating Alumni include Imani Kazana, executive director of Queens Pregnancy Network in Queens, N.Y.; Gary Lewis, academic counselor at CCEBMS; and attorney Merrianne F. Thelwell of Springfield.



According to professor Ernest Allen, director of the event, "The main reason for this event is to let students know about the department and the existence of the major, and minor also, for students interested in Afro-American courses."

designated hitter Patti Mazzei lined what looked to be base hit to center field. But Maher had other ideas.

The senior centerfielder took the ball on one hop, and promptly gunned Mazzei down at first base, beating her by at least one step. "That was an incredible play made by Sally," Sortino said.

The Minutewomen came up with another great defensive play in the fifth inning when freshman right fielder Barbara Meehan misjudged a line drive hit by Lady Hawk pitcher Sheila Fagen. Meehan took two steps in, realized her mistake, and then made a leaping over-the-head catch to, once again, deny Hartford of a base runner.

UMass scored all five runs in the second inning, keyed by junior third baseman Debbie Cole's two-run single to right. Meehan walked and sophomore first baseman Martha Jamieson grounded out to third, before sophomore catcher Ilene Freeman stroked a two-run double to left, ending the scoring. UMass banged out eight hits, including two pinch-hit singles by freshman pitcher Chris Wanner and freshman infielder Allison Forman, to aid in Rever's effort.

Pitching aside, Sortino was very pleased with her teams overall performance, especially on the defensive end.

"What I am really happy about is that we had two errorless games before this weekend. That is really important," Sortino said. "Defense is what we really need to concentrate on going into this weekend's games."

The Minutewomen pitching staff will have to be sharp this weekend, as they open their Atlantic 10 conference schedule against an always-tough Rutgers University on Saturday and Temple University on Sunday. Both games will be at home at Totman Field.

"I hate to say it, but they (Stockley and Rever) will have to be a touch sharper on the weekend," Sortino said. "They pitched exceptionally well today, but the real test on how good we actually are will be on Saturday and Sunday.

Rutgers, a team that has always been in the hunt for an A-10 title over the years, is led by senior captain Marge Krah and senior second baseman Sue Robson. The Lady Knights will probably start freshman pitcher Sabrina Moore and sophomore pitcher Kelly Gallagher.

Temple is another team that, like Rutgers, is always in the race come playoff time. The Lady Owls are paced by senior co-captains Jackie Cipolloni and Donna Marino and will go with freshman Patti Walko and junior Marge Lavage as probable pitching starters. Freshman Sally Bauman could also be tabbed for a start on Sunday.

Sox down Tigers for 1st win

DETROIT (AP)—Doubles by Ed Romero and Bill Buckner and Jim Rice's two-run single keyed a four-run fourth inning while Al Nipper checked Detroit on four hits yesterday as the Boston Red Sox beat the Tigers, 4-2 for the first first win of the season.

Nipper struck out six and walked five in eight and two-thirds innings. Joe Sambito got the final out to secure his first save in a Sox uniform,

In other baseball action, pinch-hitter Dale Berra's bases-loaded suicide squeeze bunt with one out in the 10th inning scored Mike Easler as the New York Yankees rallied from an early five-run deficit and defeated the Kansas City Royals, 6-5 in Yankee Stadium.

In St. Louis, Ozzie Smith singled home two runs to break a fourth-inning tie and Rick Owenby earned his first major-league win in almost three years, leading the Cardinals to a 4-2 victory over the Chicago Cubs.

Owenby struck out two and walked four before leaving the game two batters into the seventh inning. Todd Worrell saved Owenby's first victory in a St. Louis uniform.

season a distant memory.

"I can't just come out and say we'll kill them," said UMass coach Dick Garber. "I saw BC play St. John's and they played well and they only lst to Harvard (ranked 10th and tied for first in New England), 8-5, so you can't assume we'll easily beat them."

The Gorillas head to the artifical turf at BC with a potent offense that sees scoring come from all three starting attekmen.

Junior Tom Carmean leads the team with 19 goals and nine assists for 28 points. Junior attackman Greg Canella has nine goals and 10 assists while senior Greg Fisk has nine-seven numbers from the midfield.

The surprise to opponents has been the great play of sophomore attackman Kelley Carr.

Carr has scored 11 goals and added four assists to the UMass attack this season, including nine goals in the last two games.

Add the consistent play (7.0 goals-per-game, .720 save percentage) of freshman goalie Sal LoCascio and the defensemen in front of him, and UMass seems destined for 5-1

Women's lax aces 1st test, 15-11

By JOHN NOLAN
Collegian Staff

CAMBRIDGE—Battling the rain and near-freezing temperatures, the unbeaten ninth-ranked University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team passed its first test of the season, knocking off tenth-ranked Harvard University, 15-11, here yesterday.

"I'm feeling like a million dollars right now," UMass coach Pam Hixon said. "It was the good decisive win we needed, otherwise we might've dropped out of the top 10."

Sophomore attackman Ginny Armstrong scored four goals and had two assists with senior attckman Bunny Forbes, who had been questionable for the game with neck spasms due to a pinched nerve, added four goals to lead the UMass offense.

Junior All-American attackman Lisa Griswold continued her assault on opposing goalies, notching three goals and two assists. Attackman Becky Bekampis, a sophomore, and senior Mary Scott scored two each. Freshman attckman Cathy Fuhrman added two assists.

Harvard, 4-2, was led by senior Kelly McBride and sophomore Anne Needham with three goals each.

The Gazelles, 5-0, took an 8-5 lead into halftime and led 11-7 with 10:25 left in the game after goals by Forbes, Griswold and Scott. UMass then had to fight off Harvard, after the Crimson cut the lead to two, 12-10, with 5:57 left on Blair Wardenburg.

Beaten on three previous face-offs, Scott (who was 13-of-28 against Wardenburg in the game) won the draw to secure the ball for UMass. Scott passed upfield to Forbes, who (along with Griswold) settled the Gazelles into a stall offense. Harvard jarred the ball loose, however, and headed upfield with 4:55 left. An errant pass was scooped up by UMass sophomore attackman Amy Robertson, who fed Scott with a pass alone in front of Harvard goalie Kelly Dermody.

Scott fired the ball off Dermody's chest and watched it trickle in with 4:42 to go, and UMass led, 13-10. Scott then took the next two face-offs to give the Gazelles a chance to run out the clock for good.

"When Harvard closed to within two, we almost panicked. If they had cut the lead to one, we could've been in real trouble," said Hixon. "But when we went into the stall, it really took the air out of their sails. It allowed us to set-up two more goals. The stall made the difference."

For the game, the Gazelles outshot the Crimson, 35-24 and held a 47-27 groundball advantage. UMass was 15-of-24 in clearing the ball out of its end while Harvard was 10-of-18.

UMass scored on two-of-five free position (penalty) shots with Harvard going two-of-four. Freshman goalie Ann Scileppi won her second straight start for the Gazelles, turning away 13 shots. Dermody made 12 saves.

"It's great. It's always good to win when you're playing away, but we can still be better," said junior defenseman Chris Kocot.

Baseball keeps its streak alive

Takes third straight with sweep

By STUART GOTTLIEB
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts baseball team kept itself on track yesterday, sweeping both games of a doubleheader against the University of Hartford, 14-9 and 6-1.

"We're really pulling together as a team," said UMass coach Dick Bergquist. "We're putting out some good solid pitching performances, and that's the key to winning."

The Minutemen have now won three straight, and stand at 4-14. They face the University of Maine in a doubleheader today at Lorden Field starting at 1 p.m.

The first game was a showcase of mishaps, with UMass lucky to come away with the win. The game was filled with fielding flaws as Hartford committed as many errors (seven) as they had hits. The Minutemen were little better, making four miscues. UMass won with a strong offensive hitting performance in the first three innings.

UMass jumped out to a quick 7-0 lead after one inning, even though they had only four hits. They increased the lead to 8-0 after two and appeared to be running away with the game until the Hawks struck back with six runs in the top of the third, capped off by a mammoth two-run homer by third baseman Pat Hedge.

The blast, off UMass starter Steve Allard, carried well over the 370 sign in left centerfield. Allard was then replaced by eventual winner Jeff Jensen (1-0) who, in four strong innings of work, allowed only two earned runs while striking out four and walking one.

The starter and loser for Hartford was Bob Teachman (1-2) who went three innings and gave up 11 runs (six earned) while walking two and striking out one.

The game saw Darrin O'Connor and Matt Sheran go three-for-four for UMass. Kern was three-for-three, all three players had doubles. Gary DiSarcina was two-for-three with three RBI.

The second game was a complete reversal of the first, highlighted by a sparkling pitching effort by UMass freshman Chris Slattery, who went the distance for UMass and raised his record to 1-3 on the season.

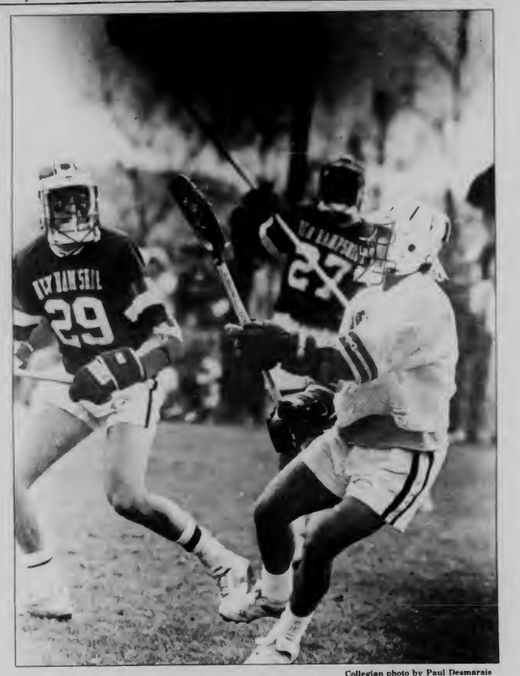
Slattery, became the only UMass pitcher to go the distance this season while holding to the Hawks to one run on five hits, no walks and four strike outs in seven innings.

Bergquist was obviously pleased with Slattery's performance.

"He had an excellent game," the coach said. "He had good command over all of his pitches, and a good defense behind him didn't hurt either."

This game also saw some hard feelings erupt between the two teams.

Hartford coach Bill Denehy was thrown out of the game in the third inning after doing his best impersonation of Earl Weaver.



The argument started when Sheran slid safely into second after a botched pick-off attempt by Hartford.

Denehy thought that Sheran ran out of the baseline and let field umpire John Porcarri know it when he kicked dirt on his feet and turned his cap around to shout directly in the ump's face, ala Weaver, before Porcarri had enough and told the irrational coach to take a shower.

That fracas came before a more serious incident between O'Conner and Hedge, after O'Conner was thrown out trying to take third on a passed ball. O'Conner thought that Hedge's tag was a little rough and came up annoyed.

Hedge tossed the ball at O'Conner and headed for the dugout. He then lead off the top of the third inning by taking a Slattery fastball in the backside. Hedge eyed down Slattery on his way to first base, but nothing more came of it despite Denehy's shouts of disapproval from the visiting duggout.

The Minuteman scoring started in the first when Kern singled with the bases loaded to drive in two. Then in the bottom of the third Hartford starter and loser Mike Garbeck (0-3) threw a wild pitch that cost a run, and balked in Sheran with two outs. The scoring was capped off in the fifth when Sheran singled home O'Conner after the shortstop doubled to lead off the inning.

Confident Gorillas at BC

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

After this game, they may have to be called the Godzillas.

The University of Massachusetts lacrosse team, if all goes to plan, should go through Boston College like the fabled monster cut through Tokyo, It should be that easy.

The Eagles, at 3-7, are a team looking to make something of an already-bad season while the Gorillas, at 4-1, are looking to keep their momentum going after Wednesday's satisfying 13-8 win at Brown.

The problem won't be to win, that issue was decided long ago, the question is by how many goals. A big win at BC (Alumni Stadium, 7 p.m.), coupled with the Brown victory, should move UMass up from 11th place in the polls.

Last year, UMass administered a savage 25-7 beating on the Eagles at Boyden. The UMass attack scored at will while the defense chewed up almost every BC attackman that ventured near the crease.

That display came from a team that finished at 6-8. Tomorrow's game will be played by a UMass team that is looking to make that

Hoop inks Conn. guard

The University of Massachusetts men's basketball announced yesterday that they signed their first recruit for next season, a 6-2 guard from Fairfield, Connecticut.

Carey Herer became the first of possibly three recruits that will sign with the Minutemen.

Herer led Andrew Warde High in Fairfield to a 20-6 season for coach Mike Abraham. He was selected to the Daily News and Bridgeport Post all-star teams.

Herer averaged 19 points, six rebounds and eight assists per game. He scored over 1,000 points, was named second-team all-state and was a McDonald's honorable mention All-American.

The University of New Hampshire, Sienna and the University of Connecticut of the Big East Conference all recruited the guard.

"We are very pleased to sign a player possessing the all-around basketbaall capabilities of a Carer Herer," said UMass coach Ron Gerlufsen, who led UMass to a 9-19 record last season.

"He will be a positive addition to our program," added the coach. More signings, for both the men and women, may be announced next week.

Cameron speaks, is quickly answered

Calls for harsh laws against gays

By DAVE BOARDMAN
Collegian Staff

Tempers flared Friday when anti-gay activist Paul Cameron told about 300 people at the University of Massachusetts that civil rights should be stripped from homosexuals.

Surrounded by jeering protesters and a smaller number of supporters, Cameron told the crowd outside the Student Union Building that "homosexuality is worse than murder.

"No one would deny that homosexuals are human. It doesn't mean we have to give them special rights," he said. "Homosexual activity is a blight on society."

Members of the gay and lesbian community, wearing T-shirts that read, "No Violence," and campus police kept the vocal crowd peaceful, although Cameron was hit by two eggs thrown by demonstrators.

Cameron, a psychologist and chairman of the Institute for the Scientific Investigation of Sexuality, a non-profit corporation which lobbies against gay rights, said society has made a mistake in allowing homosexuals the same liberties as heterosexuals.

Counter-rally; 'cause for humanity'

By JEANETTE DeFORGE
Collegian Staff

Directly after an anti-gay activist spoke Friday, about 250 people staged a counter-rally to protest his speech, support gay rights and celebrate Gay and Lesbian Awareness Week at the University of Massachusetts.

The demonstrators, many from Third World and progressive groups, joined gay community members in the rally, titled, "An injury to one is an injury to all." Professors, administrators and students spoke on the steps of the Student Union Building, where minutes before, psychologist Paul Cameron had urged that homosexuality be punished by imprisonment and castration.

Kevin Sweeney, a member of the University Democrats, told the crowd, "It is not just a cause for the issue of gay rights; it is a cause for humanity." At Sweeney's request, most of the demonstrators linked arms while he spoke to show solidarity.

J. Severt Severid, chairman of the Chancellor's Council on Civility, said, "There is so much fear to be exploited around male sexuality. He [Cameron] has a fear of himself and his sexual orientation."

Mark Clukey, a student organizer of the rally, said, "I remember being in the closet, really unhappy; my life was a lie.

"We are not going back into the closet," Clukey added as he produced a cardboard "closet" and asked for volunteers to destroy it.

The rally ended with the launching of a "wheel" made of crepe paper and helium balloons, which symbolized the unification of all groups. Participants chanted, "Gay, straight, black, white—same struggle, same fight."

"I think this rally shows that people will not listen when they are lied to, but they will listen to the truth," said Dave Bachli, a UMass sophomore who also saw Cameron speak.

A rally to collect books and money for the University of El Salvador, sponsored by the Central American Solidarity Association, was held with the gay rights rally because both groups had reserved the Student Union steps for the same period.

About 10 men protested the anti-Cameron rally by arguing with demonstrators. "I'm against gay people on campus; they are corrupting our university," said Tom Lavallee, a sophomore psychology major.

Ellsberg will speak

Daniel Ellsberg, who disclosed "The Pentagon Papers" in 1971, will speak at 8 p.m. tonight in the Student Union Ballroom.

Ellsberg, an anti-nuclear activist, will speak on "American-Russian Roulette: the Construction of Instability." Ellsberg served as a consultant to the US secretary of defense from 1958 until 1970. During the Kennedy Admistration, he drafted nucleae war plans for the US Joint Chiefs of Staff.

In 1969, Ellsberg testified before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee about the findings of the McNamara task force, which investigated the history of US involvement in Vietnam. Ellsberg had served on the task force in 1967.

In 1971, he took the McNamara findings to the media, which resulted in his being sentenced to 150 years in prison for disclosing government secrets. The charges were dropped in 1973 because of "gross governmental misconduct."

Referendum will decide fee increases

By CAROL TANNENBAUM
Collegian Staff

In today's and tomorrow's referendum election, one of the six questions on the ballot asks approval of a fee increase for the Union Program Council and the Distinguished Visitors Program.

Both fees have remained the same since the groups' start, with DVP forming in 1968 and UPC in 1977. The proposed increases received unanimous support last week from the Undergraduate Student Senate.

The third question on the ballot refers to the two groups and is stated in two parts: "Do you support a fee increase in the Student Activities Fee for the following:—Union Program Council—$3 increase? and "The Distinguished Visitors program has operated under the same budget for the past 17 years. In order to continue providing the University community with lectures of diversified interests, would you support a fee increase of $1.50 per year?"

Currently, the Student Activities Fee is $88 per year, which supports the Student Activities Trust Fund. If both referendums pass, the fee would increase to $92.50 per year.

Although DVP is a student-run organization, Larissa Potapchuk, president of the program, said, "We have a professional reputation across the nation." The program brings well-known speakers to campus and has received this reputation from them, she said.

UPC is allotted $27,000 per year from the trust fund—or $3 per undergraduate student—for providing musical entertainment on campus.

UPC sponsors seven concerts a semester and students are in charge of all aspects of the concerts, including security, contracting, promotion, and marketing.

UPC offers diverse programming, said Damon Riley, newly-elected production manager. He said the council often sells tickets at below cost to students, "or we book a larger act at a smaller place for a more intimate concert."

Five other questions are on the ballot, including the funding procedures of several campus fees.

"If we as a society allow these people to exist, they will bring plague after plague to our land," he said.

Cameron was expelled from the American Psychological Association in 1984 and censured by the Nebraska Psychological Association for violating ethics codes and misrepresenting research.

He told reporters before speaking that he "withdrew" from the APA in 1982 because he opposed its stand on gay rights, but his resignation was never accepted and he was expelled instead.

"If these charges were serious, they would go after my license, but they haven't," Cameron said.

The speech was paid for by Students for America, a right-wing student group based in Washington, D.C. Cameron was invited to the campus by UMass student Dan Perrin, who called it a coincidence that the visit took place during Lesbian and Gay Awareness Week.

Cameron urged that homosexuals be subject to fines, imprisonment and castration. "It is foolish to allow people to sex themselves to death," he said.

After the speech, Perrin said he was disappointed: "I thought he was going to speak more on AIDS."

Reed Ide, co-director of the UMass Program for Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Concerns, said, "The real danger is that people like Cameron make an attempt to steal the agenda. He's not going to be allowed to do that."

Ide said of the number of protesters, "It took a lot of guts. I can't say enough good about them."

International fair offered diversity

Students from different cultures shared their food and heritage Saturday at an international fair in the Campus Center.

More than 30 nationalities, including native Americans, were represented in the event, which was sponsored by the International Students Association at the University of Massachusetts.

An exposition of brochures, photos, handmade ornaments and books was divided among tables, each belonging to a different country, in the Campus Center Auditorium and lower-level concourse.

Harold Prytz, one of the event's organizers, said the fair was also aimed at acquainting American students with foreign cultures.

Some students who sold ethnic food and other items wore traditional costumes. Throughout the event, films were shown in a room adjacent to the auditorium.

The Crescent Dancers, a professional belly-dance troupe, opened the afternoon entertainment. Students from Greece, Japan, France and Armenia then put on traditional dancing and singing acts.

The fair was organized by a five-member committee, advisors from the International Students Office and the Student Activities Office, and the association's president, Jason Hicks.

With ISO's 20 years of experience, "Everything's run smoothly," Hicks said. Turnout for the event exceeded last year's 4,000, helped by parents here for Parents Weekend, he said.

Another organizer said, "The International Fair is a way to contribute to the unity of international students. It makes them feel at home."

Boston Gay Men's chorus performs

To cap off the Gay and Lesbian Awareness Week at the University of Massachusetts, the Boston Gay Men's Chorus performed classical and popular music last night in the Campus Center Auditorium.

About 100 people attended the concert, which lasted one and a half hours and ended in a standing ovation.

The 65 member chorus, established in 1982, sang selections by Mozart, Schubert and Handel. They also performed a medley from Forty Second Street and two Gilbert and Sullivan pieces.

"We have three missions: One is to be a social group for ourselves; The second is to be a centerpeice for the gay community in Boston," said John Homko, the president of the chorus.

"The third mission is to be an outreach to the straight community, we're standing up and saying we're gay and we have nothing to hide," Homko said.

The chorus is a volunteer organization and members pay a $10 fee in order to pay the director and the accompanist. They perform three concerts a year at Boston's Jordon Hall, and also sing at colleges and towns in the area.

"We perform a lot of music which is written for a male chorus," Homko said. Much of the music the group performs was written for glee clubs at all-male colleges.

Door turned guillotine cuts up professor

By KEVIN LINDER
Collegian Correspondent

Please excuse Don Wise for having second thoughts about coming to work after last Tuesday morning; finding one's door replaced by a guillotine can do that to a guy.

"I showed up Tuesday morning and here was my door gift-wrapped with newspapers and a big red bow," said Wise, head of the department of geology and geography. "The card read, 'For the man who has everything, The Grad Student Motivator; love, Mary and Josh.'"

Although there are no graduate students named Mary or Josh in his department, Wise said he doesn't have much doubt that the perpetrators were graduate students.

The guillotine was installed sometime after Wise left his office in Morrill Science Center at midnight Monday. The door was removed and the doorway reframed with slotted two-by-fours, then fitted with a head-block and a silver-painted plywood "blade."

Geology and geography department head Don Wise demonstrates his "student motivator."

"We've been prodding the graduate students to get going on their theses," Wise said. "In fact, a departmental memo just came out with hints about how to get finished by June."

The initial shock gone, Wise laughed the incident off.

"There's a long tradition of horseplay in the department," he said. "Once the office was filled with balloons, and another time the walls were covered with newspapers. One year, they actually built a concrete wall across the doorway, leaving just enough space on the side for me to slide into the office."

The fully operational device remained in place all day Tuesday, but was gone the next day.

"It disappeared quietly, just as the concrete wall had," Wise said. "Just to make sure, though, I left word that it probably would be good to have the guillotine replaced by a door."

As an organization funded, operated, and controlled solely by the undergraduate students at the University of Massachusetts, the DISTINGUISHED VISITORS PROGRAM has long sought to keep the university community sensitive to the world in which it exists.

Since 1968, DVP had not received an increase in funding, while the costs associated with lectures have risen 400 percent. For example, in Spring 1984, Ruth Westheimer charged $2000 to lecture in the Student Union Ballroom. Now her honorarium is $10,000. Similarly, Stephen King had an honorarium of $2,500 in Spring 1985 and now receives $12,500. With such fee increases it has become extremely difficult to bring diverse speakers to the university. If our funding is not increased, we will not be able to continue to offer the lectures of excellence that our campus expects and deserves. For this reason we ask you to support Referendum Question #2. Please let us continue to bring the world to UMass.

The Distinguished Visitors Program urges you to vote YES to Questions 1 and 2 supporting fee increases for the Union Program Council and the Distinguished Visitors Program.

Discovering the "meaning" of art

Mary Cresse

Having had no formal training in the study of art or art history, to some I am likely unqualified to comment on the MEANING (let's put it in capitals, eh?) of campus art; as a state taxpayer and one whose intelligence is continually insulted by the attitude of the effete art-is-all coffehouse types, I feel compelled to object to the recent, willful defacement of the rust-colored sculpture at the entranceway to Haigis Mall.

I'm referring to the "ART: Handle With Care" papers stuck on (and now, thankfully, removed from) the sculpture. A recent Collegian photo caption described the act as an effort of Fine Arts major Pam Tillis "in response to what she said is the misuse and misunderstanding of art."

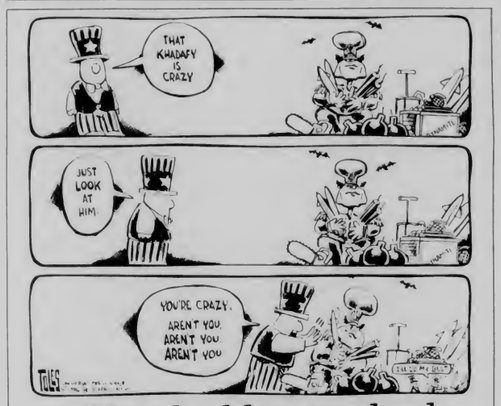
I am all for an open discussion on the "meaning" of art, but I object to the presumptuous manner in which Tillis chose to convey her message. It offends me for a number of reasons.

Primarily, it is an act of defacement. If all 21,000—thesis or no—of us acted on our compulsions to convey our profound messages to the world in a similar way, this campus would look like the inside of a New York subway car. Look, I'm an English major who happens to be offended by the illiteracy rampant among college students. What if I took a can of black spray paint and wrote "'I' BEFORE 'E' EXCEPT AFTER 'C'!" up and down the Tower Library? Do you think the median rhetoric score of sophomores would improve? More important than my "cause" would be the extra money I'd have to fork up for campus maintenance fees.

Secondly, how can one "misunderstand" or "misuse" art? What is it, a microwave, an automobile? And especially if the art is non-representative (probably meant to confuse us anyway).

While waiting for a late bus, I encountered Tillis and her companions who, after proudly informing me they had been arrested (a statement never validated, was I supposed to be impressed?), went on to say they altered the sculpture because they were "sick of" seeing the arch-shaped piece being used as a place to meet someone or wait for the bus. Tillis was especially disdainful of the practice of sitting under it.

This is my theory; if a person wants to wait for the Northampton bus underneath the thing, maybe that is that person's individual interpretation of the piece of artwork. And maybe sitting under it is a superior way of ascertaining—like, you know—the concept the artist was trying to establish.(Could I have another espresso, please?) What are we supposed to do, stand back and say to ourselves "This is ART and I respect it"? Does one need a master's degree in Fine Arts to appreciate art?



Last year I wrote a column jokingly—and the key word here is "jokingly"—that reviewed the art sculptures on campus. I received a lot of criticism (only slightly less than a Republican columnist/friend of mine) that attacked me for being a hopeless philistine. Clearly, if I could not agree with their views of "art," I was stupid. At first, I was angered but then amused because I realized that my detractors probably felt insecure—or unsure of—the "role" of art on their campus and in their lives. At least that is my artistic concept of their action.

Did Tillis and her companions fail in conveying their message? I think so, but other than writing this column, I won't further infringe (or paste) my opinions within your sight. Unlike Tillis, I'll allow you unencumbered freedom of interpretation.

So, write your letters, argue with me, if you will, but don't call me stupid.

And remember, 'i' before 'e' except after 'c'.

Mary Cresse is a Collegian columnist.

The double standard

John Hayes

It is certainly difficult to figure the absurdity in which not only the Reagan administration but also the American media presents international occurences. For instance, two weeks ago three apparently similar acts of reprisals took place in different parts of the world. The United States retaliated for attacks by Libya against U.S. planes in international airspace by destroying four ships and a missile installation. Israel bombed PLO camps in Lebanon after a rocket attack on a Northern Israeli school. Both incidents have been presented by Reagan and the media as justified, as perhaps they are. This is consistent with our attitudes toward other Israeli bombings of Lebanon, Tunisia and Iraq in recent years, toward the U.S. invasion of Grenada, and toward South African incursions into Angola in search of ANC guerillas.

Yet simultaneous to the bombings of Lebanon and Libya, two Nicaraguan battalions crossed into Honduras in pursuit of contra forces. As the contras use Honduras as a refuge, such actions as the Nicaraguans took seem consistent with the actions listed above. Yet the Nicaraguans were immediately branded as thugs and burglars, and gross violators of another nation's sovereignty. Reagan immediately used the incursion as evidence that Nicaragua is expansionist.

No doubt Nicaragua has made a serious political blunder, though the contra aid would probably have been approved anyway. But this incursion is a blunder precisely because Nicaragua, in the opinion of the West, does not enjoy the same right of national sovereignty. Somehow it is fine that the contras, based in Honduras, are allowed to occasionally cross into Nicaragua to murder, rape and burn. But when Nicaragua goes into Honduras to fight them, it is branded as an international criminal. It blundered because it cannot understand that what the United States, Israel and South Africa do regularly is forbidden for Nicaragua.

When a nation harbors terrorists or opposition military forces which use that nation to attack another, that nation has to accept the consequences—which may include their own borders being violated. I cannot understand why Honduras does not belong on the list of nations harboring terrorists—the list that includes Libya, Lebanon, Tunisia, Cuba and the Soviet Union, as well as the United States itself, since training camps exist in this country for the contras. The original violation of international law rests with the United States, Costa Rica and Honduras, not with Nicaragua. This the U.S. media has ignored.

Apologies for misunderstanding

The Senior Fund was created to raise critically needed money for the University and to boost class morale. As part of this year's campaign, we designed a poster to build awareness in the fund and to encourage participation by graduating seniors. An integral part of the poster's design was a partial listing of the names of graduating seniors.

To meet the space limitations of the poster, approximately every sixth name was selected from the list. Several seniors whose names did not appear have been concerned enough to inquire about this design, and I want to apologize to anyone who might misunderstand the poster or our intentions. There was no oversight intentional or otherwise.

Last year the Senior Fund raised $28,843. This year our goal is $35,000 and we will need the support of every senior to meet the challenge. I hope we can count on each of you, and I ask the understanding of anyone who felt overlooked.

Also, if you would like a poster, we have plenty left over.

Awareness week: job well done

I wish to thank the Committee for Lesbian and Gay Awareness Week for presenting to all of us the opportunity to confront our fears and prejudices and turn them to a better understanding of and greater appreciation for the diversity of people on this campus. It is much easier to simply hate those we perceive as different than to realize or acknowledge that for all our differences, we have even more in common: the need to love and be loved, the need to be treated with dignity and respect, and the need to grow and learn about the privileges and responsibilities of being a part of God's creation.

The Committee for Lesbian and Gay Awareness Week, Residential Education, and the Program for Gay, Lesbian, and Bisexual Concerns are to be commended for all their hard work.

Rev. Esther Hargis

Problem in subtle positioning

We are very disturbed at last Thursday's edition of the Collegian. Right below the article concerning Paul Cameron, there was an article featuring a lesbian; but more than that, she is a black lesbian. Many people are influenced by what they see in periodicals. After having read the harsh remarks quoted of Cameron, readers then see a black woman who just happens to be the object of his quotes.

Cameron's remarks, such as "Gays are worse than murderers and we should execute murderers," are quite extreme. The positioning of the article about the black lesbian under the Cameron article leads one to feel that Cameron attacks blacks as well as gays. We feel this is a serious mistake in positioning on the editors' part and should be considered more carefully in the future. Cameron is being offensive; he needs no help from the Collegian, indirectly or otherwise.

Founded by The Ohio State University, Swathmore College, The University of Michigan, and Cornell University in 1918, the Mortar Board now has 183 active chapters across the country.

The Isogan Chapter of the Mortar Board was installed at the University of Massachusetts in 1955. Those students who have shown qualities of academic excellence, leadership, and service are honored with membership. This year the selection committee reviewed approximately 250 information sheets from those students who merited eligibility.

The Mortar Board is pleased to announce the newly tapped members for 1986 - 1987

Parents have a UMass weekend

Parents of Dean's List students visited the University of Massachusetts this weekend to see just what the tuition bills are all about.

"Parents feel a special pride in the accomplishments of students and we hope that, by the end of Parents Weekend, that they also feel a great deal of pride toward the University and what it's done for so many students," said Jon Hite, director of Alumni Affairs. "It was a very successful event."

Those whose children achieved a 3.5 grade point average or better last semester were invited to Amherst Saturday for a program of workshops and lectures ranging from "How to write a news story," to "Oriental rugs," Hite said.

About 300 families registered with Alumni Affairs for the program, and about 600 attended the banquet Saturday night.

'Graphics Ganja Gang' tops News in OT

The battle was bloody, literally, and neither team ever led by more than two baskets. When it was over, the Collegian "Graphics Ganja Gang" had squeezed out a 23-21 overtime victory over the newsroom Saturday at the Fort River School.

Co-production manager Conor Plunkett, his jersey one of several stained by a cut on News guard John Yonce's right arm, iced the game with an 8-foot fadeaway jumper.

Plunkett—despite a thumb bandaged from a pasteup mishap—and Jim Podesky led the Ganja Gang in scoring, with Peter Soderberg and Ansel Zinter adding a few key shots. Night driver Ken Levinson hounded the News team with sideline chatter.

The News attack was led by Daniel Sobel, special guest center Pat Mahoney of WMUA, and fast-break work by Yonce and sportswriter John Nolan. Managing editor Ian Polumbaum played scrappy defense, shutting down Plunkett for the second half, but failed to hit a single shot.

LoCascio was pulled with 8:08 left in the second for Paul McCarty, who had a similiar lack of action as BC didn't manage a shot in the half. In fact, BC's first shot came with 3:43 left in the third, and was easily handled by Brookline's Quint Moores, playing in the goal in front of the home crowd. He had four saves.

Chris Tyler (2), McGovern, Pat Cain, Greg Collins and Dave Avidon all scored for UMass in the second half. Jeff Morgan and Brian. .IcDonell scored for BC, with Morgan putting the Eagles on the board with 10:38 left in the game.

"We did what we had to do," said UMass coach Dick Garber. "I didn't want to run it up on them. But now, they're all tough games. ..we'll have to be ready."

Gorilla Grumblings: Senior defenseman Gerry "Sky-King" Byrne sported red Chuck Taylor's on the artifical turf. ..several BC fans had bags on their heads. .UMass fans held a 3-2 advantage in kegs at the game. .UMass outshot the Eagles, 38-14 and held a 61-35 groundball advantage. ..Garber joins the coaches from Virginia, Maryland, Maryland-Baltimore County, Penn, Penn State, Army, Cornell, Adelphi, Bucknell, Brown and Rutgers with a vote for the national poll.

Women's lax wins sixth, at Northeastern

By JOHN NOLAN
Collegian Staff

BOSTON—A sense of relief accompanied the University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team as it escaped Parson's Field with a narrow, 11-8 victory over winstarved Northeastern University, here yesterday.

"We survived it, that's the most important thing," UMass head coach Pam Hixon said of her team's performance in the game. "I think we were both mentally and physically flat. We went 3-0 this week and I worked my players really hard but not to worry, we've got two days off.

Sophomore attackman Ginny Armstrong continued her red-hot play scoring four goals while senior attackman Bunny Forbes and junior attackman Lisa Griswold each had two goals and two assists to lead the unbeaten, 6-0, Gazelles. Senior attackman Mary Scott had two goals and an assist, and freshman attackman Cathy Fuhrman had an assist.

Defensively, UMass had to contend with senior attackman Gail Zimmerman, a giant of a women who battered the Gazelle defense for seven goals and assisted on another for the 0-3 Huskies.

Zimmerman scored four of her team's five goals in the first half to offset a pair of goals by Armstrong and one each from Forbes, Scott and Griswold.

Tied 5-5 entering the second half, Hixon assigned junior defenseman Chris Kocot the sizeable task of shutting down Zimmerman. Kocot did the job and the Gazelles pulled away, outscoring the Huskies, 6-3.

Gorillas cruise by Eagles, 17-2

UMass heads home with 5-1 record after rout of BC

BY PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

CHESTNUT HILL—Once the first quarter of Saturday night's University of Massachusetts-Boston College lacrosse game was over, the major question left to answer was if noted bus driver John "Washy" Waskiewicz would get the team back in time to hit a few parties.

Washy, true to form, breezed up the Pike quickly enough to get the Gorillas home with plenty of time to celebrate a savage 17-2 destruction of the Eagles.

UMass climbed to 5-1 with its third-straight win of the season. The 11th ranked Gorillas now prepare for a four-game homestand starting Wednesday afternoon against St. John's (Boyden Field, 3 p.m.).

As one-sided as the BC score was, it doesn't fully indicate the ease UMass handled the Eagles with. Scoring virtually at will, the Gorillas led 15-0 at one point in the fourth quarter before the lowly Eagles (3-8) managed two meaningless goals.

Of the 500 people that watched the game in dimly-lit Alumni Stadium, a good 400 were Gorillas followers. Stomping their feet when UMass scored and booing the two BC tallies, the fans provided UMass with some incentive, although little was needed.

"We're playing pretty well right now, but our best is coming," said senior midfielder Seamus McGovern.

Gazelles win. Page 11

"We've got four big games coming up at home, and with the support we've been getting, we should keep on climbing in the rankings."

With ninth-ranked Duke falling to Virginia and number 10 Harvard losing at Yale on Saturday, UMass could climb as high as eighth in the USILA poll.

The gory details: Junior attackmen Greg Cannella and Tom Carmean put on first-period clinic at BC. Cannella scored the game's first two goals, the second assisted by Carmean, before Carmean rattled off the next two and with 1:15 left in the period, and it was 4-0.

The fourth goal was a thing of beauty. Going one-on-one with his defender, Carmean ran past BC goalie Paul Veeden (14 saves) before picking a corner with a behind-the-back shot.

McGovern then won the face-off (he was 12-of-16 on the day with UMass going 20-of-24 as a team) and senior midfielder Greg Fisk raced in for a 20-foot blast and it was 5-0 with 1:10 left in the first. McGovern won the next draw, the ball was worked to Cannella and he found a wide-open Rich Abbott with 15 seconds left. 6-0, call it a night.

But Fisk wasn't done, scoring unassisted 45 seconds into the second period. Sophomore attackman Kelley Carr then chalked up his only goal, junior middie Doug Musco took a Cannella feed for another before Cannella scored his third, from Carmean. Musco added his second, from Carmean and, well you get the picture. It was that bad. UMass led at halftime, 14-0.

On the defensive end, freshman goalie Sal LoCascio couldn't make a save on the Eagles. But then, the Eagles couldn't get a shot off against the UMass defense as the crease defenders and the d-middies chewed up any BC

Junior catcher Sean Flint (center) celebrates one of his two home runs against Maine on Friday. The Minutemen split a doubleheader with the Black Bears.

UM baseball splits with Maine

Minutemen pound six homers

By JOE ROBERTS
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts might just be the best 5-15 baseball team around, after splitting a doubleheader with the University of Maine, a perennial college world series contender.

UMass lost the first game, 11-5, but came back to win the next one, 13-5. The Minutemen have now won four out of their last five, and face the University of New Hampshire in a doubleheader at 1 p.m. this afternoon at Lorden Field.

Sophomore lefthander Matt Sheran, who played centerfield in the first game, saw action on the mound for only the second time this season and in five-plus innings held Maine to five runs, struck out one and walked thtree before giving way to Steve Allen, a usual infielder pitching for only his second time.

"It feels good. They're a tough team. I pitched against them last year and they knocked me out." said Sheran.

Allen not only came into the game to cool off the Black Bear bats, he also hit a tape-measure home run that left the ballpark in a hurry. It was still rising as it went over the 370 sign in left-center field.

Maine coach John Winkin praised UMass' newly-awakened attack, saying, "Massachusetts hit the ball well. We didn't underestimate them, it's just the way they hit the ball. I don't like to make excuses, but we've got three league games this weekend. We just didn't get the pitching we needed to win."

Evidently, Maine's hiting wasn't too bad either as both teams combined to hit ten home runs, UMass' season total before the game. The Minutemen had 26 hits for the day including home runs by catcher Sean Flint (two), Steve Kern (two), Allen, and Sheran.

Flint's home runs were his first and second of the year and came in the first game. He also added a double in the second game and was four-of-six on the day with two runs batted in.

He would have had more RBI if Kern were not batting in front of him. In the second inning of the first game, they hit back to back homers while in the second game, Kern's two-run homer (his fourth of the season) cleared the bases before Flint's double.

Kern was four-for-seven to raise his average to .326. He had four RBI. Mike Chambers, recently called up from the junior varsity, was three-for-five.

Jon Martin (1-4) was the loser in the first game, giving up five runs, walking two, and striking out none.

UMass coach Dick Bergquist was obviously pleased with the victory. "It helps team morale and proves to the team that we're capable of playing and beating a good team, a team that beat the number one team in the nation (Miami). It doesn't make the season but it puts us in a better frame of mind," he said.

Streak over as softball splits four

By ROGER CHAPMAN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts softball team had its nine-game winning streak snapped on Saturday, as the Minutewomen dropped a 10-inning 3-1 decision to Rutgers University in the first game of an Atlantic 10 doubleheader. UMass, 21-5 and ranked 20th in the nation, won the first game 4-0.

The Minutewomen also split with Temple University yesterday, taking the first game, 3-0, and finishing on the short end of a 3-2 count in the nightcap

Senior lefthander Lynn Stockley, 11-1 on the season, won two games over the weekend, throwing a one-hitter against Rutgers and a three-hitter against Temple. Sophomore righthander Lisa Rever took both losses, dropping her season record to 8-4.

The Minutewomen won game one of the Rutgers doubleheader behind the near-perfect pitching of Stockley. After her perfect game performance last Thursday, Stockley gave up a lead-off double before sending down the next 21 batters she faced.

Senior second baseman Carol Frattaroli's sacrifice fly in the third inning proved to be the game winner. Sophomore shortstop Paige Kopcza roped a two-run double to left center for the insurance runs in a three-run third inning.

In the nightcap, Rutgers capitalized on a newly-adopted NCAA rule designed to shorten extra-inning games. The rule states that starting in the tenth inning of any extra-inning game, each team will start every additional inning with a base runner on second.

Rever was the unlucky beneficiary of the ruling, as Rutgers led-off its half of the tenth inning when third baseman Nancy Grippo reached on a fielder's choice, advancing Amy Calimer, the designated "base runner" to third. Calimer scored the game winner on Marge Krah's sacrifice fly.

The Minutewomen had a golden opportunity to win it in the ninth. With with runners at first and second, Frattaroli lined a single to left. Sophomore first baseman Martha Jamieson, who represented the winning run for UMass, was held up at third, unknowing that the left fielder had bobbled the ball. Kopcza followed with a fly ball to right, and the UMass rally was dead.

After taking yesterday's opener 3-0, the usually potent offense stalled, as the Minutewomen could manage only four hits against Temple righthander Marge Lavage in game two. To make matters worse, the normally sound UMass defense committed three errors on its way to a 3-1 loss.

With UMass leading 2-1, Temple bounced back for two runs in the sixth when Robin Boyd reached on an error and scored on Debbie Todd's double to left, forcing Stockley to work in relief. Temple provided the game winner when Todd scored from third on a Stockley wild pitch.

"The mental mistakes we made hurt us. We need to clean that part of our act up," UMass head coach Elaine Sortino said. "We can do better and we know it. We just have to go out and take it to whoever's next."

Ellsberg makes call for grass roots drive

Daniel Ellsberg telling a Student Union Ballroom crowd last night: "It is in your power to get Congress to act and it is in Congress' power to cut off the arms race."

By DANIEL SOBEL
Collegian Staff

The threat of a nuclear confrontation between the United States and Russia, because of an escalating arms race, requires Americans to mount pressure on Congress to reverse the danger of Armegeddon, a leading anti-nuclear activist said last night.

"It is in your power to get Congress to act and it is in Congress' power to cut off the arms race," Daniel Ellsberg, a former Pentagon analyst who resigned during the Vietnam War, told a crowd of about 300 in the Student Union Ballroom.

Speaking on "American-Russian Roulette: The Construction of Instability," Ellsberg disputed the notion that it would take years to accomplish arms control. At the next Summit meeting American negotiators could say, "We won't test underground nuclear warheads or ballistic misiles if you don't, and in the time that it takes to shake hands on the deal the arms race would be over," he said.

Ellsberg said the Soviet Union has proposed a complete nuclear freeze, but "Reagan is determined to continue the arms race."

He said popular opposition to American military involvment in Vietnam finally pressured Congress to cut off funding for bombing and military action, and urged that lobbying, writing and calling congressmen, protesting and making speeches would pressure Congress to act now.

He also said the US is playing a "vigilante" role in Libya and the bombing of that country in March was a means to rally support for Reagan's $100 million aid package to the "contra" rebels trying to topple the Sandinista government in Nicaragua.

For the US to police such a large sphere of influence in the Mediterranean, which is extremely close to Russian borders, "it could only be accomplished by our willing to back that up with the threat of nuclear war," Ellsberg warned. In times of war, he said the US has used nuclear threats "a dozen times to make the world safe," but that kind of safety is "radically dangerous.

Ellsberg compared the arms race to a movie theatre in which smoking was so strictly prohibited that gasoline was poured over the carpets and seats. "It will prolong the time before someone smokes but when they do, the whole thing goes up," he said.

In 1967, while serving in Saigon, Ellsberg was appointed a member of Defense Secretary's MacNamara task force on the history of US decision-making in Vietnam.

In 1969, he testified in secret before the US Senate Foreign Relations Committee on those findings and in 1971, he took this information -- "The Pentagon Papers" -- to the press. For this he was put on trial, if found guilty, he could have spent a maximum of 150 years in prison. The charges were dropped in 1973.

"The arms race is deeply embedded in our society," Ellsberg said. "And we have yet to find out if democracy will survive in that society."

Student arrested on rape charges

By JEFFRY BARTASH
Collegian Staff

A 21-year-old male University of Massachusetts student was arrested over the weekend and charged with raping a female student in a residence hall, UMass police said.

The suspect, a resident of Theta Chi fraternity on North Pleasant Street, was also charged with indecent assault and battery and breaking and entering in the nighttime with intent to commit a felony, according to a clerk at Hampshire District Court in Northampton.

He was arraigned and released on $1,000 bail, the clerk said.

Chief Robert Joyce said police were notified of the alleged rape by a call from John Quincy Adams Tower at 3:04 a.m. Saturday.

Joyce would not comment further and residence hall officials refused to discuss the reported incident.

Bob White of the UMass Greek Affairs Office said, "This is the first time we have heard of it. The police have not notified us of anything. We have no information to share.

"We are going to see what we can find out from our own standpoint," White said.

Gerald O'Neil, director of public safety, said the UMass police department's sensitive crime unit is investigating the case.

The penalty for rape is life in prison or any term a judge decides is appropriate; the penalty for indecent assault and battery is imprisonment for up to five years; and the penalty for breaking and entering in the nighttime is up to 10 years in jail and up to a $500 fine, according to UMass police.

Financial aid system changes

Department of Education asks verification of income data

By BOB KIEVRA
Collegian Staff

More than 15,000 University of Massachusetts students will begin receiving financial aid verification forms in the mail this week, part of a US government attempt to eliminate mismanagement in student aid programs, according to the University's chief financial aid administrator.

Starting this year, the Department of Education is requiring that financial aid offices verify income and household data of all financial aid applicants, said Arthur Jackson, director of the UMass financial aid office.

"This means that almost all unmarried students applying for financial aid will have to complete the verification forms and submit copies of their own tax statements plus those of their parents," Jackson said.

Young students claiming independent status will likely find the forms complicated, Jackson said.

"Unless you were born before May 31, 1964, the government now requires that independent students submit copies of their parents' tax returns along with their own," Jackson said.

"No matter how long you may have been on your own, the government now wants to look at your parents income also," Jackson said.

"I don't like it anymore than the students will," Jackson said. "Our own verification techniques were working fine. It's just one more hurdle that we're going to have to clear."

Jackson said that since the Reagan administration took over, the financial aid office has had decreasing control over financial aid programs.

"They (the federal government) think that there is massive cheating within federal student aid programs," Jackson said. "I've seen more regulations implemented over the last six years than in my entire 14 years in this field," he said.

"It's all done in the name of efficiency and accuracy," Jackson said. "It doesn't improve either. It just adds more paperwork to my staff and puts my budget further in the red," he said.

Jackson cautioned students to take the forms very seriously.

"I believe the forms to be repetitive and unnecessary," he said. "Nevertheless, they are the law.

"We have to abide by federal regulations, and if students do not return the forms on time, the bursar's office will not credit financial aid toward student bills," Jackson said.

Jackson said the forms are indicative of the type of people who run the department of education.

"Most of them are out of private industry with little background in the education field," Jackson said. "A lot of them are political appointees who don't understand the consequences of their actions at the University level. They do not have the interests of the students in mind," he said.

Jackson said he hopes that students will not be discouraged by the forms.

"They're just another administrative process," he said. "I realize they come at a bad time with the semester winding down, with students having to choose housing and select courses. But in reality they shouldn't take more than a half hour to complete."

Peer education program explores sexuality

"How to Be a Better Lover," "Contraceptive Education" and "Pornography vs. Erotica" are some of the workshops the University's Peer Sexuality Education Program offers weekly or upon request.

Tomorrow and Thursday, program staff members will be at tables in the Campus Center Concourse to provide information on sexually transmitted diseases.

"Human sexuality is a health entity, so it is appropriate to do health promotion," said Ron Mazula, coordinator of the program since 1972. "The program started in 1971 at the request of the students ... we try to meet changing needs and interests."

Applications for leading the workshops are now available in the Health Education office at University Health Services. Prospective leaders are required to take two three-credit courses, Public Health 213 and 214.

"We look for academically sharp students with good communication skills. By the end of the first semester, the students can give workshops," Mazula said.

Jodi Foburn, a sophomore English major who has been with the program for two semesters, said, "The PSE program is important because we are all peers, students, so we have a better understanding. Generally, students are more receptive to us.

Mazula said, "Issues are more complicated and sophisticated now. Students know more through media, sex ed in school. Sexually transmitted diseases are more serious now than they used to be."

US aircraft strike at Libyan targets

Reagan calls it 'retaliation'

WASHINGTON (AP) - United States, acting to "preempt and discourage" Libyan terrorism, carried out a series of middle-of-the-night air strikes against Libya, President Reagan's spokesman announced last night. "We have done what we had to do," President Reagan said.

Addressing the nation just two hours after U.S. military jets struck targets in Tripoli and elsewhere in Libya, Reagan said, "When our citizens are abused or attacked anywhere in the world...we will respond in self defense."

And in an unmistakeable and personal warning to Libyan leader Moammar Khadafy, he declared, "If necessary, we will do it again."

Pentagon spokesman Fred Hoffman said Air Force F-111 jets were launched from Great Britain and joined Navy jets off the U.S. carriers America and Coral Sea for a joint attack on "targets in the vicinity of Tripoli and Benghazi."

Reagan's spokesman, Larry Speakes, said American military jets had struck at Libya's "terrorist infrastructures-the command and control systems, intelligence, communications, logistics and training facilities."

"He counted on America to be passive," Reagan said in declaring that the United States had direct, precise and irrefutable eveidence of Khadafy's role in recent anti-American terrorist attacks. "He counted wrong."

The president said "evidence is now conclusive" that recent terrorist incidents had occurred on "orders sent from Tripoli." He said intelligence had blocked one "planned massacre" involving the use of grenades and small arms in France.

Reagan, Speakes said, "...has been considering this for a period of time. We've been taking into consideration the Khadafy activities."

Speakes said that the military action took place "in light of this reprehensible act of violence," referring to the bombing of a discotheque frequented by American servicemen in West Berlin. He said there was "clear eveidence Libya is planning future attacks."

Speakes remarks were televised live on evening news programs broadcast by the major American television networks.

The networks had been carrying comments from correspondents in Tripoli, who had given eyewitness accounts of the strikes.

In his statement, Speakes said, "Libya bears direct responsibility for the bombing in West Berlin on April 5 that resulted in the death of Army Sergeant Kenneth Ford and injury to a number of American servicemen and others."

"In light of this reprehensible act of violence and clear evidence that Libya is planning future attacks, the United States has chosen to exercise its right of self-defense. It is our hope this action will pre-empt and discourage Libyan attacks against innocent civilians in the future."

"In addition to the strikes at terrorist centers, the president also authorized limited defense suppression missions in order to defend our own forces engaged in this mission. Every effort was made to avoid civilian casualties and limit collateral damage, and to avoid casualties to those American servicemen who are participating," he said.

Senate Majority leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., said that John Poindexter, chairman of Reagan's National Security Council, had informed the congressional leadership of plans for the attack some two to three hours in advance of the strikes.

Mid-air collision kills three

HOLLISTON, Mass. (AP) - Three people aboard a helicopter were killed yesterday when their craft collided with a small airplane in a cloudless sky over the rural Boston suburb.

"The plane went one way, the rotor went another and the helicopter fell right out of the sky," said eyewitness Bernie Doherty. He said that as the rotor fell to the ground "it kept spinning like a top" until it landed in a resident's swimming pool a quarter mile from the point of impact and within 100 feet of a crowded nursery school playground.

Witnesses said the plane skidded off the helicopter and glided silently away, making an emergency landing several miles away. The two men aboard the plane escaped with minor injuries.

Carol Sheehan said she was watching the 4 and 5-year-olds in her care playing on swings and in the sandbox when she noticed the helicopter and plane approaching one another.

"It looked as though the wing of the plane hit the propeller of the helicopter. I heard the crackle," she said.

Sheehan said she saw the helicopter rotor veering over a wooded area toward the Children's Loft nursery school and watched as it sliced through the above-ground swimming pool next door.

"As I got the last one in the door, I heard it hit the pool and I saw the water gushing out," Sheehan said. "I felt as though I was in slow motion...like you were running in a dream."

Search is on for Bellingham girl, 15

BELLINGHAM, Mass. (AP) - Police searched today for 15-year-old Wendy DeCasse, who allegedly was kidnapped from her bed as her parents slept in a nearby room.

Police said Wendy's sister Heidi, 10, who shared the bedroom, told them she was bound and gagged by the intruder but managed to free herself and awaken her parents.

Radio station WMRC quoted sources as saying Nelson and Carolyn DeCasse initially thought their youngest daughter's claims were the result of a nightmare, but then found the oldest daughter missing.

The station said Heidi told her parents she had been bound with tape and gagged by two men dressed in Army fatigues, one carrying a gun and the other brandishing a knife, as her sister was taken from the room.

More pieces of shuttle recovered

WASHINGTON (AP) - Diving teams have recovered a much-sought portion of the booster rocket joint whose failure is suspected of causing the space shuttle Challenger explosion and it shows evidence of burning, the presidential shuttle commission said yesterday.

A statement by commission chairman William P. Rogers said, "One of the two sections of critical interest" was recovered Sunday and that it was from a joint area where a leak in the booster rocket is thought to have occurred, causing the shuttle's explosion on Jan. 28.

"A burnt out area of the joint tang at about the 300 degree position is evident," the statement said.

The other key piece, the bottom of the joint, still has not been located.

Car runs into crowd; one dead, 24 injured

PONCHATOULA, La. (AP) - A car that plowed into a crowd of fairgoers and mowed down people for a block, killing a man and injuring 24 others, sounded like repeating fireworks as it hit them, a witness said.

Teacher Kim Zabbis, who was in her front yard nearby when she heard what happened, said, "It sounded like fireworks - pop, pop, pop. People were yelling, telling people to get out of the way."

The car, driven by an 83-year-old woman who apparently became ill at the wheel, smashed into a crowd of people Sunday as they were going to or coming from the popular Strawberry Festival.

Graduate student emphasizes female writers

Lourdes Jimenez: Always strives for excellence.

WOMEN ON CAMPUS

By ADAM LAVINE
Collegian Staff

Lourdes Jimenez says her mother raised her "thinking she should learn to cook and sew," and although she has strayed far from the housewife image, her mother could not possibly be disappointed.

Jimenez, who received a masters degree in Renaissance and Golden Age Hispanic literature from the University of Massachusetts, said she is considering writing a dissertation on ancient literature with an emphasis on women writers.

"The Renaissance was a masculine era," she said. "I'm interested in how women could perform in a male-oriented society."

Jimenez said she has always strived to have her work be of the highest quality.

"You have to pursue yourself as a complete individual," Jimenez said.

Born in Moca, Puerto Rico in 1960, Jimenez was educated in private Catholic schools that "emphasized success."

Jimenez said her family was instrumental in her ambition. "My grandfather owned sugar cane fields but didn't know how to read or write," she said. "He would say to me, 'You should go for something better.' "

According to Jimenez, there are few differences between Puerto Rico and the United States, but, "The differences are positive. We [in Puerto Rico] have both cultures together, which opens up more horizons." She said there is little discrimination in her field, but she is quick to stress the importance of being strong and supportive of yourself.

"I am in a woman's body," she said. "But I have a whole mind. I have to be the best in my area, and it doesn't matter if I'm a woman or not. Intelligence has nothing to do with sex."

After graduating from the University of Puerto Rico in 1982, Jimenez applied to UMass and was contacted by the school's Minority Recruitment Program, which arranged a scholarship with the Spanish department.

Jimenez teaches a conversational Spanish course and her students praise her work, describing her as "Incredible."

A dynamic and energetic teacher, Jimenez looks at her job with excitement. "I love teaching," she said. "It's a big responsibility...we're [the teachers] shaping the minds of the future."

Woman and her car attacked

A female UMass student was punched in the face by one of six "college-age men" who banged on her car windshield at 8:48 p.m. Sunday at the intersection of North Pleasant Street and Massachusetts Avenue, University of Massachusetts police said.

She was treated by paramedics, police said.

In other police reports:

●A 34-year-old man was put into protective custody after he was allegedly discovered drunk at 5:12 p.m. Friday in the basement of Prince House, police said.

●A storage bag and two pizzas were reported stolen from an unlocked College Pizza delivery car at 2:34 a.m. Sunday near the south side of Pierpont House, police said.

●A $450 Fuji 10-speed bicycle that had been chained to a rack was reported stolen at 12:55 p.m. Friday from John Quincy Adams Tower, police said.

●Two tires with aluminum rims were reported stolen from a 1978 Chevrolet at 10:17 p.m. Sunday from the parking lot near Warren McGuirk Alumni Stadium, police said.

●Paints valued at $40 were reported stolen at 6:30 p.m. Friday from an unlocked room on the fourth floor of the Fine Arts Center, police said.

●Three persons were charged with driving under the influence over the weekend, police said.

New plan may solve refuse problem

By LISA DiMEO
Collegian Staff

The Pioneer Valley is facing a refuse disposal crisis, according to the manager of the Recycling Project at the University of Massachusetts.

Michael Pattavina, the manager, said he has a plan that may solve this problem of the University and its surrounding communities.

Pattavina, who graduated from University in 1982 with a degree in natural resources management, said it is not feasible for the small communities of the Valley to try to recycle independently.

He is working to coordinate the Pioneer Valley Recycling Association, an organization aimed at combining the recycling efforts of the University with the efforts of neighboring communities. Small towns often find they do not have the resources to sort through glass and newspaper to eliminate "contaminants" such as pull-tabs and magazines, Pattavina said.

This quality problem, he said, is "labor intensive, since they don't have the manpower or the expertise" necessary for the recycling process.

The problem for small towns is two-fold, since there is also the question of quantity, he said. To move the recyclables to the market, the towns must contract with a hauler, "but they must fill up his truck and the small towns can't provide enough recyclables," Pattavina said.

By combining the efforts of the towns, Pattavina, who is now studying part-time for his master's degree in regional planning, believes the partnership will benefit the Pioneer Valley, he said.

He said some of the difficulties in the the recycling business stem from the the market itself.

"I can find a market for high-grade recyclables," he said. High-grade includes computer paper, white paper and IBM cards.

Newspaper and glass, however, collected by the recycling center at a rate of about 100 tons a year, is sometimes not easy to sell. Because of price fluctuations, according to Pattavina, it is sometimes cost effective to buy low-grade recyclables, but not right now.

"If I can't sell glass and newspaper, I can't collect it," he said. "But if the University can find a buyer, 15 years of newspaper and glass recycling will continue."

Landfill disposal is based on population rather than quantity, Pattavina said. He hopes the town of Amherst will begin offering incentives to the University to continue recycling, he said.

Conference for co-ops today

Students interested in cooperative jobs related to their academic work can attend an information session run by the Office of Cooperative Education at 7 p.m. today in Campus Center 168.

"Co-op jobs are designed to help you establish an ongoing relationship with an employer," said Joan Stoia, the director of the office.

The program, titled "the Co-op Connection: The Right Choice for Students and Employers," is open to all students but is geared toward students in the School of Management.

Expected speakers are: Charles Trearchis, the manager of college and professional recruiting for International Business Machines; Parker Worthing, associate dean of the School of Management; and Mark McGrath, SOM student and co-op veteran.

Trearchis will recall his experiences in cooperative education and tell what he sees as the benefits of being an IBM professional, Stoia said.

McGrath will speak about his recently completed co-op at IBM, where he worked under Trearchis' supervision, Stoia said.

"Last year, 80 students from the SOM had one or more placements [in co-op jobs]; we are growing every year," she said.

Stoia said she recommends that all students secure at least one co-op placement before graduation.

"Most of the students looking for co-op jobs are finance majors, since that is a relatively broad area," she said.

"We hope to have several hundred people attending the program," she said.

Historical analysis incomplete

Rusty Denton's editorial on income tax, although well thought out, lacks a serious attempt at historical analysis. Denton claimed that the United States could support the military on a five percent income tax as we did prior to the 1940's, suggesting some type of historical reference. He did not, however, acknowledge the fact that prior to the 1940's, our country was in a period of isolationism and did not feel the need to support a large military. It also did not support such expensive programs as NASA, Star Wars and NATO to name a few. Therefore, it would have been possible to support the military with a five percent income tax before 1940, yet today that figure would be unrealistic.

Denton stated that social programs undermines "mututal dependence" in families. The rate of divorce rose sharply in the Roaring Twenties, and the number of illigitimate births was comparitively very high in the 1920's and early 30's before FDR's welfare programs were even developed, suggesting that these tragedies are not the cause of social programs.

Denton claimed that a strong welfare program "undermines self-reliance." As republican administrations cut aid to welfare programs, they reduce funds to mental institutions and state schools for the mentally retarded --institutions which help our mentally unbalanced and handicapped adults become self-reliant. Without the support, these institutions are forced to push mentally dependent people, both young and old, into the streets of New York, Boston, Seattle and Washington D.C. --cities which, according to national reports, are witnessing today the largest population of homeless "street people" since the Great Depression.

From Denton's attack on Social Security, it appears that he is unaware of the cost of nursing homes and medical care these days. The cost of a stay in the nursing home (most are for several years) is more than a working class family could afford to pay for rent, let alone an unemployed elder, regardless of savings. Before the Social Security Act of 1935, the elderly were taken care of by their family, but as modern transportation allows for greater mobility, elders are often left alone. Furthermore, modern medicine has improved tremendously and to deny disabled and senile senior citizens financial support would be to deny them of the medical advancements received in hospitals and nursing homes.

That social programs are run by bureaucrats is a point well taken, but by accusing them of having "few incentives to keep overhead and personnel costs down" Denton is denying the fact that the group of bureaucrats who have the most experience in neglecting to keep these costs down is Pentagon personnel.

Denton's argument does not show an understanding that, historically, our country established social programs because free enterprise and big business could not meet the needs of the people. This argument is as old as the social programs themselves, but if is to be used, it should be historically sound, and that is the responsibility of all journalists.

If it sounds too good to be true...

I would like to address all students who have received the illegally solicited Summer Work Survey in the dining commons. This survey carries more bull than one can imagine.

Last summer I was convinced into joining up with such an operation. At this point in time last spring, I needed a summer job. I jumped when I saw one that offered the average UMass student $3,500. Much to my dismay, I did not receive that income. Overall I lost a bit of money and I just want to give some friendly advice to eager people:

1) Remember, as the old saying goes, if it sounds too good to be true, it probably isn't.

2) Don't believe all you read or hear; people are being paid to convince students to "follow them."

3) Watch out where you sign your name and address.

I hope these three easy tips help you think more clearly in the next few months left of school. Summer jobs are not difficult to find, but a conniving salesperson might try to convince you otherwise.

"Awareness" alienating

Rusty Denton

I don't know how I missed the proclamation, but last week was "Lesbian and Gay Awareness Week" at UMass. For those not familiar with this tradition, it is the week when many lesbians and gay men celebrate their lifestyle, and is also a time for exposing homophobia and heterosexism. Last year, heterosexism was defined as "the assumption that everyone is or ought to be heterosexual, that heterosexuality is superior to all other forms." Homophobia was said to be "not only the fear of lesbians and gay men, but also latent fears of lesbian and gay feelings inside yourself."

If I see anyone walking around in mortal fear of their latent sexual impulses, I will certainly keep the clinical definitions in mind. However, I am not convinced that the greatest opposition to the gay community is the result of fear and arrogance. In fact, if they ever get past their hysterics and "love me, love my lifestyle" attitudes, some gays and lesbians might discover that heterosexuals do not have a monopoly on fear and arrogance.

The effect of publicity about gays is often to alienate those whose support they seek. The words homophobia and heterosexism are manipulative. To call someone heterosexist is like one child saying to another, "If you don't agree with me, you're a jerk." To call someone homophobic is like saying, "Prove to me that you're not afraid." It is schoolyard psychology.

As far as I'm concerned, almost all of the "awareness" material is equally manipulative. Most of it plays for sympathy, complaining about how hard it is to be gay in a straight world. The rest of it attempts to intimidate us with the solidarity of the lesbian and gay community. Whining and threatening —don't the people who produce this material have any self-respect? Even lack of self-respect among gay people has been used as an excuse for laying a guilt trip on straight society. We are told that heterosexuals have robbed the homosexual psyche by suppressing their history, their science, their theology and their culture.

They are free to believe that, but I think there's another explanation for low self-esteem. Self-respect is the result of placing value on one's identity. The fact that some gay men and lesbians adopt the trappings of the opposite sex suggests that they place no value on the gender they were born with, putting themselves at odds with their true biological identity. Of course, the community disputes that, grasping for evidence —any evidence— that gays and lesbians are genetically or physiologically different from the heterosexual population. The proof has not been forthcoming.

The absence of scrutable evidence also scuttles the argument that lesbians and gay men are somehow medically exempt from sexual moral codes. The fact that so many wish to separate themselves from the rest of human experience indicates that not only do they reject the biological gender and moral tenets valued in straight society, but they also trivialize the idea that anyone could understand their experience without sanctioning it. That's a lot of rejection there, and it doesn't originate with the straight community. No wonder so many heterosexual individuals react negatively. It is foolish for a straight individual to take personal offense at a different lifestyle. But it is also foolish for the gay community to make it clear that although they disregard someone's values, they expect an uncritical reception from that person. That kind of attitude could lead to other words, such as egosexism— the assumption that everyone should be educated about your sexuality, or antididascophobia —the fear of counter-education.

Special issues' topics

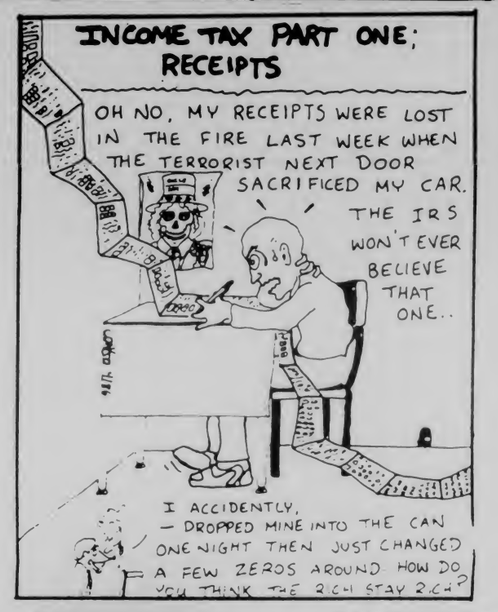
Tami Tetreault

The Collegian covered its beautiful face Friday, April 4, with a "Special Lacrosse Issue." It appears to be an injustice to other sports at UMass.

Lacrosse is a great sport. My problem is not with the sport, but rather, with the ethics of the Collegian's choice for a special issue. Last fall, the UMass women's field hockey team finished their season in the top ten nationally, and the women's soccer team was number one nationally. This winter, the women's indoor track team finished fourth in New England. The women's softball and lacrosse teams are both having excellent seasons (15-3 and 2-0 respectively as of April 4), and the list goes on. With the athletic strengths of these teams, why would a newspaper cover wrap a front page with advertising and the roster of a team whose record was 2-1? It's disappointing to find the Collegian's business staff and local advertisers placing emphasis on this particular sport when so many outstanding teams have filled the sports pages' headlines in the past.

My involvement with sports at UMass is solely as a fan, not a participant. Speaking as a student, who is interested in journalism but is not an athlete, I feel an injustice has been made.

Why does this newspaper feel the need to cover wrap the front page with ads and a team roster, to begin with? If it does choose to do so, why would the paper choose a team which has yet to prove its winning position? Shouldn't the winners be in the limelight? The athletes who played hard and won should be reaping the glory, not those who have yet to prove themselves. These women athletes represent our University; they deserve our support and our pride in their achievement. An injustice has been served to these women who fought hard to be number one and achieved it.



The other day I put forth these ideas to a UMass woman athlete. Her response was very tolerant. She stated that "guys need that (coverage)," and she continued to explain that she would play her hardest, regardless of the commercial attention. Even professional athletes don't follow this philosophy anymore. Perhaps women's sports are better left alone.

If extensive news coverage leads to the revolting contemporary Super Bowl experience, filled with MTV videos, team commercials, and unusual actors representing teams, then indeed the Collegian has done women athletes a very big favor.

This is my personal salute to those women athletes who continue to play their hearts out regardless of the glamor and the unbalanced representation. Their strength goes deeper than athletics; the biggest strength is that of tolerance. These women have a true dedication to athletics --a dedication without the deserved attention and without the cover wrap. This is a symbol of the truest form of an athlete, the kind of athlete that seems to disappear when the cameras and reporters take control.

This column is just one UMass student expressing her admiration for these women, their talents and their tolerance. Thanks for building up our school image and giving us one of the finest reputations for women's athletics. I am really proud of our female athletes; however, my previous pride in the Collegian has taken a sudden nose-dive.

The show stinks; time to close it

Perhaps you can help me with a question I have about a road show which recently played on campus. It's a one-man circus entitled "Paul Cameron Sets You Straight." I missed this performance but I've seen it in other places.

It was performed in Spain during the Inquisition. It played to one million in what was Armenia, had a long run in Germany (1933-1945), and achieved a sell-out in Auschwitz.

It was presented in Selma, Alabama, during the 1960s, Cambodia during the 1970s, and is currently breaking records in Sun City, South Africa. Recently, there have been command performances by the contras in Nicaragua and special showings for refuseniks in the Gulags of Siberia.

Paul Cameron is a real "trooper" and believes that this show must go on. The show stinks and it's time to close it.

Cameron visit showed lack of tact

I cannot believe the hypocrisy I witnessed first-hand. Last Friday morning, for half an hour, Paul Cameron was spewing his various dementia to the audience surrounding the Student Union steps. Happily, there were enough people there standing up for our rights so that our anger made itself heard and drowned out the garbage he was attempting to spread.

Granted, freedom of speech is everyone's right, no matter what beliefs the speaker may hold. This is not the issue. What is the issue is the hypocrisy --the incredibly poor taste and the lack of insight on the part of the administrators who allowed a student to reserve space for Cameron in the first place. For all of the talk that this university is attempting to be non-oppressive in the areas of sexism, racism, sexual orientation and physical disability, sanctioning Paul Cameron's appearance is hardly practice of what they preach.

Can you imagine Josef Goebbel coming to campus to speak on Judaism? How about James Watt coming to lecture on women and handicapped people? Or maybe a Ku Klux Klan member coming to speak on people of color? There is not an administrator or an organization on campus that would stand for any of these insults, and yet gays and lesbians and everyone else here at UMass must put up with this slap in the face in the middle of a social issues awareness week which is supposed to inform about oppression. It seems from this incident that more oppression is taking place than is being taught about.

Certainly, allow this man to speak his (ahem) mind(?). There are plenty of bathroom stalls, street corners, and janitor's closets that he can preach from, if he must. In the end, though, it will be him in the closet, not us.

Women and Civil Disobedience

THEATER REVIEWS

By REBECCA THATCHER
Collegian Staff

Antigone Too: Rites of Love and Defiance is a celebration of the history of American women engaging in civil disobedience. The play combines the story of the Greek tragic heroine, Antigone, with the stories of American women activists from four centuries of US history to tell a compelling story of how and why women have disobeyed the laws of the state in order to obey a higher law of conscience.

Showing again at 8 p.m. Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday in the Halle Flanagan theatre at Smith College, Antigone Too was concieved and adapted by New York feminist playright Martha Boesing and directed by Smith College professor Deborah Lubar.

It is an important play because it tells the true stories of women who have been ignored by the American history books which concentrate on the acivities of white men in the "corridors of power," like Washington and Wall street. It is a fun and interesting play because the acting, costumes and music are all excellent.

Smith College student Jenny Little Dow plays Creon, the king in the Greek tragedy Antigone, who orders that Antigone's brother, who died fighting against the state in a civil war, be left out in the woods to rot. The drama that ensues as Antigone goes out to try to bury her brother and ends up in jail, winds its way in and out of the primary part of the play. The central part of the play takes place in a jail cell where real American women who struggle for economic justice, religious freedom, women's rights and racial equality tell their stories with the help of the omnipresent prison guards.

Some of the characters are delightfully familiar and others are more obscure. Mount Holyoke college student Tracey Huebner plays labor organizer and hell raiser "Mother" Mary Harris Jones convincingly. Mother Jones was a turn of the century activist who inspired a generation of coal miners with her oratorical abilities and boundless energy. When she is arrested they ask her why she has no address and she says her home is "wherever people are fighting oppression." Later, during a discussion on the church, she repeats her oft-quoted line, "I always say pray for the dead and fight like hell for the living."

UMass student Pilar Pittas plays Marjorie Melville, a 1960's anti-war activist who was jailed for pouring napalm on draft files. Melville's [illegible] offer insight into the frustration that forced law-abiding citizens to risk their own futures by taking desperate steps in protest.

Present day Northampton activist Frances Crowe is included in this sweeping production, along with American Indian Activist Starhawk, civil rights workers Fannie Lou Hammer and Rosa Parks and early twentieth century birth control advocate Margaret Sanger.

Without being dogmatic the play climaxes with a discussion of the nuclear arms race. It is called a "a monument to the savagery within man." The audience is inspired to confront "the possible end to life on this planet" and is urged to take a stand as did the women in the play.

ARTS

All's Well, but funny

By LORENA NOZZOLILLO
Collegian Correspondent

Even though it doesn't have the sparkle and magic of A Midsummer Night's Dream, or the bawdiness of The Taming of the Shrew, Shakespeare's All's Well that Ends Well is still a charming play, as proved by the Department of Theatre's recent production. The play may not have the same frenetic energy running through it, as with Shakespeare's other comedies, but there are still the clever couplets, the brash innuendoes and playful deceptions.

The play centers around a physician's daughter named Helena (Dana L. Williams) whose father has just passed away. Helena then comes into the care of the Countess of Rossillion (Jennifer Daniels). Complications arise when Helena confesses that she is in love with the Countess' son, Bertram (David Mendes).

In a ploy to get Bertram as a husband, Helena uses the skills her father taught her to save the King of France from his death bed. In return, the King promises her Bertram for her husband. Bertram, however, is more interested in fighting in the war against Italy than in marrying "a poor physician's daughter."

Therefore, he runs away to Italy with his mentor, Parolles--an extrememly offensive and unpopular member of the king's court. Helena, still determined to win over Bertram, follows him to Italy. Through an elaborate plot, and by enlisting the aid of a Florentine woman and her daughter, she is able to trick Bertram into being a loyal husband.

Dana L. Williams is engaging as the sweet yet clever Helena, and David Mendes is the perfect spoiled brat as Bertram. However, the two most spirited comic performances come from Bob Mahken as Lavatch, the Countess' clown, and Jonathan Curelop, as the loathsome Parolles.

Mahken uses his acrobatic skills to his full potential, bouncing from one end of the stage to the other, leaping over anything in his way. His deadpan style of delivering Shakespeare's comical lines is one of the highlights of the play.

Curelop is equally as funny as the arrogant Parolles. Curelop conveys a type of swaggering self-assurance that succeeds in being annoying as it is humorous.

Emo Philips gets weird at S.U.B.

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS
Collegian Staff

While watching Emo Philips contort and clumsily move on stage, it is hard to tell if he is from another planet, an escapee from a psychiatric ward, or if he just hit his head against the wall too many times. One thing is certain: he is funny, in a sick and brilliant way.

Emo brought his bizarre, but intelligent humor to the Student Union Ballroom for two shows Thursday night, sponsored by the Soutwest Area Government, where the audience was treated to a whacked-out barrage of incidents from Emo's life. With his gangly arms and long fingers brushing through his mop-head hair "which he said he cuts himself," Emo speaks in a wheezy, child-like voice as if he has been in a straitjacket for the last 10 of his 29 years.

"My brother says 'hello'... hooray for speech therapy," Philips said, in the first of many cracks about his personal life. "I had an asthmatic attack on the way over here. Three asthmatics jumped me. I know, I know, I should have heard them hiding."

"I'm a great lover, I bet," he says. On one date, he said he "met a woman and asked her to come back to my place. 'Do you have cable?' she asked. I said: 'No, but I'm sure the ropes will be strong enough.'"

Between relating his romantic escapades, Emo told of his recent trip to San Francisco. "I spent the day in a park ripping out nosehairs. Boy, those sleeping winos just hate that."

Emo delivered his maniacal one-liner wit while fumbling around trying to gain a firm grip of the microphone, constantly looking like he would fall off the stage. It is this very awkward, google-eyed action which has gained him four appearances on Late Night With David Letterman, and a hit comedy record, as well as a guest appearance on Miami Vice.

Emo hails from Downers Grove, Ill., and many of his anecdotes tell of his adolescent years, particularly in school. In a confrontation with his elementary school principal:

"How would you like to repeat the fifth grade?" the principal asks.

"I don't know if I could do it exactly," Emo retorts.

"I could expel you!" the principal yells.

"Yes I would have to catch and eat me first, you were do," Emo calmly reacts.

Emo's humor is quick and sometimes complex, and much of the almost two-thirds full audience would occasionally lose one joke as the next would dart out amidst his writhing, gawky motions. Emo's jokes are not narrow and limited, but rather sophisticated and intelligent, and an audience has to be able to match this level which he sets. It is a demented level, but one which is well worth the journey.

Dana Gould, a UMass alumnus, opened for Emo, and was received fairly well even though many of his jokes slid by the crowd. The room's size is partly to blame, as his delivery made it sound as if he was working an auction instead of trying to make the audience laugh.

Registration begins April 22.

RE-VIEWING MACBETH

Ninety months. The first Scotsman sits on the throne of England. He is a foreigner, a poor administrator, a ruthless prosecutor, but Catholic murdered on the block for treason. Now the Catholics plan to blow up Parliament, the Puritans plot a rebellion, witchcraft spreads. Shakespeare's new play is on Scotland, on James's ancestors, on devils, murder, regicide, and treason. More than a work of drama and poetry, it is a daring political act, and you decide to see it.

BLACK AFFAIRS

Conference set for Saturday

BY CHRISTOPHER WILLIAMS
Collegian Correspondent

On Saturday, the Office of Third World Affairs will hold its third annual Third World Student Leadership Conference in the Campus Center Auditorum. Under the theme, "Networking in the Five College Community," workshops will explore the issues surrounding black and Third World students at predominantly white universities.

The highlight of the conference will be the keynote address on "The 19th-Century Origins of Black Nationalism" by John Henrik Clarke, professor emeritus of African history at New York's Hunter College.

Clarke, former chairman of Hunter College's Black and Puerto Rican studies departments, has been teaching at Hunter for more than 17 years. He has travelled extensively throughout Africa, Europe, the Caribbean and Western Asia. Recently, he gave a series of lectures in London with Yosef ben-Jochannon, the famous Egyptologist.

Clarke's achievements include serving as the Carter G. Woodson distinguished visiting professor of African history at the African Studies and Research Center, Cornell University; recipient of the Carter G. Woodson Award and Distinguished Service Award from the Black Studies Union of William Patterson College; and several honorary degrees.

He has also written about 50 short stories. One of the most famous is "The Boy Who Painted Christ Black," which has been translated into more than a dozen languages. He has also written or edited more than 20 books on African and African-American history, including The Lives of Great African Chiefs, History and Culture of Africa, Malcolm X: The Man and his Time, Harlem U.S.A. and Marcus Garvey and the Vision of Africa.

He has served on the staff of several publications, including: Harlem Quarterly, Associated Negro Press, Negro History Bulletin, The Pittsburg Courier, Ghana Evening News, Black Books Bulletin, Freedomways, and The Black Scholar.

As a scholar, Clark strives to teach from an Afro-centric point of view. He believes African professors, teachers and students should place Africa in the center of world history, science, medicine, philosophy, art and religion and be academically sound enough to defend their point.

Police clash with Marcos supporters

MANILA, Philippines (AP) - Police clashed yesterday with supporters of a pro-Marcos politician, and at least 15 people were reported injured. Both sides accused the other of using firearms.

The fracas took place in the Manila suburb of San Juan, where Joseph Estrada, the mayor under ousted President Ferdinand E. Marcos, relinquished his post on Friday to Reynaldo San Pascual, the appointee of President Corazon Aquino.

Estrada, a popular Tagalog-language movie actor, gave up the San Juan mayor's post after holding out in the city hall for three weeks, but his supporters refused to yield control of the building. The official Philippine News Agency reported 22 policemen battled 20 rock-throwing Estrada supporters outside the building today.

Police and hospitals said at least 15 people were injured, and both sides in the melee charged the other with using guns. Police also said the demonstrators threw stones at officers.

The appointed mayor, Pascual, has been holding office in a fire station.

Dr. Joseph E. Lowery, President of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference will speak on April 21, at 8 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorum.

Minutemen second basemen Rob Holiday awaits a throw during yesterday's doubleheader.

Minutewomen are still sporting a 0.46 earned-run average with 14 shutouts. In comparison, the UMass staff tossed 15 total shutouts last season. Freshman reliever Chris Wanner is the only new addition to last year's staff.

Rever took the losses to Temple and Rutgers, lowering her season record to 8-4, but is still one of the most dominating pitchers in New England with a 0.66 ERA. Wanner and senior Cathy Reed are sporting 0.84 and 0.58 ERAs respectively, giving up only eight hits between them.

The ace of the staff continues to be Stockley. The senior left-hander from Pittsfield is enjoying her best season as a Minutewoman with an 11-1 record and a 0.18 ERA. Stockley ran her winning streak to six straight, all of them shutouts. In that six-game span, she has given up 13 hits, including a one-hitter against Rutgers and a perfect game against the University of Hartford last week.

With the staff pitching the way it is, and a sound defense behind it, it's usually safe to assume that whatever lead the Minutewomen produce in a game will hold. Temple did come back against UMass on Sunday for a 3-2 win, but such victories, come back or otherwise, are unlikely with the way the UMass staff has been pitching

Pop Flies: Some UMass fans questioned Sortino's decision to throw Stockley in relief in the 3-2 loss to Temple with Reed and Wanner available for relief duties. Stockley had just thrown a complete-game shutout and it was her wild pitch in the sixth inning that enabled the winning run to score for the Owls. Because Rever had thrown a 10-inning complete game the day before, many thought that Reed would be tabbed for the second game start against Temple. Reed hasn't pitched since her 5-1 win over the University of Wisconsin-Green Bay on the Florida swing.

Gorillas 8th in poll; awaiting St. John's

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

Here come the Gorillas. . .

The University of Massachusetts lacrosse team vaulted to eighth in the national poll following victories over Brown and Boston College this past week.

The Gorillas, with a 13-8 victory at Brown and a savage 17-2 beating of BC, jumped past C.W. Post, Duke and Harvard. With 73 points, UMass (5-1) is 23 points behind sixth-place North Carolina (6-2), but 20 points ahead of ninth-place Post (6-2).

The poll also proves the high regard UMass is being in by the coaches that vote in the poll as Brown, despite losing to UMass and beating a much weaker Princeton team, went from being unranked to 14th in the nation.

St. John's University provides the competition for the Gorillas at 3 p.m. tomorrow at Boyden Field as UMass opens up a four-game homestand. Yale, Harvard and Army will also play UMass at Boyden in the next two weeks.

Nationally, there remain no undefeated teams as the Naval Academy suffered its first defeat. Duke, a surprise top 10 team earlier this season, dropped a decision to Virginia and fell to 11th at 10-3. Syracuse University captured all 10 first place votes and stayed in first for the second straight week.

The poll (with record and votes for each team): 1. Syracuse (8-1, 150), 2. Johns Hopkins (6-1, 136), 3. Maryland (7-1, 129), 4. Navy (8-1, 113), 5. Rutgers (7-1, 109), 6. Virginia (7-2, 107), 7. North Carolina (6-2, 96), 8. UMass (5-1, 73), 9. C.W. Post (6-2, 53), 10. Adelphi (5-2, 30), 11. Duke (10-3, 27), 12. Towson State (6-3, 27), 13. Harvard (4-2, 26), 14. Army (3-4, 22), 14. Brown (5-4, 22).

UMass will also play both top-ranked Syracuse and fifth-ranked Rutgers this season. In all, UMass has played or will have played five of the top 15 teams in the nation this season.

Gorilla Grumblings: This season, UMass is scoring 13.3 goals-per-game (gpp) while allowing 6.8. Last year, the Gorilla offense scored just under 13 gpp, but the defense allowed 11.6, proving how important a solid defense is to lacrosse.

One of the keys to that improved defense has been the play of freshman goalie Sal LoCascio. In six games, LoCascio has allowed only 5.8 gpp and has a save percentage of .720, turning away 90 shots. . .Garber played his entire roster against BC. . .several UMass fans have talked about renting a bus to attend the Syracuse game on May 9. . .Lax t-shirts will be available at the game on Wednesday.

Minutemen sweep UNH

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

Remember these guys? The University of Massachusetts baseball team? Admit it, you had written them off.

After all, a 1-14 start didn't inspire much confidence and after UMass lost its first five league games, it seemed time to turn your sports attention somewhere else.

Think again.

The Minutemen won their third straight yesterday, sweeping a good University of New Hampshire team, 8-6 and 8-3 at Lorden Field.

UMass is now 7-15 on the season and are winners of six-of-its-last-seven games. The Minutemen are also 6-7 since their disasterous 1-8 Florida trip and are beginning to hit the ball like they were supposed to when the season started.

The Minutemen host Boston University for a single game at 3 p.m. on Wednesday.

Raising their team batting average ten points to .295, UMass ripped four UNH pitchers for 22 hits, including three homers.

"We're getting there, we're starting to play some good baseball," said UMass manager Dick Bergquist, who had watched his team suffer the worst start in his 20 years at the helm. "The hitting has been tremendous, and defensively we're improving. I can't say the season has turned around, but there's some hope now."

In the first game, the Wildcats went down in order in the top of the first inning before UMass third baseman Darrin O'Connor took Kevin Mello's first pitch over the fence in left field for a quick 1-0 lead.

Matt Sheran then ripped the next pitch into right for a single before senior designated Jeff Cimini hitter drew a walk. Junior co-captain Sean Flint then arched a sacrifice fly into left that scored Sheran.

Mello settled down, striking out Steve Allen and getting Jay Zerner to ground out, but the tempo had been set.

UNH touched UMass starter Bob Kostro for a run in the second, another in the third and two in the fourth. After a walk and a triple in the sixth, Bergquist sent for senior fire-baller jeff Jensen to close, and he worked two strong innings to finish up.

Kostro (2-2) picked up the win allowing five runs (three earned), four hits, five walks and one strike out, Jensen notched his first save with two innings of one-hit ball and a strike out.

UMass scored three in the second inning, as freshman shortstop Gary DiSarcina homered to lead-off and Cimini doubled in two despite a gimpy knee. Another came across in the third on a Holiday RBI single. Holiday delivered again in the fifth as his single scored Steve Allen. The Minutemen closed up with one in the sixth on a Mike Owens single.

In the second game, the score was tied at three through four-and-half innings before UMass exploded for five fifth-inning runs, three coming on a Zerner dinger to left. Mike Chambers then doubled in two.

Chris Slattery started for UMass, but left after two with elbow soreness. Senior Jon Martin came in and was roughed up (three innings, two runs and four hits, all hard), but held on to go to 2-4 with the win. Freshman Ken Greer worked the last inning for UMass, retiring the Wildcats in order.

In the twinbill, Zerner was four-for-eight with three RBI, Holiday was four-for four with two RBI, O'Connor had three hits while Cimini, Steve Kern and Chambers had two each.

"I'm a little concerned about Slattery's arm problem, but overall, I'm as pleased as I've been all season," said Bergquist. "If we keep on playing like we are now, we'll make some noise in New England"

Minuteman Mutterings: Holiday has now reached base 13 straight times and his hitting .366. . .Zerner is up to .386 while Chambers, since coming up from the junior varsity, is at .454. O'Connor climbed to .298.

UMass committed only four errors in the doubleheader. . .UNH fell to 8-8 on the season.

Minutemen sign Pa. guard

The University of Massachusetts women's basketball team has signed its second recruit, a 5-8 shooting guard from Pennsylvania.

Sue Serafini, an all-state selection fror Valley View High School in Archibald, PA, joins 5-10 foward Michelle Pytko (who was inked during the early signing period) as the two recuits the Minutewomen coaching staff has landed so far.

Serafini scored over 2,100 career points and had 1,200 rebounds for coach Lou Camoni. She averaged 23.8 points her senior season, leading her team to the state finals. Valley View, with Serafini leading the way, went 26-6 this past season."

"Sue's a player, she's a fine recruit for our program," said UMass head coach Barbara Stevens. "I expect good things from her, she's a talented player."

Announcements concerning at least two more recuits coming into the UMass program are expected later this week.

Softball visits Springfield for two

By ROGER CHAPMAN
Collegian Staff

After splitting two doubleheaders over the weekend to Temple University and Rutgers University, the 20th-ranked University of Massachusetts softball team will try to regain its winning ways with a 2 p.m. doubleheader at Springfield College today.

The Minutewomen, 21-5 on the season, split a twinbill with the Indians last season at Totman Field, with Lynn Stockley winning game one, 3-2. Springfield downed UMass in the nightcap, 1-0, with sophomore pitcher Lisa Rever going the distance.

"They are a very scrappy, up-and-down type of team," UMass head coach Elaine Sortino said. "They gave us a hard time last year and I expect the same from them this season."

The Minutewomen will need to awaken their slumbering bats to get back on the winning trail. UMass has not been hitting consistently as of late, although at times the Minutewomen have come through with big spurts to provide the big inning.

"I think it could be a case of being too aggressive at the plate," Sortino said. "We're not hitting the pitches we want and we're swinging way ahead of pitches. It's just a matter of getting back into our hitting groove."

The team batting average dipped significantly over the weekend, dropping from a .314 mark to a .301 clip in four games.

The Minutewomen pounded out nine hits in the 3-1 loss to Rutgers on Saturday, but most of those came with two outs in the inning. The Minutewomen have also left their share of runners on base this season, often killing potentially big innings. UM has left 168 runners stranded so far this season.

But despite the recent offensive woes, the pitching remains the most consistent cog in the UMass softball machine. Even with the two weeekend losses, the

Airstrike reaction: rally, much debate

Arguments dominate afternoon

By BOB KIEVRA
Collegian Staff

Heated discusssions were the norm outside the Whitmore Administration building yesterday afternoon as supporters and opponents of the US airstrikes against Libya faced off during a rally called to protest the attacks.

Participants chanted slogans, brandished posters, and argued the merits of President Reagan's decision to retaliate militarily against Libyan leader Moammar Khadafy, whom the US accuses of masterminding acts of terrorism.

Stephen Alfred, an undergraduate student senator and a member of the Third World Caucus, said the US should first concentrate on terrorism at home, "terrorist organizations in this country like the Ku Klux Klan and various neo-Nazi organizations.

"I live here and there are people who want to draft me and send me over to Libya to kill people who look just like me," Alfred said.

Jonathan Kaufman, business manager of the right-wing campus newspaper The Minuteman, called Alfred a "liar" who was misinformed.

"I don't want to sound like a fleeting rightist, but these people [protesting the airstrikes] have no point of view," Kaufman said. "Don't they realize that since 1969, Khadafy has been exporting terrorism?

"If these people want to protest, that's their right, but in this case they have no argument," he said. "They can't really be called Americans."

Journalism professor Norman Sims, who debated supporters of Reagan's decision for more than an hour during and after the rally, said he believes the US is embarking on a dangerous path.

"I think we're going down an alley in which we won't be able to turn back," he told one student. "Military action leaves the US with fewer possibilities for the future. When the next terrrorist attack occurs, will we go in shooting?"

Sims questioned whether Reagan's actions were compatible with American tradition. "American freedom doesn't have to stop at the US borders," he said. "We can't be the home of the free within our own country and the world oppressor abroad."

In an interview later yesterday, UMass political science professor Anwar Syed noted the timing of the intervention. "I'm ... not privy to the workings of Reagan's inner circle, but it seems funny that the airstrikes came two days before a vote in Congress on President Reagan's aid package to the contras in Nicaragua," he said.

Syed said he doubts recent actions of the Reagan administration will succeed in curbing world terrorism.

"Even if we punish Libya more often and more severely and secure the overthrow of Col. Khadafy, this will not noticeably end terrorism," he said. "Syrian terrorists, fanatics in Iran and the Red Brigade in Italy all practice terrorism. Khadafy's departure will not alter the actions of these groups."

300 protest president's attack order

By PATRICK JOHNSON
Collegian Staff

About 300 students staged a rally yesterday on the lawn beside the Whitmore Administration Building to protest Monday's US airstrikes against Libya.

They were met by about 50 counter-protesters who voiced approval for the attack on the North African nation. Shouting matches ensued, and people on both sides lingered to argue with each other long after the rally broke up.

Gerald T. O'Neil, director of public safety, estimated there were 250 people involved. Members of the Radical Student Union, which organized the protest, said there were between 300 and 400.

The protest stemmed from President Reagan's ordering of air attacks Monday on Libyan military and residential areas in response to what he called Libya's role in terrorism against the US. The rally was organized by RSU member Sarah Bush, who arranged for speakers and printed flyers asking students and faculty to boycott classes for the rally, according to Mitch Gaslin, also a member of the group.

Starting at 1 p.m., small groups of protesters marched toward Whitmore from the Student Union Building chanting, "One, two, three, four, we don't want your bloody war." Some students gathered along the route responded with shouts of "USA, USA."

"You got it whether you want it or not, you communist bastards," said Thomas Lynch, a third-year student who was among the supporters of the airstrikes. "They ought to deport them [the protesters] if they don't like America."

Jill Mudge, a junior, added, "These people are ready to protest anything. When Ronald Reagan was elected, he promised to defend this country. I am glad he decided to attack Libya; this should end terrorism."

Chasidic Jews celebrate Sabbath

By MICHAEL ALTER
Collegian Correspondent

The man with the untrimmed black beard, wearing the black coat and hat, pours sweet purple wine made in Israel into a silver cup, until the liquid overflows. He lifts the symbolic kiddush cup and says a Hebrew prayer. The congregators respond "Amen," he drinks about half, and then divides the remainder among the participants, who are standing in silence around a set table.

In this way the Jewish sabbath, from sunset Friday to sunset Saturday, is sanctified each week in the traditional Chasidic orthodox manner, at the Chabad house, located near the north-east corner of Southwest Residential Area.

Rabbi Zalman Eagle, who is in charge of the house said, "Chasidism is an approach to Judaism which emphasizes a thorough commitment to traditional law."

At this particular sabbath, the majority of the congregation are from Amherst College and the University of Massachusetts. They came to honor their Lord and they think Chabad house services are the best way to do it.

"Chabad stands for three Hebrew words which mean wisdom, understanding, and knowledge," Eagle said.

The Sabbath is considered holy, and travel and work are prohibited. To obey these commandments, Chasidics

New step to discourage hazing

By CRAIG SANDLER
Collegian Staff

A new step has been added to the pre-registration process this semester — student acknowledgment of a new state law which mandates 100 days in jail for persons convicted of participation in hazing activities.

On the back on the green and white computer forms students fill out to sign up for courses, students will now be asked to sign and date a statement which reads: "I hereby acknowledge that I have received a copy of Chapt. 536, Sects. 17-19 of the Mass. Gen. Laws regarding hazing."

The new statement refers to a law enacted in February that defines hazing as "any conduct or method of initiation into any student organization ... which willfully or recklessly endangers the physical or mental health of any student or other person."

Principal organizers or participants in such activities are subject to fines of up to $1,000 and jail terms of up to 100 days. The statute also calls for a fine of up to $500 for persons who fail to report such activities.

Charmaine Wijeyesinghe, assistant to the vice chancellor for student affairs, said there would be no penalty for students who do not sign the statement. "It's kind of a voluntary compliance," she said.

"We are asking for students' assistance ... we are aiming for the highest possible compliance we can get voluntarily," Wijeyesinghe said.

Wijeyesinghe said the statement is a response to a section of the law which requires every secondary school, college and university in the state to give a copy of the law to prospective members of student organizations.

Copies of the law will be given out with the forms during the pre-registration period, which begins today.

"On a campus this size, it's almost impossible to know who is joining an organization," said Wijeyesinghe, adding that by giving a copy of the hazing statute to everyone who signs up for courses the University can ensure it is complying with the law.

She described the law as not perfect, but designed "so students think more about how they treat each other."

Dan Smith, vice chairman for the British Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament, is scheduled to speak on "Cold Wars: Old and New" at 4 p.m. today in the main lounge of Grayson House at the University of Massachusetts. The lecture is sponsored by the Social Thought and Political Economy department.

A panel discussion about the job security, workers' rights and plant closings will be held today at 7:30 p.m. in 903 Campus Center. Panelists will be Bob Forrant, a representative of the International Union of Electrical Workers, Springfield; Nancy Folbre, an economics professor at UMass; and Judy Atkins, a former employee at Millers Falls Tool Co. and president of a local union.

US: bombing successful; Soviets denounce attack

WASHINGTON (AP) - The White House yesterday proclaimed US air raids on Libya a success that "struck a blow against terrorism," but the attacks appear to have jeopardized prospects for a US-Soviet summit later this year.

Libya, meanwhile, apparently retaliated by firing at a US Coast Guard installation on a tiny Mediterranean island 175 miles off the Libyan coast.

President Reagan said "the United States won but a single engagement in the long battle against terrorism" and pledged to continue with more strikes if necessary.

"We would prefer not to have to repeat the events of last night," he told a group of business executives. But he said that would be up to Libyan leader Moammar Khadafy, whom he labeled an arch-terrorist.

"What is required is for Libya to end its pursuit of terror for political goals," Reagan said. "The choice is theirs."

An air and sea search was under way for an Air Force F-111 fighter-bomber and its two-man crew missing after the Monday night attack. The Pentagon identified the missing airmen as Capt. Fernando L. Ribas-Dominicci, 33, of Puerto Rico, the pilot; and Capt. Paul F. Lorence, 31, of San Francisco, the weapons system officer.

The Soviet Union, responding to the bombing raids, called off a planned meeting next month between Secretary of State George P. Shultz and Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze, casting doubt on plans for a second summit this year between the leaders of the two countries.

Democrats and an IRS union suggest programs for tax cheats

WASHINGTON (AP) - As millions of Americans rushed to file their tax returns before the midnight deadline yesterday, the Democratic National Committee and the union representing Internal Revenue Service employees called for a crack-down on tax cheats.

Robert Tobias, president of the National Treasury Employees Union, called for a one-time amnesty that would excuse tax cheats from paying civil and criminal penalties in exchange for voluntarily paying back taxes plus interest.

The one-time amnesty would be coupled with stiffer cheating penalties and a stepped up effort to catch people who underreport their income or fail to file returns.

Meanwhile, Paul G. Kirk Jr., DNC Chairman, urged adoption of a better collection effort along the lines of the "Fair Share Program" devised by North Dakota Tax Commissioner Kent Conrad.

The IRS estimates 104 million couples and individuals will file returns this year. Of those, perhaps 10 million waited until the final day and another 4.4 million took advantage of automatic four-month extensions.

At a news conference, Tobias said tax cheats will cost the treasury $100 billion this year and would cost $159 billion by 1990. Voluntary compliance has fallen from 90 percent in the 1960s to 81.6 percent this year, he said.

"Everytime we add people to the Internal Revenue Service, it's an incredible yield in terms of revenue," Tobias said. "It staggers me this administration hasn't been able to see that."

He said $130 million spent to add 4,700 employees to the administration's budget request would produce $570 million in additional income.

Charity fundraisers are a painful success

By JEANETTE DeFORGE
Collegian Staff

About 600 students suffered sore, blistered feet and aching muscles last weekend at the University of Massachusetts after participating in three separate charity fundraising events.

A Run For Ritter Race, sponsored by the Newman Center, was held Saturday morning to raise money for the Rev. Bruce Ritter's Covenant House in New York City, which houses runaways and abused children.

"We don't know how much money we raised yet, because the sponsor sheets have not been turned in," said Mildred Marengo of the Newman Center. She said about 420 people ran in the 10-kilometer race, raising at least $2,000 in registration fees.

A dance marathon sponsored by the Student Government Association, held from midnight Saturday to noon Sunday in the Curry Hicks Cage, raised about $2,000 for the Muscular Dystrophy Association.

"About 75 people attended and everybody had a great time," said Greg Rothman, co-coordinator of the marathon.

A dance marathon sponsored by Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity, held Saturday from noon to midnight at Changes dance club, raised about $8,000 for the Multiple Sclerosis Society.

"We've been doing this for the past seven years and have raised over $70,000," said Marc Laxer, a marathon organizer.

Twenty couples danced in the marathon, Laxer said.

Each organization said it had hoped to raise more money, but, "It's the thought that counts. Hopefully the money we raised will find the cure," Rothman said.

Dana Fokos, a UMass student, won a trip to Bermuda by raising the most money in the MS dance marathon.

Philip Hatchovel was the winner in the muscular dystrophy marathon. He raised $170 for the association.

Greg Wood and Maureen O'Connor won first place in the 18-to-24 age category in the Run for Ritter.

Local merchants donated money and prizes.

Amherst youth totals his motor scooter

A 16-year-old Amherst boy suffered cuts and brusies and was cited for failure to use care in stopping when he "totaled" his 1984 Honda motor scooter after running into the rear of a stopped car driven by a 27-year-old Chicoppe man, Amherst police said.

The car received about $800 in damages. The youth was taken to the Amherst Medical Center where he was treated and released, police said.

In other police reports:

- A pocket book containing $165 was reported stolen from a backpack at 4 p.m. Monday from room 51 in Bartlett Hall, University of Massachusetts police said.
- More than $150 worth of items, including a diamond ring, were reported stolen at 9:10 p.m. Monday from an unlocked room on the second floor of Brett House, police said.
- A wallet containing $100 was reported stolen at 11 p.m. Monday from a room on the 17th floor of the John F. Kennedy Tower, police said.

Lawn care program will help homeowners

By JEROME STERN
Collegian Correspondent

Four University of Massachusetts faculty members will help more than 50 Pioneer Valley homeowners care for their lawns this summer, in an attempt to reduce unnecessary pesticide use.

Plant and soil science professors Richard Cooper and Prasanta Bhowmik from the Amherst campus, along with Patricia Wittum and Robert Wick from the Suburban Experiment Station in Waltham, will work on a pest management project to inform homeowners how to maintain better lawns with fewer chemicals.

The project "uses chemical and non-chemical techniques to minimize pest problems and provide better crops," Cooper said.

"While pesticides commonly used for lawn care are safe and effective, with increased awareness for the environment, it's still a good idea to reduce pesticide use," he said.

A University turf management specialist will evaluate each lawn in early spring, and the program will employ a scout, senior plant and soil science major Bill Bourke, to visit the lawns every three weeks and assess progress.

"We will only make recommendations," Bhowmik said. "It's up to the homeowners to use them."

At the end of the summer, the professors will gather information on the major lawn problems and the extent of pesticide use in the region and publish their findings.

The project has been successful at the University of Wisconsin and has helped grow apples and potatoes with fewer chemicals in Massachusetts, Bhowmik said.

The project is funded by the state this year, but the professors said they hope to be self-sufficient in the future. A $50 fee is charged to each homeowner to pay for Bourke's services.

"The public is very concerned with pesticide use," Bhowmik said. "We would all like to live in a cleaner, safer environment."

★ Jewish Sabbath

who live too far from the sanctuary to walk, sleep over in one of the many bedrooms of the converted English tutor house.

Everything a congregator sees during the Sabbath has meaning, such as the overflowing wine, the untrimmed beard, and the black coat and hat worn by the rabbi. They are among the visible signs and customs which are meant to spiritually distinguish the Chasidic Jews from people of other religions.

The orthodox services are long and multi-faceted. The start is a lengthy prayer session which, if it is allowed because of strict customs, includes a Torah reading service. The Torah consists of the first five books of the Old Testament, preserved in their original form.

A long traditional meal follows the service and includes many customary prayers and foods.

The service is more crowded than usual because of the upcoming holiday of Passover, a holy feast to the Jewish people. Passover comes in the middle of the week this year and students at the service are thinking about home, and the Seders with their loved ones they will miss.

To someone unfamiliar with the Chasidics,the equivalent of a Passover Seder seems to be happening every week, but a Seder which is a ceremony surrounding a meal is more complicated and reminds the Jewish people of their freedom from slavery. Passover starts next Wednesday at sunset.

Referendum results will be published tomorrow

Unsubstantiated editorializing

We, "the companions of Pam Tillis," are writing in response to Mary Cresses' column titled "Discovering the 'meaning' of art." We agree with her in one respect, that she is unqualified to critique Tillis' work on Robert Murray's Quinnipiac "the thing" sculpture at the entrance to Haigis Mall, because she had no formal training in the study of art or art history. It is every other aspect of her column with which we disagree.

For example, when Cresse stated that she "object(s) to the presumptuous manner in which Tillis chose to convey her message," she failed to mention that Tillis' work was a class project which had departmental and University permission. Cresse was offended because she felt the work to be "an act of defacement." Webster's New Collegiate Dictionary states; defacement — to destroy or mar the face of or appearance of. By comparing Tillis' work with malicious defacement (i.e. black spray paint on the Tower Library), Cresse falters. Tillis' work was not an act of defacement but an act to counter what she feels to be a general misunderstanding and misuse of art.

Tillis' objective in her "Art: Handle with Care:" project was humor. She felt that people misuse and misunderstand Quinnipiac by using it as a meeting place, a rain shelter, wind block, or a billboard for flyers, stickers and graffiti. The pointing out of the obvious, that the sculpture is, in fact, art, Tillis felt would be funny.

During our encounter on the night of April 2, Cresse appeared to agree with Tillis' objective, which she indicated by saying "I think it is a good idea, but you should be more egalitarian (towards onlookers)." Thus, the column was hypocritical on her part, and was a personal attack on Tillis as a result of some teasing and wise comments — the key words are teasing and wise — on our part. For her to have actually believed that the police had arrested us and were returning with the paddywagon shows a deficiency of humor. Perhaps that is why she misunderstood the "meaning" of Tillis' art project.

Had Cresse bothered to investigate the circumstances under which the project was undertaken, she could have saved her time and effort, by not writing an uninformed, and unsubstantiated editorial.

Editorial writers are people who come down from the hills after a battle to shoot the wounded
—Murray Kempton, columnist.

I find myself thinking a lot about this quote as I gleefully go about the task of kicking those who fell during our latest trashing of poor old Libya. This is one of the occasions on which I take particular pleasure in this medium. Unlike an objective journalist, I am not required to portray things in just black and white and can therefore feel free to justify, condemn, ridicule or otherwise have fun with current events.

A break with tradition is on the menu today. Even we "running dog liberals" can occasionally see some good in the antics of our least favorite Chief Executive. Most of us have a token conservative stance or two and one of my mine happens to be on international terrorism.

I think these maniacs who run around killing and maiming innocent people to further their political demonology received a rather clear message from the United States on Monday. Though it is unfortunate that Ronald Reagan's legend will be further amplified as a result, I cannot argue with the method of delivery. I regret sounding like a classic hawk but I do have to agree, at least in the case of Khadafy and Co., that "force is the only thing these people understand."

We have long known that Libya is a major terrorist haven. Its deranged leader turned it into one because he wanted to have some impact over affairs outside his own horror show. For years, he could get away with it because of moral support from the Soviet Union and a policy of appeasement by our often spineless European allies. This is no longer the case. I will resist the temptation to fall into a patriotic stupor over our little act of pest control, but I can't resist saying it was long overdue.

Terrorism is an unconventional form of warfare and we have long been at a loss as to how to effectively combat it. The individuals involved are difficult to run down for a number of reasons. Some circulate in a shadowy international underworld that is virtually impossible to penetrate. Others move on the surface but cannot be apprehended because a number of nations are willing to give them diplomatic credentials. This makes them immune from traditional forms of law enforcement.

So, we have to go to the source. Terrorists do not respect borders and neither can we if we plan to put a dent in their ranks. Our airstrikes on Libya have hopefully put other nations who provide hidey-holes for these maggots on notice that it will not be tolerated. Their complicity in acts of wanton slaughter will no longer pass unpunished. Moammar is going down for the count this time and I bet that some of his playmates like Syria's Assad are doing some serious re-thinking right about now.

Violating the sovereignty of another nation is an inexcusable act unless the provocation is severe enough. In this instance, it is not only forgivable but rather laudable. The saddest part of the whole affair is that other Western democracies, with the exception of Great Britain, refuse to fully support our actions.

Perhaps they hope to spare their nations from further attacks by the North African madman. Perhaps they want to keep making money off his rule. It is a shame we were forced to act unilaterally but it was no fault of our own.

No more Kings or Dukes

Stephen Erickson

With this week's State Republican Convention in Worcester, the usually boring Massachusetts Republican Party came alive with a little excitement. State Representative Royall Switzler (R-Wellesley) was drafted from the convention floor after a day of intense lobbying by his legislative colleagues. Conservative activist Gregg Hyatt had been the expected nominee, but recent allegations made by a former employer regarding incompetence and bizzare behavior had tainted his campaign. The convention therefore elected to endorse the twelve-year veteran of the Massachusetts Legislature, Roy Switzler, who like no other candidate in recent memory, has the ability to inject the Massachusetts Republican Party with energy and vigor. His well known skill as an orator and his unwillingness to pull punches in debate no doubt led State Senator Locke to say, "Perhaps more than any other candidate, he will strike terror into the hearts of the Democrats."

Nevertheless, Hyatt vowed to stay in the race, charging that Switzer's candidacy was "the product of a back room deal." Whereas the Switzler candidacy did become a reality behind the scenes, Hyatt appears to have a greater and opposite problem in that he is accused of being a much too overly exposed candidate. It seems that a secretary at the firm Hyatt was recently fired from claims she walked in on Hyatt to find him in the nude on a couple of occasions. The firm also claims Hyatt did absolutely no work during his tenure there. Whether these accusations are true or not, the picture of the Republican nominee standing in his birthday suit waiting for his secretary to happen in is not conducive to a successful gubinatorial candidacy. In any case, Switzler is the better candidate, and for the sake of party unity, Hyatt should drop out of the race.

For over a decade, Switzler has been one of the most outspoken as well as controversial legislators on Beacon Hill. His relentless battle against patronage and other government waste, which includes attacks on pet projects, excesses, and pay increases proposed by other legislators, make him unpopular with many of his colleagues who don't appreciate Switzler's rocking of the boat. On the other hand, he is highly respected as principled and hard working, and has earned a reputation as a good government watchdog. Little gets by Switzler when it comes to the intricacies of legislation and political scheming, as he has always made it his business to look deep into the workings (or lack thereof, as he might say) of Massachusetts state government. Switzler's many fights on behalf of the tax payer are legendary, including his leadership in the passing of proposition 2 1/2 and his struggle against the Dukakis Surtax.

The Democratic Party has been completely dominant in Massachusetts politics for years now, and Dukakis' position appears particularly strong at this time. The state's economy is among the healthiest in the nation, and Dukakis is quick to take credit of everything from the low unemployment rate to a sunny day. In reality, Dukakis has about as much to do with the healthy economy as he does with the price of butter in Mozambique. Massachusetts is in good shape because of the national economic prosperity brought about under the policies of the Reagan administration, the pro-business policies of former Governor King, and the large amount of high tech firms within the state that benefit from military contracts. The low unemployment rate existed before Dukakis took office.

Dukakis sits on massive state revenues to the tune of $509 million brought in through a surtax he had described in his first administraiton as "temporary." The Governor has raised the state budget by $4.5 billion since the beginning of his second term, although he gave back a miniscule amount of the increasing revenues so he could declare himself a tax cutter. Dukakis has become an outstanding politician, and to have a chance of beating him, the Republican candidate must be forceful, articulate and knowledgable -- three words that accurately describe Roy Switzler.

Switzler certainly has his work cut out for him. In many ways, however, he is an ideal match for Dukakis, a liberal elitist who favors a large paternalistic government and seems to believe the best way to solve any problem is to hire more state employees. Switzler is a conservative populist who would prefer to decentralize government, sending money back to the cities and towns. The Dukakis philosophy has dominated Massachusetts for much too long. We need no more Kings and Dukes. Its time we elected a Royall (Switzler) governor who understands and will act on the interests of the Commonwealth.

Letters

Some basic research was needed

Mary Cresse's statement (April 14) that Pam Tillis' art project was willful defacement was one of the most ignorant statements I have ever seen in the Collegian. I am not calling Cresse "stupid," I am sure that she isn't, but I question how much she really knows about this project.

Does she know that the wrapping of structures to enhance their effect or to make an independent statement is a viable art form (I don't take art history courses either, but I do read more than just front page articles)? Does Cresse also know that Tillis had permission from the University Galleries to wrap the structure, and that it was to be on the structure temporarily? Cresse's reaction to Tillis' project, to spray paint English rules on the library wall, is a different situation. It is permanent defacement and it is illegal. I also encountered Tillis and her friends while they were wrapping the sculpture. At first I thought it was a little silly, but after talking to Tillis I feel that the statement she made was a reasonable one.

I was also told that they were questioned by the police, not arrested. Now Cresse is entitled to her opinion, but I feel that the next time she, or anyone else, is going to criticise a piece of art work, they should do some basic research. On a campus that prides itself on being so "aware" I find this type of ignorance repulsive.

Michael Thelwell, an Afro-American Studies professor who spoke at the rally, said, " If history is any guide, we can expect a wave of retaliation. Blood is so ingrained in the Middle East that every relative of those dead in the raid will seek retaliation against the American people."

Thelwell received applause when he said the US attack against a perceived source of terrorism gave the Nicaraguan government authority to strike back against the US Congress, the CIA, and "the compound of that mad dog located at 1600 Pennsylvania Ave."

Graduate student Dennis Fishman told the crowd Reagan chose to attack Libya "to kill the Vietnam Syndrome, which is what the right calls the opposition to the US sticking its nose in another country's business.

"Reagan is trying to tell us what we learned in Vietnam was wrong, that we need to be harder, stronger, faster. That doesn't make sense in foreign relations any more than it does in sexual relations," Fishman said.

Fishman said those opposed to the action in Libya must organize. "One by one, there is nothing we can do. Together there is nothing we can't do."

The rally ended when Bush led the protesters in chanting, "People united can never be defeated," drowning out the counterchant of "USA." Two hours after the rally ended, people from each side were still in front of Whitmore, arguing their positions.

An all-too funny tragedy

By JOE SHARTRAND
Collegian Staff

Everything is blackened and desolate. The floor is strewn with garbage. A rusty, old mail-box, a blackened doll with no head and a dead tree make up the scenery. The two main characters, Didi and Gogo, are dirty and dressed in rags. All of this would lead us to believe that this is a play about desolation and despair. Unfortunately, it doesn't come out that way.

Samuel Beckett's Waiting for Godot, is called a "tragi-comedy." The Northampton Center for the Arts relies a little too much on the comedy and ignores the tragedy. The two main characters are waiting for Godot; the entire play is about them waiting for this mysterious being and trying to find something to do. Though Beckett uses many comic lines, he does not write jokes, or slapstick. His comedy is meant to, in the end, be more tragic than funny. The actors' interpretation was more of slap-stick and one-liners, than desolation and despair.

For example, in one scene, the two characters actually do a Laurel and Hardy routine, where they mess up on whose hat is whose. When Laurel and Hardy did this back in the thirties, it was funny; to watch two performers on stage do it is not so funny. This routine only slowed down the action of the play and was actually kind of boring.

Another example of boring slap-stick, is in the very first scene in which Gogo (Bill Collins) is trying to remove his boot, because his foot hurts. Collins jumps up and down and rolls on the floor; it's as is if he's trying to pull a laugh from the audience instead of pulling off his boot. Both of the main characters are supposed to be absurd, but with Collins leaping and falling all the time, you expect to hear circus music at any moment.

The other performer, Michael Betmold, (Didi), is a bit more restrained and doesn't roll around the stage attempting to get a laugh. His character is more tragic than Gogo, yet Betmold also does not take his character seriously. He manages to be funny with some of Beckett's lines and to create a sort of tragic persona for his character, but, and this is true of both performers, they fail to make this play sad.

Some of Beckett's dialogues are really funny while at the same time truly tragic. People should go to see this play to hear the wonderful rhythms in the dialogue, which the performers read rather well. But don't go expecting to see a well acted absurdist play.

this point last season.

With an explosive attack averaging over 13 goals-per-game and a stingy defense that allows just under seven goals, the Gorillas have improved markedly over 1985.

Good weather should draw another big crowd (close to 5,000 saw the UNH game) and that plays a big role according to senior co-captain Steve Moreland.

"I don't know if the fans realize what they do," said Moreland, a midfielder. "We get a big lift when we see there's a big crowd at a game. It also intimidates other teams."

With a solid stretch at home, starting today, UMass will be well on its way to securing a playoff spot as well as gaining momentum before key away games at Rutgers and top-ranked Syracuse.

"We need a good start for these games at home," said Garber. "I'm worried about St. John's, but I also know that if we play like we have been, we are capable of winning."

Gorilla Grumblings: Junior attackmen Tom Carmean (21-12-33) and Greg Cannella (12-12-24) lead UMass in scoring. . .senior middie Greg Fisk (11-7-18) and sophomore attackman Kelley Carr (12-4-16) are also in double figures in scoring with junior middie Doug Musco (5-4-9) on the verge of that plateau.

Freshman goalie Sal LoCascio has a save percentage of .720 and has allowed 5.8 goals-per-game. . .junior defenseman Chris Knapp had his serious knee injury repaired on Saturday by team doctor George A. Snook. Knapp was on crutches at practice on Monday. He will not return this season.

Chris Zusi, a freshman midfielder, will not play as his shoulder injury has yet to come around. Sophomore middie Glenn Stephens played at BC and is back to full strength after his injury problem.

Gorillas meet St. John's today

Redmen, at 6-4, are better than originally advertized

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

Last winter, when the University of Massachusetts lacrosse team scheduled St. John's University, the Redmen were supposed to be a break in an already-rough UMass schedule. It hasn't worked out that way.

At 3 p.m. this afternoon at Boyden Field, the eighth-ranked Gorillas play their second home game of the season against a much-improved St. John's team that will be seeking respect with a win against one of the nation's powers.

The Redmen are 6-4 this season with wins against a bunch of have-nots with the important exception of a 13-6 win against Army at West Point.

SUNY-Stony Brook, Holy Cross, Boston College, Vermont and Villanova fell by to the Redmen by an average of eight goals. But when St. John's met a ranked team, it was a different story.

Duke, C.W. Post, Harvard and Rutgers all downed St. John's. The Redmen scored only 3.8 goals-per-game in their four losses, as opposed to well over 12 in their wins.

St. John's probably won't admit they're slowing the ball down against the better teams, but statistics show they become more tentative and have trouble scoring.

"They (St. John's) are a very solid team," said UMass coach Dick Garber. "They are a well-organized team with different speciality units for riding and other things. They also have several good players at each position. I'm not taking them lightly, and I hope the players aren't.

UMass has won three straight, beating New Hampshire (at Boyden) 15-7, Brown 13-8 and Boston College 17-2. The Gorillas open a four-game homestand against the Redmen, four games that will go far in determining how far UMass will go this season nationally. Yale, Harvard and Army will also come to Boyden in the next two weeks.

"It's great being where we are. I'm pleased about the ranking," said Garber. "But our goal is being in the top four-to-six spots. That's what we're shooting for. We have a hell of a team this season, and we wan't to be noticed nationally."

St. John's has one dominant scorer in senior attackman Mike Bolger. With 43 points on 21 goals and 22 assists, Bolger is the man the Redmen look to on offense. Senior midfielder Robert Neilson checks in with 9-14-23 numbers.

The St. John's goalie is big senior (6-3, 200 pounds) Joe Weingart who allows 7.6 goals-per-game with a save percentage of .729. John Kavanaugh has filled in at times, with one start to his credit this season.

"They can fast-break pretty well," said Garber, who has scouted the Redmen twice this season. "They have some quick middies and the goalie is supposed to be good."

Let's not forget however, how good UMass is. The surprise team of the year in Division 1, UMass was 2-4 at Springfield swept by Minutewomen

UMass now 23-5

By ROGER CHAPMAN
Collegian Staff

The 20th-ranked University of Massachusetts softball team got back on the winning trail, yesterday, as the Minutewomen swept a doubleheader from Springfield College, 7-1 in the first game, and a 3-2 eight inning decision in the nightcap. The wins raise the Minutewomen's season record to 23-5.

"Our defense was decent and our hitting was much better," head coach Elaine Sortino said. "We had a lot of good shots today and our pitching was there also."

In the first game, UMass exploded for six runs in the seventh inning to break open a close and potentially dangerous game. With the score tied 1-1, The Minutewomen rattled losing Springfield pitcher Shelly Quirk seven base hits in the inning.

Senior first-baseman Beth Talbott opened the flood gates with a double. Senior second-baseman Carol Frattaroli followed with a single before freshman shortstop Paige Kopcza roped a double of her own. Senior center fielder Sally Maher, who had blasted a solo homer in the third, singled and Ilene Freeman lined yet another double. After sophomore right-fielder Chris Cielpiela flied out, freshman Barbara Meehan and junior Emily Bietsch each singled to end the scoring.

Senior left-hander Lynn Stockley raised her record to 12-1, striking out five, but saw her six-game shutout streak broken when Springfield touched her for a run in the fourth.

In game two, sophomore right-hander Lisa Rever picked up her ninth win of the season, as she came in relief of starter Cathy Reed in the eighth inning with the score tied, 2-2. Rever gave up a hit in the inning, but struck out the last two batters she faced to earn the victory. Her record stands at 9-4 on the year.

"Lisa and Cathy really pitched well," Sortino said. "Lisa was popping the ball a lot harder than she was over the weekend. She was very sharp."

Reed, 2-0 on the season, pitched seven strong innings giving up five hits, two walks, and striking out two.

The game winner was set up when junior third baseman Debbie Cole reached and was sacrificed to second. Talbott then provided the game winning hit by stroking a double to left, scoring Cole.

Look to extend streak

Baseball hosts BU today

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts baseball team continues its quest for respectability this afternoon, hosting a single game against Boston University at 3 p.m. at Lorden Field.

The Terriers are among the worst Division 1 teams in New England, if not the nation. Starting baseball up last season, the Terriers were punching bags for most teams and have had similiar problems this year, winning their first game of the season on Monday, beating Suffolk, 8-7.

Last year, UMass rolled in a doubleheader, 20-0 and 13-3. If the Minutemen continue to hit like they have of late, they should experience similiar ease in beating BU.

UMass has won six of its last seven games and are 6-7 up North since their 1-8 start down in Flordia.

UMass, 7-15, is also 6-3 at Lorden Field after sweeping a Monday doubleheader from New Hampshire.

Manager Dick Bergquist said Monday that the Minutemen would use several pitchers in the game, with up to four hurlers getting some work, no more than three innings. The team is preparing for its three-game series with Rhode Island this weekend at Lorden, and is looking to keep its momentum.

"I'd obviously like to get a win, we'll take whatever we can get," said Bergquist. "If we beat BU, we'll continue to feel better about ourselves as a team and probably play better against Rhode Island."

Minuteman Mutterings: Former baseball player Dan Clifford, in an independent study, has set up a program for the UMass booster club that will sell raffle tickets. When a UMass player hits a homer, a ticket will be drawn with the winner getting dinner at MacDonald's.

"Khadafy sucks" buttons were a hot $1 item for some students and "infantile" to others. The two men, left and center, selling them in the Student Union yesterday declined to give their names.

Campus, like world, divided on airstrikes

By CRAIG SANDLER
Collegian Staff

The black and yellow buttons read "Khadafy sucks," and those who bought them seemed to agree, but the reaction of students at the University of Massachusetts to the buttons and Monday's US airstrike against Libya was mixed.

"I agree with President Reagan. I think enough American people have died" in terrorist attacks, said arts and sciences major Cori Pandolf, pausing as he strode through the Hatch sporting one of the buttons.

The two men selling the buttons outside the Hatch refused to give their names, but said business was brisk if somewhat acrimonious.

"A lot of people have been yelling at us," said one of the men. His partner said he was selling the buttons "because I think (Libyan leader Col. Moammar) Khadafy sucks," but the first vendor commented, "we're not promoting US aggression at all."

The pair said they had been forced to leave the Campus Center concourse by building officials, but that they thought it was all right to sell the buttons in the Student Union Building.

The acting director of Campus Center Building Operations, Dudley Bridges, apparently disagreed, as he appeared a few minutes later, said, "Okay, let's go," and forced them to move out of the building.

The vendors said they ordered the buttons from a local merchant who wanted to stay anonymous. "We see an opportunity to make money off Khadafy's insanity," one said.

Some members of the Undergraduate Student Senate were wearing the buttons at last night's senate meeting, but Commuter Area spokesman David Martin said the buttons were "sort of infantile.

"It's getting emotional. Certainly Khadafy's a megalomanic, but it (wearing the buttons) doesn't solve anything," Martin said.

Pandolf took exception to the protesters at Tuesday's anti-airstrike demonstration on campus. He asked, "Where were they when the people who died were buried?" referring to last week's bombing of a West Berlin discotheque, linked by US officials to Khadafy's regime.

But theater major Matt Canfield said the action "will only escalate violence in the Middle East. (Terrorists) are not going to crumble all of a sudden" as a result of the airstrike.

Sophomore Wendy Copes agreed, calling the attack "abhorrent" and adding, "strength to me is action with some effect."

MassPIRG wins big on both questions

By PATRICK JOHNSON
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group appears to have buried its opponents in two referendum questions put to UMass students Monday and Tuesday, but students opposed to MassPIRG's funding method claim their battle is not over.

Unofficial results for two of six questions on the ballot indicate that 83 percent of those who voted supported an optional student fee for MassPIRG, raised from $2 to $3 per semester, and 70 percent opposed changing the fee from a negative checkoff, or waivable charge, to a positive checkoff, or donation system.

Results of four other referenda, involving fees for athletics, the Fine Arts Center, Union Program Council and the Distinguished Visitors Program, remain incomplete. The committee running the election cited a shortage of volunteers to count votes.

"It is not over. We can still go to the Board of Trustees," said Jordan Rosner of Students for a Positive Checkoff, the group that initiated the second question. "The positive checkoff (idea) is not going away until MassPIRG, SSAM (the State Student Association of Massachusetts, also funded by a waivable fee) and University health fees become positive."

Rayna Sargent of MassPIRG said the election results clearly show that UMass students support the organization. She predicted that the trustees, who have final say in the matter, will base their decision on the referendum results.

MassPIRG had called the campaign for a positive checkoff part of a right-wing scheme to deprive the group of its funding and drive it out of UMass.

Tentative totals show voters backed MassPIRG on the first item 2,145 to 441, and rejected a positive checkoff 1,778 to 774.

MassPIRG has been the target of campus groups since the end of last semester, as have other PIRGs across the country. The main opponent of the PIRG system is the College Republican National Committee, Sargent said, adding: "The two formidable powers on campuses are the college right and the PIRGs. Eliminating PIRG is definitely part of the agenda" of the Republicans.

Craig Rucker, a student at the State University of New York at Albany who offers advice on fighting PIRG chapters, said, "I feel it is unethical for them (PIRGs) to accept fees from those who are unknowing or apathetic about political organizations."

Rucker, a plaintiff in a New York civil case against NYPIRG, said in a telephone interview that he has no affiliation with the College Republicans. He also said he had spoken with students from UMass, but was "not at liberty to give their names."

Brian Darling of Students for Participatory Democracy, the conservative group which waged an unsuccessful campaign against MassPIRG in February, said he called Rucker one day before the February vote. "He didn't give us any advice. We called to see what he was doing in his case. What he said was nothing that we didn't already know," Darling said.

Rosner called MassPIRG members "paranoid" for thinking a conservative conspiracy was behind the referendum. "You can search my apartment, you can search my mail. I have never received a call from any conservative group, and if I did, I'd hang up because I can't stand those people."

Darling said neither he nor SPD was involved with this week's vote. "We could have helped with the campaign but they (Students for a Positive Checkoff) didn't want our help ... They thought they would do great if they did it by themselves," he said.

Ex-Collegian editor in semi-finals to become space journalist

A University of Massachusetts alumna and former Collegian news editor has been selected as one of 100 semifinalists for NASA's "journalist in space" shuttle program.

Gayle Young, currently a science writer for United Press International, is one of 40 semifinalists from the New York/New England region. Others chosen from the area include former CBS anchorman Walter Cronkite and ex-ABC reporter Geraldo Rivera, Young said in a telephone interview yesterday.

Young, a 1982 economics graduate, wrote for the Collegian throughout her four years at UMass, also contributing to the Boston Globe and the New York Times.

The application process for the shuttle flight began in January. Young said she had to write two essays, get three references and submit two clippings.

The next stage will be taped interviews; then 40 finalists will be selected, she said, though "the flight with the journalist on it will probably not go for three years."

Teens and women cited in smoker stats

By SHERYL JEAN
Collegian Staff

Health workers say they are increasingly concerned about the rising rate of teenage girls smoking cigarettes and the decreasing rate of women quitting.

According to the January 1986 public policy statement of the American Lung Association, 32 percent of the United States' adult population smokes, with the number of men smoking dropping more rapidly than that of women.

From 1965 to 1980 the percentage of American men smoking dropped from 51 to 36 percent, but the number of women smokers for the same period only dropped from 33 to 29 percent, according to the statement.

Gail Gramarossa, Western Massachusetts program director for the association, said a major problem area is teenagers. In that age group girls currently smoke more than boys.

In 1983, about 10 percent of teenage boys smoked compared to almost 13 percent of teenage girls, she said.

Gramarossa said most people who start smoking as teenagers will likely continue smoking and those who do not smoke by the age of 21 will probably never smoke.

According to the association's statement, three-fourths of adult smokers began smoking before the age of 21.

The "age of initiation" of smoking has also dropped. Children are starting to smoke tobacco as early as 11 and 12 years old, Gramarossa said. Those who have parents who smoke are more likely to smoke, she added.

Studies show that children of families where the parents smoke have more respiratory problems than children of non-smoking households, said Paul Davis, a health educator at University Health Services.

The backdrop for the rising concern with teenage smokers, especially girls, and women is the continually increasing rate of deaths associated with smoking tobacco.

Khadafy emerges; damage surveyed

●Denies role in Berlin

TRIPOLI, Libya (AP)—Moammar Khadafy emerged from two days' seclusion late yesterday, condemned the United States for its air attack on Libya and vowed that his people are ready to fight on and die.

But the Libyan leader, whose baby daughter was reported killed in the raid, told Americans, "We will not kill your children. We are not like you, we do not bombard cities."

Khadafy's appearance on Libyan television, during which he disclaimed responsibility for anti-American terror attacks, dispelled speculation he had left the country or been killed or seriously injured in the Tuesday morning air raid, staged by waves of U.S. warplanes that dumped one bomb just 10 yards from the Khadafy residence in his fortress headquarters here.

Earlier last night, anti-aircraft fire streaked the black skies over this seaside capital for a second day and gunfire ricocheted around the headquarters compound. Government officials denied the street gunfire signaled factional fighting among the Libyans.

Anti-aircraft crews first opened up in mid-afternoon yesterday at what officials said was a high-flying U.S. reconnaissance jet. A Washington source acknowledged that reconnaissance planes had flown over this north African nation.

The Libyans also said there were new U.S. air attacks yesterday against Tripoli and towns south and east of here. But the Pentagon denied it, and reporters here found no signs of new bombardments.

For almost two full days after the damaging U.S. air bombardment of Tripoli, Khadafy had remained out of sight. Earlier yesterday, he failed to appear for a promised meeting with journalists at his headquarters.

Then, at 11:15 p.m. 4:15 p.m. EST, the Libyan leader appeared on state television, dressed in a white army uniform and speaking in a studio with a map of Africa behind him.

"We are ready to die and we are ready to carry on fighting and defending our country," he declared, speaking in Arabic.

He said President Reagan "has issued orders to his armed forces to kill our children. We have not issued any orders to murder anybody."

The attacks, which the United States said were targeted on five security and military installations in Tripoli and the eastern Libyan city of Benghazi, also severely damaged a civilian neighborhood in Tripoli. Western diplomats said at least 100 people, and probably many more, were killed in Tripoli alone.

Doctors said Khadafy's 15 month-old adopted daughter, Hana, was among the dead, and his two sons, aged 4 and 3, were seriously injured.

Khadafy said Reagan "should be put on trial as a war criminal and murderer of children."

"Even those who carried out operations in Europe are unknown persons," he said.

AP photo

Libyan leader Moammar Khadafy spoke to his nation yesterday on television, the first evidence the outside world had that he survived the U.S. attack.

●Sat out US raid in tent

TRIPOLI, Libya (AP)—Bombs wrecked Moammar Khadafy's house and ruined his tennis court during the raid by American warplanes that targeted the Azziziyah fortress where the Libyan leader lives and works.

The American jets devastated several buildings, but a Libyan official escorting a group of journalists to the compound said Khadafy survived the Tuesday night bombing.

"He was in his tent," not at his home during the raid, explained a white-turbanned guide strolling through a short promenade littered with shards of glass, broken palm tree branches and shrapnel.

Khadafy's house, a light blue two-story building, lost most of its facade when a bomb hit about 10 yards away, leaving a huge crater near the entrance.

Twisted metal and broken aluminum frames cover the narrow streets inside the compound. A few dead birds lay in the sun.

All nearby military buildings lost their windows and some walls were blown down when the bombs crashed inside the compound, hurling a storm of flying red-hot metal and concrete.

Khadafy's office, a yellow four-story building crowned by a dowm, was pierced with thousands of holes.

Shattered desks and bookshelves protruded from piles of debris and broken concrete.

Reporters counted six bomb and missile craters during the brief tour of Khadafy's quarters. But the extent of the damage seen suggests many other missiles hammered the compound during the 20-minute raid.

Libyan officials refused to say how many bombs hit inside the fortress, where Soviet-made anti-aircraft missile batteries and anti-aircraft guns are manned around the clock.

They also refused to say how many people other than Khadafy's adopted 15-month-old daughter were killed.

"Ask Reagan," snapped a guide. "He should know how many bombs he dropped on us."

Two bombs gouged large craters on the edge of Khadafy's asphalted tennis court, hurling an electric power pole to a spot near the Libyan leader's colorful tent, which is protected by sandbags.

GOP stalls contra aid bill in House

WASHINGTON (AP)—House Republicans used a surprise tactic yesterday to abruptly stop House consideration of President Reagan's $100 million Nicaraguan aid proposal, saying they wanted to divorce it from an unrelated spending bill Reagan badly wants to veto.

Democrats claimed the Republicans acted out of desperation because they did not have the votes to defeat a key proposal opposed by the White House.

The Republican minority pulled its surprise by voting for an amendment that would have ended the Reagan program of aiding the anti-Sandinista guerillas in Nicaragua—an amendment that had been widely expected to fail.

As a consequence, the amendment by Rep. Lee Hamilton, D-Ind., passed 361-66 with only one Republican opposing it. It would bar all aid to the Contras while making $27 million available for Nicaraguan refugees.

The unexpected ploy, which blocked consideration of an amendment opposed by the White House, was characterized by GOP leaders as a move to free the aid plan from a $1.7 billion catch-all spending bill Reagan says is "pork barrel" legislation "brimming with waste and excess."

Engineering profs named 'Young Investigators'

By LIZ HETTINGER
Collegian Staff

Two University of Massachusetts faculty members have received "Presidential Young Investor Awards" from the National Science Foundation that could secure each of them $100,000 for five years of research.

Shanti Nair of the mechanical engineering department and Thomas McCarthy of the polymer science and engineering department are among 100 scientists nationwide who were chosen for the awards from a pool of 883 nominees.

Nair said $25,000 is guaranteed to each winner. The scientists themselves must solicit the remainder from private industry; the foundation will match industry contributions of up to $38,500, he said.

The purpose of the awards program is to strengthen ties between academia and industry, Nair said.

"It stimulates the University to get involved in the practical side of science that industries focus on," Nair said. "In return, it stimulates industry to get involved in the scientific aspects of research that universities focus on."

Both Nair and McCarthy have definite plans for their award money, which they will begin receiving July 1.

"We want to use the money to look at polymer adsorption and composites, and also to buy some equipment that we need," McCarthy said. His research focuses on polymer surface chemistry and olefin mathesis, which he explained as "changing properties of objects so that things will be more adhesive."

Nair's research focuses on composites, "combining different types of materials into one to make a better material.

"Overall though, materials—materials that resist cracking—are what industry wants," he said.

Nair said he is currently working to reinforce aluminum with ceramic "whiskers," which is "of use in the automobile industry" because it is much stronger than the metal alone.

He said he plans to purchase new laboratory equipment, hire more graduate students as assistants, and seek to expand UMass' undergraduate program in materials research.

Nair currently teaches one undergraduate materials course, "Introduction to Materials, " and teaches "Mechanical Properties in Materials" to graduate students.

McCarthy received a bachelor's degree in chemistry from UMass in 1978, and a doctorate in organic chemistry from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in 1982.

Nair earned master's and doctorate degrees from Columbia University after undergraduate work at the Indian Institute of Technology in Bombay.

Briton blames US for renewed cold war

By JENNIFER ACE
Collegian Correspondent

The United States has been involved in two cold wars since 1946 and is completely responsible for the second, in which it is presently engaged, a vice chairman of the British Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament said yesterday.

"I hold the U.S. entirely responsible for the second cold war, which was a response to a breakdown in the U.S. system of power," Dan Smith said in a lecture in Grayson dormitory.

Smith said he believes the United States needed to perform a system repair as a result of a breakdown that occurred because of military, economic, and political factors.

"First, the USSR had become a global power,' said Smith, 'but only in a military sense. There was also increasing economic competition and political independence from the Western European allies," he said.

Smith also said that because of problems with the Third World, such as the oil producing nations raising their prices and the newly industrial nations doing so well that they were sapping the economic strength of the U.S, the political and economic position of the country was failing.

"America itself was suffering from the 'Vietnam Syndrome,'" said Smith, 'which was an unwillingness to get involved in another war in the Third World."

For these reasons, and because all other means had been exhausted, the U.S. had to play a "military card," said Smith. "The U.S. had to show how strong it was and get the Allies back in line. In 1977 the U.S. built up the military and was ready to intervene in the Third World, if necessary," said Smith.

"I hold the U.S. entirely responsible for the second cold war, which was a response to a breakdown in the U.S. system of power." —Dan Smith

Between 1967-79 there was a period of detente, said Smith. This was a time of warmed relations between the superpowers. "This period served a lot of purposes for the U.S. since military confrontation with the USSR was becoming expensive and extremely dangerous," Smith said. This period also gave the U.S. an opportunity to contain growing pressures from Western Europe, which was seeking better relations with the Soviet Union.

Smith said detente was about the pursuit of competition in a new way, but that it did not change the attitudes of one superpower toward the other.

The rising tide of plant closings and capital flight poses a threat to the future of the United States economy, but can be mitigated, although not totally solved, by plant-closing legislation, a labor activist and an economist said last night.

"Plant closings are a serious problem that is not limited to the major industrial centers and affects the labor force as a whole in significant porportions," UMass economics professor Nancy Folbre told a small audience in the Campus Center.

The plant-closing legislation, which has been introduced both nationally and in Massachusetts, is "a good idea," Folbre said, noting that the legislation mostly calls for notifying workers when a plant is going to be closed.

Folbre said a recent study showed that half of all workers who lose their jobs have less than one month's notice. When workers have so little time to find new jobs they tend to stay unemployed and demoralized. "It's economically inefficient," she noted.

Plant closing can often be linked to the "growing internationalization of production," where the section of production that requires the most labor is moved out of the US to countries where wages are lower and there is no environmental or saftey regulation.

United Electrical local 274 vice president Judy Atkins described some of the struggles unions in Western Massachusetts have been waging against plant closings.

Atkins said unions have been working to negotiate ways to keep plants open and pushing for laws that will protect workers from companies that decide to move simply for higher profits.

If workers have advance notice they can make the plant closing a community issue and start a campaign to save people's jobs, she said.

Unions in the area are struggling against a declining machine tool industry and the "deindustrialization" of the United States, she said. "Basic manufacturing is being destroyed. We have to ask: Is this good for the country?"

The unions almost managed to get plant closing legislation passed in Massachusetts in 1983 but at the last minute Secretary of Economic Development Evelyn Murphy said it would scare businesses away, so it was not passed, she said.

Reinstate Gross, senate urges

By PATRICK JOHNSON
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate voted last night to request that the political science department reinstate a professor, and that the Reserve Officer Training Corps review its policy towards lesbians and gay men.

The motion adopted by unanimous acclamation "formally requests the political science department and the administration reconsider and reinstate Debra Gross as an instructor."

Gross did not have her contract renewed after she failed to revise two chapters in her doctoral thesis in time. She had been with the department for two years, and had been nominated for the Distinguished Teacher's Award.

The senate also approved a motion criticizing ROTC for having a "policy of discrimination against lesbians and gay men" in contradiction with the University discrimination policy.

One of the authors of the motion, Mike Cerrato from the Northeast Residential Area said, "It is believed by the US government that homosexual men are more likely to be seduced by enemy spies."

Brian Darling from the Southwest Residential Area said he was opposed to the motion because he wanted written evidence of discrimination, "not hearsay."

"I don't know anything about ROTC. I want to know more before I vote against something. People use anything on this campus to go against the military, and that bothers me," he said.

The senate also thwarted what it considered an attempted extortion bid when Philipe Barreda of the Commuter Area Government motioned to censure Bill Collins of Southwest.

Explaining his motion before the senate, Barreda said, "I have something you want, and you have something I want. I will withdraw my motion if I can sit on any (senate) committee of my choice." After the senate finished laughing, Cerrato made a motion to amend the original motion by replacing Collins' name with Barreda's.

Collins told the senate, "As a hostage, I urge you, do not give into terrorism."

Barreda told the Collegian he was upset with what he considered a waste of the senate's time by Collins.

"I just brought something usually done behind curtains up to the front. . .I won't apologize, but it was an error in judgment," he said.

Sorority members refute stereotypes

By DANA GROSSBLATT
Collegian Correspondent

Leadership, connections, friendship, scholarship and personal growth are among the benefits of sororities, according to sorority members at the University of Massachusetts.

In interviews, the women also rejected what they said were stereotypes of sorority "sisters" as elitist, conformist or social butterflies.

"People don't realize how much sororities can do for them," said Debra Valkenaar, assistant area director of Greek Affairs.

In the recent past, many student have felt pressure not to associate with the Greek system, Valkenaar said, adding that this may account for the recent decline in sorority recruitment.

Valkenaar said there must be better promotion of sororities to increase the 4.9 percent of UMass women involved in them.

She said the governing body of all sororities, the Panhellenic Council, is working on techniques to recruit pledges. Valkenaar said the rush system needs more effective public relations, earlier rush activities and more cooperation among fraternities and sororities, among other things.

In the late 1950s and early '60s, 40 percent of UMass students were members of the Greek system, Valkenaar said. As the climate of the University turned more political, membership declined.

"There was a lot of recruitment (to other activities) in New England that led people away from groups such as fraternal organizations," said Elaine Barker, a Kappa Kappa Gamma alumna of 1963.

Barker said that during her time at UMass, men thought that women in sororities were supposed to be "blond and busty," and that this attitude persists today.

"They think you're a snob," said Debbie Schwalb, a senior sister of Sigma Delta Tau. She said many students stereotype certain sororities as "Jewish" or "WASP." In reality, she asserted, each house at UMass is home to a diverse group of women.

Rebecca Mendelson, president of the Panhellenic Council and a sister of Chi Omega, said she seeks to counter the perception of sorority members as "bar-hopping individuals."

"A sorority is not just a social organization, but one with rules, traditions and a philanthropy," Mendelson said.

Another major reason for disinterest in rush is that less than half of the University students' parents went to college, according to Valkenaar, and few were involved in the Greek system.

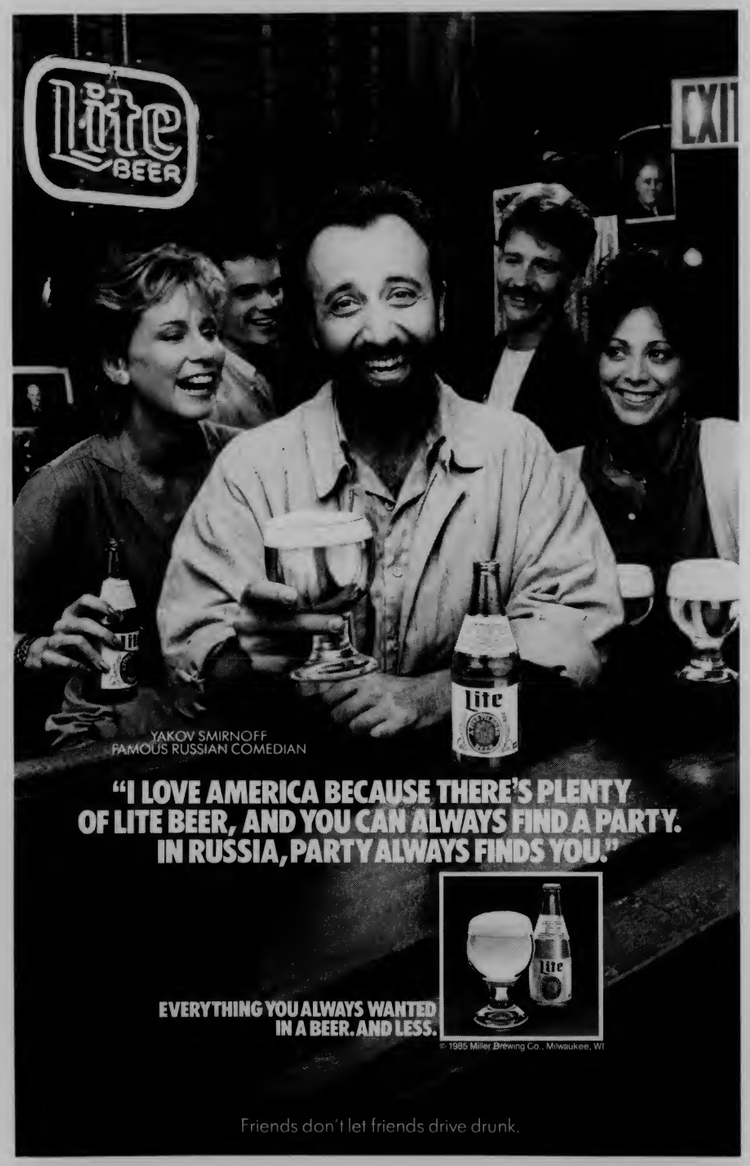
Suzanne Flenard, a junior and resident of Delta Zeta, said that a sorority is not only a chance to form close friendships, "it is a business because you get a sense of managing, organizing and responsibility that will help you in the future."

Sorority members interviewed all said they feel the Greek area has suffered bad press within the University and the surrounding community.

One arrested in phony money scam

Amherst Police say a scheme practiced lately in town is changing a $1 bill into a fake $20 bill by ripping the number "20" off two bills and pasting them onto a $1 bill.

A man was arrested at 10:40 a.m. Tuesday after the owner of the College Drug store in Amherst Center saw him attempting to use a counterfeit $20 note and reported it, police said.



Police say several other such incidents have occurred recently; a person rips the numbers off two $20 bills and then exchanges the damaged bills at a bank for new ones.

In other police reports:

Two 9-year-old girls waiting at a Brittany Manor bus stop at 8 a.m. Tuesday allegedly observed a naked man knocking at a window from the inside of one of the apartments. The incident was reported by their parents, police said.

Prop 2½ sponsor to speak

The executive director of Citizens for Limited Taxation, a lobbying group which in 1980 put the Proposition 2 1/2 referendum question on the Massachusetts ballot, is scheduled to speak at 8 p.m. today in Memorial Hall.

Barbara Anderson will speak on "Direct Democracy in Massachusetts." Anderson "is the most influential woman in the state, responsible for the greatest amount of change in recent years," said Bill Collins of Students for Government by Referenda, the group sponsoring the visit.

Collins said his group and the state lobbying group advocate "the use of populist methods of change initiated by citizens as opposed to change initiated by government."

Massachusetts voters approved Proposition 2 1/2, which restricts property tax increases to 2.5 percent annually, by a 59 percent to 41 percent margin. Amherst residents rejected it by 76 percent, the most negative vote of all Massachusetts municipalities, according to Chip Faulkner, CLT associate director.

By May 7, The Massachusetts Legislature must vote on a tax cap plan initiated by CLT, Faulkner said. The bill, which was started as a petition, mandates that the state raise taxes no higher than increases in wages and salaries.

Under the law, if taxes of the past three years are determined to be higher than increases in wages and salaries for the same period, the difference would be refunded to Massachusetts citizens, he said.

Faulkner said he does not expect the bill to pass. In that event, he said CLT will try to gather 10,000 signatures by June 17 to make the bill a referendum question on the ballot next fall.

called smoking the largest preventable cause of sickness and death in the US population," said Connie Peterson, another UMass health educator.

Smoking causes about 350,000 premature deaths each year and accounts for about 30 percent of all cancer deaths, according to Gramarossa.

Next year lung cancer is predicted to be the number one cancer killer nationwide, surpassing breast cancer, Gramarossa said, adding, "It has already happened in Massachusetts." By the end of 1985 lung cancer had surpassed breast cancer as the leading cause of cancer deaths in the state, she said.

The rate of lung cancer in women has increased 500 percent since 1950 and is still rising, she said.

Smoking promotes a risk for other cancers such as cancer of the mouth, larynx, pharynx, esophagus, pancreas and bladder. It is also responsible for 85 to 90 percent of chronic obstructive pulmonary diseases, Peterson said.

"It's just about the same number if two jumbo jets crashed in the air every day and no one survived," Gramarossa said.

"When a person smokes, smoke gets into the lungs and nicotine gets into the blood immediately. As a result adrenalin is released which increases the heart rate and blood pressure and is a stimulant to the nervous system," said Davis.

Tobacco smoke contains dozens of carcinogens—such as tars, formaldehyde and carbon monoxide, a toxic by-product of combustion also found in automobile exhaust—as well as nicotine, the addictive component.

Anxiety mounts. The first Scotsman sits on the throne of England. He is a foreigner, a poor administrator, a ruthless prosecutor, his Catholic mother died on the block for treason. Now the Catholics plan to blow up Parliament; the Puritans plot a rebellion, witchcraft spreads. Shakespeare's new play is on Scotland, on James's ancestry, on devils, murder, regicide, and treason. Gay writer relates life as 'professional liar'

By BARBARA DeLOLLIS
Collegian Staff

Between the fine lines demarcating truth and lies exists a "gray area," which gay black author Charles Henry Fuller spoke about on Tuesday at Hampshire College.

During an informal lecture titled, "My Life as a Professional Liar: Black Perspectives on Fiction and Journalism," Fuller told about 15 people of his experiences and what he must face as a gay, black writer.

After 10 years of pursuing a classical singing career, Fuller said he realized that "it wasn't for me."

"To make a more accurate representation of what was going on" became Fuller's goal as he decided to try to "correct the inequity" which he had found in his musical career.

Fuller is now a part of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology writing program staff, as well as a freelance writer of fiction and journalism.

"We assume journalists will give us what we need to know," said Fuller of non-fiction writing, but in fact "what gets passed off as truth is really an interpretation." He referred to interpretation as "that gray area."

Sometimes fiction will be based more on factual details than non-fiction, which contains more interpretation to "fill in the holes," he said.

The mainstream publications "want to know how blacks and gays are like everyone else," Fuller said, "like a melting pot idea."

He described a recent offer by GQ magazine to publish an article by him on homosexuality, if he would assimilate it to "mainstream" life.

Fuller said he is neither "angry nor incredibly reasonable" in his writing, as many minorities are, but in between.

"I have not yet found how to do this in a mainstream publication, he said. "In a radical publication, it's easier."

Fuller said it is important that minorities' "case is put forward so it can be heard."

Joseph E. Lowery

Lowery to speak on Monday

As part of a week-long commemoration of the late Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., Joseph E. Lowery, president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, will deliver a keynote address at 8 p.m. Monday in the Campus Center Auditorum.

The theme for this year is, "No Easy Walk to Freedom"

Lowery has preached in the Russian Orthodox Church, and has received the Medal of Honor from the Moscow Theological Seminary for contributions to "brotherhood and peace." In 1963, he led the first delegation of black Americans to Nicaragua to study the crisis in that Central American nation, where he met with three top leaders of the then-ruling junta.

According to Ebony magazine's senior editor, Lerone Bennet Jr., Lowery "helped establish a new black presence in world affairs" and in shaping American foreign policy."

Harvard approves students protest

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP)—After two sleepless nights, Harvard sophomore Jonathan Martin says he's looking forward to a good rest in a wood-and-plastic shanty he helped build to protest university investments in companies doing business in South Africa.

"I haven't slept since Sunday night," Martin said Tuesday after he helped hundreds of other students build a shantytown in Harvard Yard to back students' demands that Harvard divest itself of stock in companies active in the racially separated nation.

Harvard administrators said Tuesday they recognized the three shacks and a 20-foot high "ivory tower" as a legitimate protest against the university's South African-related investments.

Harvard Vice President Daniel Steiner said the school has $416 million worth of shares in companies that "on the average do less than 1 percent of their business in South Africa.

"Members of the Harvard community are united in thei condemnation of this cruel and inhuman system of government. The university asks members of the communjnity to respect this expression of protest," Steiner said.

Harvard police said the protest was peaceful and without incident.

"This kind of thing has been slow in coming to Harvard," said Philip Mote, a junior walking past the shanties to class.

"Dartmouth and MIT have done it. I'm amazed Harvard has been so slow. I don't necessarily agree with what they're doing."

"I think it's disgraceful," said Erik Wiese, a freshman. "It really makes Harvard people look like they don't have any class, building trashy holes on campus."

"It promotes awareness," said Rick Chavez, a junior. "The apartheid issue has kind of died out, and I think this is a pretty clever idea to rejuvenate interest."

WHY KEG BEER TASTES BETTER THAN COOKED BEER.

Ask most beer drinkers, and they'll likely agree: nothing tastes better than beer from a keg.

Ever since the days of Frederic Miller's original Plank Road Brewery, keg beer has always been fresher. That's because it isn't cooked to preserve it like most bottled and canned beers.

Well, now there's a beer that delivers that same fresh draft taste in a bottle. A beer specially cold-filtered instead of cooked, so it tastes like it was drawn straight from the keg.

Big problem with Cameron

William Poulin-Deltour

I feel it necessary to comment on the University's recent decision to allow Paul Cameron to speak at the Student Union Building, and the adverse effect his "legitimate" presence on this campus has had for the lesbian and gay community.

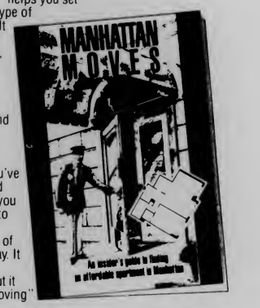
The University of Massachusetts has assumed in principle the responsibility of protecting lesbians' and gays' civil rights. In light of rising discrimination against lesbians and gays across the country, this action on the part of the University appears commendable. In actual practice, however, the University's support of the lesbian and gay community has proven itself to be anything but exemplary, and this was especially evident with its decision to allow Cameron to speak publically at the end of Gay and Lesbian Awareness Week.

While Cameron's "right to free speech" could not be denied, the University's responsibility to the lesbian and gay community should not have been ignored. That the University allowed Cameron to speak at the Student Union Building at the end of Lesbian and Gay Awareness Week is blatant evidence that it does not take seriously its commitment to the lesbian and gay community. Cameron no longer holds recognized professional status, and his research has been proven time and time again to be fraudulent. He has publically commended the murder of a homosexual, and is little more than an inflammatory preacher of hate against the lesbian and gay community.

This community is in turn forced to question the university's role in protecting its civil rights, and must pose the following question; why and according to whose judgement was Cameron, while holding no official qualification and known for encouraging misunderstanding, hate, and violence against gays and lesbians, allowed to speak on this cmapus and given the greatest potential visibility (the steps of the Student Union Building) during Lesbian and Gay Awareness Week? Would the black community tolerate such disrespect during its Black History Month? Would the Jewish community likewise during Holocaust Memorial Week? Obviously not. Cameron's presence on this campus had little to do with "public education;" it was an extreme effort to incite hatred against lesbians and gays, especially in light of those activities planned for Lesbian and Gay Awareness Week.

While an effective and well organized counter rally was planned by the Office of Lesbian and Gay Concerns, Cameron's speech was able to legitimize homophobic sentiments throughout the campus. Several students supporting his views were present at the counter rally and openly declared their hatred for lesbians and gays, threatening them with physical violence. Lesbians and gays, along with supporters of their civil rights, were in turn harassed and threatened with physical violence long after the rally had finished, throughout the campus.

It is clear that Cameron's visit to the University had one clear effect; it put at risk the civil rights and safety of the University's lesbian and gay community. This community deserves not only an explanation from the University as to why Cameron was allowed here to speak; it deserves as well an apology for the irresponsible and insensitive behavior shown on behalf of University officials, and the assurance that such incidents will in the future be avoided.



William Poulin-Deltour is a teaching assistant in the department of French and Italian.

Student politics and Libya

Timothy Harris

I couldn't decide whether I wanted to bore you with student politics or rant about Libya, so I'll do both.

When Bill Bennet bobbed to the top of the SGA cesspool, few had the time or inclination to follow the details of his ascent. It may, however, be worth holding one's nose to take a closer look. It also may not be. Please feel free to skip the next few paragraphs if SGA politics nauseate you.

The M. Lynne Murphy/Lynne M. Murphy (god I hate to ressurect this) controversy was a clear sign that this was not going to be a fair campaign. For those who aren't familiar, M. Lynne was a candidate for SGA president, Lynne M. was a member of Bennett's campaign team. Campaign posters stating "Lynne M. Murphy supports Bill Bennett" were posted by the Bennett people, who denied that others might find it confusing. Said Bennett, "It has no effect at all. One side blew it out of proportion."

Then came the elections. The initial tally had Bennett the winner by eight votes, 1045-1037. A recount was held, but not before some very interesting behind the scenes politicking. Although Dani Burgess won the student trustee seat over Joe Sparks by 360 votes, the SGA senate conservatives threatened to not ratify him as the winner, saying the 360 vote lead was an insufficient majority for a "mandate." Meanwhile, by recommendation of the conservatives, a 50 point lead was settled upon as a broad enough margin to declare a winner of the SGA Presidency.

The recount was held and lo and behold—30 of Murphy's votes disappeared mysteriously and new ones materialized for Bennett. Bennett emerged with a 60 vote lead. A deal was struck that the conservatives would not block the Burgess appointment if the progressives would accept Bennett as winner.

After this swirl of activity the campaign was said to be "By and large above board," and winnners declared. Karen Morvay, flushed with victory, declared "It's Bennett and Burgess, baby!" So goes life in the cesspool.

Watching students watching Dan Rather on TV reminded me of nothing so much as Orwell's 5-minute hate. The Voice of Reason tells us with all the authority network television can muster that we didn't attack Libya, we attacked Terror. Virile images of military hardware cavorting through the air danced on screen Monday, choreographed with color maps strangely tracing the paths of the bombers over Europe and little explosion symbols superimposed on Libya to show where we struck. Over and over and over it is asserted that this was an act of defense.

With the exceptions of Margaret Thatcher, Israel and Canada, the world has condemned our actions. The United States insists, however, that it is they who are mistaken. They, like the World Court and the United Nations, have ganged up on America. We are to believe that the world is full of subversives and America carries the True Faith. America arrogantly asserts that it is NATO that is driving a wedge between our country and the Alliance by not supporting the bombing. NATO hopes only that we will step back, reassess our actions, and attempt to mend our error. Against reason, the proud Eagle insists upon flying into the flames.

As Libya's retaliatory attack on a U.S. communications installation clearly shows, the bombing will only escalate terrorism, not halt it. NATO knows this, for they have had far more experience in dealing with terrorism than we have.

We can also expect a wave of domestic anti-Arab racism, much like that which prompted the murder of an Iranian student at Wellesley High School several years ago. All in all, there is nothing here to be proud of.

No longer satisfied with destabilizing Central America, Reagan has imperiled the entire world. It is clear who the most dangerous state terrorists are. What isn't clear is what American citizens are willing to do about it.

Deceptive Republicanism

Becky Lockwood

This Tuesday the anti-abortion film "Silent Scream," with a speech by Bernard Nathenson, was being continuously shown on the Campus Center Concourse. Despite my objections to the film (because it perpetuates misinformation about abortion and is misogynous), this column pertains to the organization(s) that sponsored the showing of the video.

The only sign on the table next to the VCR stated the name of the video and identified Bernard Nathenson. When I approached the man (Tony Rudy) sitting at the table and requested information, firstly about the video and secondly about the sponsoring organization, he answered that he had no information about the film and that his organization was called "Students For America." He also did not know if Students For America was a Registered Student Organizaton. I was interested in the history of the group and when it had been established. Rudy told me he did not know about the organization and that he was only "sitting at the table for a friend."

However, there was no table space allocated to any group calling themselves Students For America and I was referred to the Campus Center Board of Governors. When two women from the BOG requested information from Rudy about the sponsoring group he offered either the Republican Party or The Silent Majority as the responsible RSO. He did not mention Students For America and the table space he had utilized was allocated to the UMass Republican Club, not The Silent Majority or Students For America.

His obvious confusion as to whose table he was sitting at and his refusal to identify those organizations raised several questions for me. Firstly, if the table was a Republican Club venture, why weren't they identified as the sponsoring group? Where were the banner and American flag that usually adorn their information tables on the Concourse? It makes me wonder if the Republican Club was too embarassed to be associated with a reactionary right-wing film like "Silent Scream." Secondly, the deceptive practices of the Club member (Rudy) sitting at the table makes me question his committment to the ideals and values espoused by the Republican Party.

Also, I question the importance of those values to the Club as a whole considering the blatant disregard exhibited by its members for ideals like honesty and freedom of information. For example, "Silent Scream" advocates that a woman's freedom to control her body be denied and such a position is a direct threat to the freedom guaranteed me by the Supreme Court. As a citizen, I have the right to "know my accusers," but this information was denied me through Rudy's vague and deceptive answers.

This dishonesty is reminiscent of the under-handed practices of other (supposedly) pro-student rights' groups like Students for a Participatory Democracy. The interest of the Republican Club in organizations with such unethical practices is questionable. For an organization that espouses citizen's rights, I am infuriated by its dishonesty and denial of those rights to the very students it claims to protect.

Problem solutions

In response to Rusty Denton's editorial "Taxing Pains" of April 8, I too question where my taxes are going. I question some of the choices our government makes in its allocation of funds but have chosen not to see it as having my taken away. The money that we have been paying into Social Security since 1935 is returned with extra to every person eligible for benefits as described in the Social Security Act. This money is hardly taken away from you.

While much of this money does feed the bureaucracy, Denton's solution "to dump the programs entirely and give the money back to the taxpayers. Let us do the charity", has a lot of problems with it. Unfortunaltey the rest of the country is not as "charitable" or tolerant towards the poor, the hungry, the women raising children alone, as he claims to be.

And that 70-year-old woman who discovered she could collect Social Security and decided in a moment of rash irresponsibility to stop looking for a second career, because of her arthritis. Could people see past their disgust at her "laziness" to take her into their own home?

I also challenge Denton's choice of biblical quotes. "He who doesn't work, doesn't eat." Does this refer to a child born into a financially unstable family, or the 85-year-old widower without a family who has used up his savings?

Protecting its citizens, Denton's claims, is one of the "few genuine obligations" this government has, well can't we protect with immediate necessities as well as with weapons? Must we overlook protecting the individual?

Someday Denton too will be eligible for Social Security benefits and if all those "handouts" don't make us and him too lazy, we will probably pick up and cash those checks and go do something wildly irresponsible like pay the rent or eat dinner. How will we be able to justify eating without working? I hope for our sake we'll find a way and won't have to rely on our neighbor's sense of charity.

Israel's future

"Creating a new reality is what is needed in Israel" stated Muhammad Darawshi as he spoke to a group of concerned adults in the Campus Center last week. As founder of Haraket Esalem A'rabia (The Arab Peace Movement) and Co-ordinator of Arab-Jewish Dialogue groups for the Institute for Education for Co-existance Between Jews and Arabs in Israel, Darawshi stresses the need for peace in the Land of Israel. The Jews and the Palestinians, both living in the Land and each believing to be the rightful inhabitants of the Land, are each becoming more radical in their attempts to prove the illegitimacy of the other group.

Extremists like Meir Kahane, who "Poisons the minds" of young Israeli children, will not solve the conflict. "My family has lived in the Land of Israel for 800 years, I am not going to leave it," argues Darawshi. A change in attitude will have to come about. He considers himself to be a Palestinian, of which he is very proud, as well as an Israeli citizen, of which he is also proud. He proposes that both groups have to work at changing the system that exists; not only at speaking about the injustices that exist but changing those factors which cause the injustices.

The Jews and the Palestinians must get to know one another personally and culturally; as one human being to another. And this is already happening in the unrecognized community of Niveh Shalom in which 13 families, both Israeli and Palestinian are co-existing. There, the two groups have been able to develop an education system know as "The School for Peace" and other groups working for racial equality.

Darawshi made two statements that for a fleeting moment chillingly reminded me of the racism of the Nazis and its resulting upheaval of 6 million European Jews. He states that even today Arab children believe that Jews have horns and the reverse is true as well, the Jewish children believed the same of the Arabs. And, at one time there was an idea that to solve the conflict in Israel, all the Palestinians would be deported out of Israel and would be resettled on some island. This thought is a revitalization of the Nazi idea of resettling the European Jews onto the uninhabitable island of Madagascar in Africa. Was it not President Roosevelt who once stated that "those who forget the past are doomed to repeat it"?

Darawshi admitted that before he became involved in the Dialogue groups, he had been a radical believer that the Palestinians should "throw all Jews into the sea." His present day beliefs that the Palestinians and the Israelis can coexist, if they are genuinely felt, can be viewed as an indication that a new reality is indeed being created in the Land of Israel.

New approach to CATE guide

Phalon/Breslin

Most people at this university are familiar by now with the Course and Teacher Evaluation Guide (CATE), put out by the Academic Affairs Committee of the Undergraduate SGA. Most people are also familiar with the problems and controversies that have surrounded the CATE guide for the past ten years.

In past years, evaluation forms were mailed to students with the expectation that they would be completed and mailed back to the Academic Affairs Committee for compilation. Unfortunately, not enough students found the time to do so.

This year a new method is being implemented. With permission, instructor's packets containing the evaluation forms and an instructional cover sheet will be delivered. Then the forms will be distributed in the classrooms at the instructor's convenience, filled out by the students and returned to Academic Affairs (420 Student Union), by a student volunteer. If you would like to vlounteer to do so, please come up to our office in the Student Union. Maybe in this way the response rates will be greatly increased and a better guide will result.

The desire to improve on CATE is related to its philosophy. This philosophy has been criticized indirectly and become lost; when in fact, the book's real Achilles heel is its low response rate. Otherwise, the philosophy that remains is profoundly sound.

Naturally, each student desires the opportunity to place him/herself in an academic environment which will permit growth, prove to be stimulating, and challenge their abilities. Many see course choosing as critical in reaching this goal. Only after a consideration of both the course description and a profile of their possible instructors will students feel better prepared to choose courses. CATE is a way to serve this student need.

Many professors agree with and believe in CATE. Nevertheless, CATE's low response rate has fueled the fire of those who disagree, or alienated some of those professors who recognize our right. Previously, much of the dissent was due to the evaluation process itself. The voice of the faculty members is emphasizing that they too have rights. A right to a fair evaluation process. We recognize that with every evaluation process, flaws and ambiguity are unavoidable. So we seek to achieve our goals through the fairest means possible.

At a recent meeting of the Academic Matters Council of the Faculty Senate, a discussion of CATE was initiated by us. It would be misleading to say concerns weren't raised over CATE's philosophy and fairness. However, with proper communication, a compromise was made in the meeting. The end result; the council "endorsed and commended the efforts of students to improve the Course and Teacher Evaluation Guide." This statement was delivered in the form of a motion, passed unanimously and as an indication of the support that council members extend for the improvements that are designed for CATE.

Sarah Phalon is the CATE coordinator and Ellen Breslin is the chair of the SGA Academic Affairs Committee.

Firm response to terrorism needed

Stuart Gottlieb

Back in 1979, when the pliant backbone of the Carter administration was offering laughing Iranians $350 million worth of gold bullion for the release of our hostages, a funny thing happened. A telegram from the soon to be in power Reagan administration to Teheran more or less explained to the captors that they should take the money and run, because when Reagan reached office they would receive such offer again. The proposition was then rethought by the brains of the Iranian hostage operation and was considered a worthy trade-off.

The hostages were freed shorlty after Reagan was inaugurated into the executive office.

That was the beginning of our new approach to terrorism. Although we are still in phase one, we are now under a policy that is open to admit strength as a way to combat the atrocities of terrorist activity. Hopefully the rest of the world, especially Western Europe, will follow our lead.

After the Abu Nidal gang "successfully" executed 20 innocent civilians in the coordinated attacks on the Rome and Vienna airports, a gleeful Moammar Khadafy expressed his approval of this "victory over United States imperialism." But it appears that the cocky Colonel is not such a hot shot since the United States has twice given the Libyans a taste of twentieth century technology. The Libyan leader was initially seen scurrying to the nearest news bureau to testify directly to the world that he had nothing to do with the latest TWA bombing which took the lives of four Americans, and even denounced the act as "An unneccesary act of terrorism against a civilian target," and that he was personally "totally against that."

This reversal of Khadafy's reverence for terrorism at that time was a key indicator that counteraction can be successful. But now that we have taken an even firmer political and military stance to stop terrorism, it appears for now that the United States is on its own. The recent unvailing of France and Italy's "revolving door" terrorist policy of the late 1970's which traded off safe refuge for Palestinian terrorists in exchange for terrorism free countries shows us where these "allies" stand. It was lucky for the free world that this policy failed and Italy and France became hot spots for terrorist activity.

A more peaceful diplomatic action would be the boycotting of airports in hostile nations such as Iran, Syria, and Libya. This action is safe, economically hinders the terrorist nations, and is endorsed by pilots around the world. The only problem is that Western Europe has resisted this pact, claiming that it would jeapordize lucrative routes.

A sure deterrant of terrorism would be a mandatory world-wide death penalty policy for all accused terrorists. Even if this threat wouldn't inhibit the terrorists, it would eliminate the highjackings which take place to free terrorists who are in prison.

Of course, another action is to directly strike terrorist training camps in Libya and such outlaw nations as Syria. These attacks would take place following any terrorist activity, such as the German disco bombing, even if there is no claimer of responsibility. If we strike the wrong camp, then there are a few less terrorists in the world, but the important thing is that the others will surely be on their toes, and for once on the defnsive. As stated in 1982 by Israeli Defense Minister Ariel Sharon, "One way of insuring a true peace is by inflicting maximum casualties among terrorist leaders."

At any rate, the Palestinian murderers, and other terrorists are beginning to view the United States in a new light, much like that of the Soviet Union, which will tolerate nothing if it gets in the way of Soviet intentions or people. As stated by one Soviet diplomat back in 1978 when asked what would happen if Iran took the Soviet embassy hostage, "Fifteen minutes later there would be no more Iran."

Stuart Gottlieb is a member of the Collegian staff.

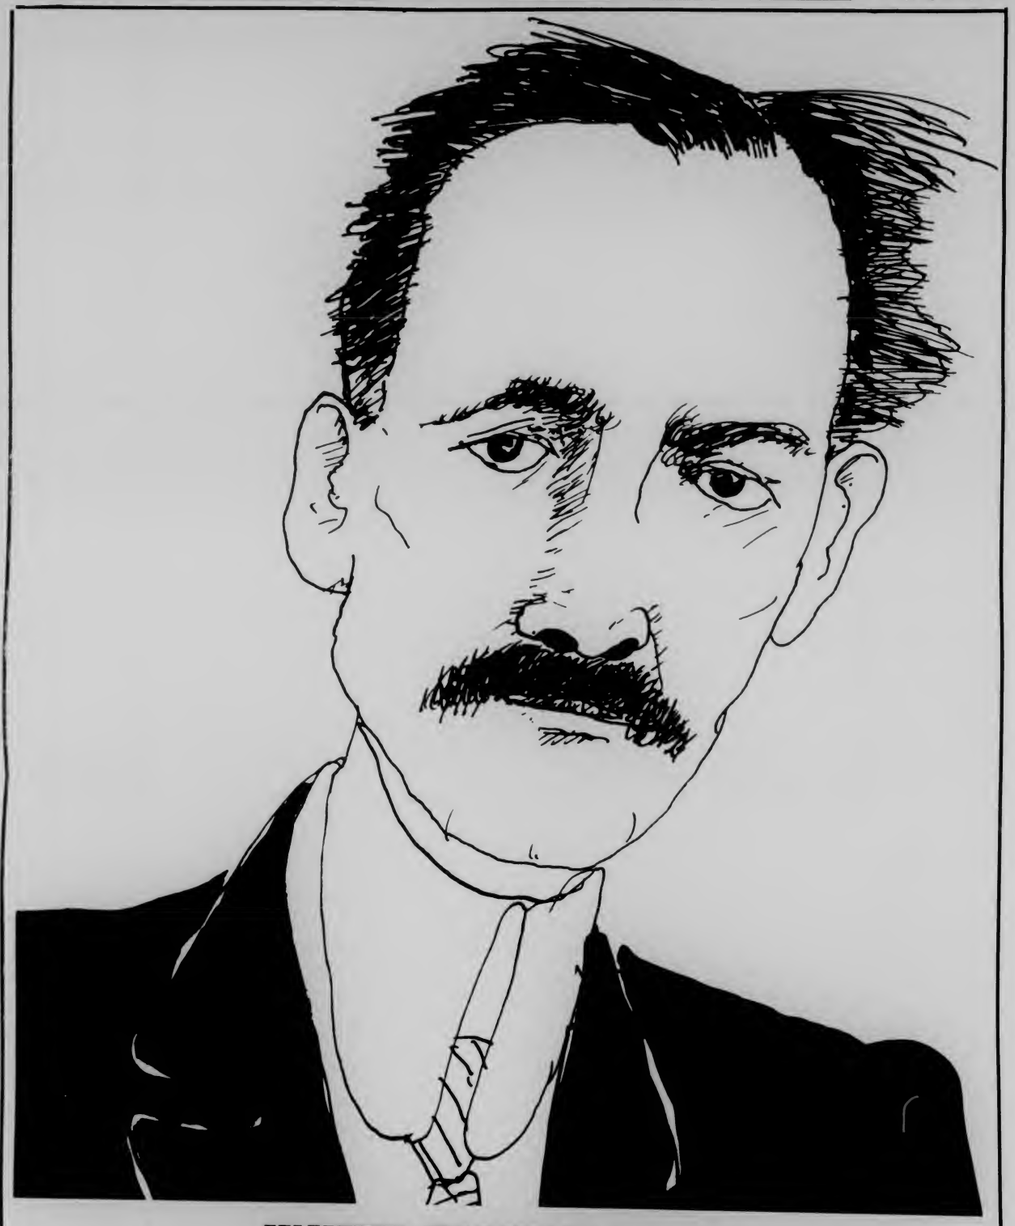
Who's safe now?

Mark Caldeira

Is the world any safer now? Is Khadafy now more likely to stop his attacks against the West? Insuperably to the contrary. I hope Reagan and the U.S. government (yes even Tip O'Neal and Edward Kennedy!) are satisfied knowing that they have severely jeopordized, to an unprecidented degree, the lives of all United States and European citizens.

Moammar Khadafy was born a poor peasant during a repressive military dictatorship. As a young man, he envisioned the overthrow of this monarchy, and the uniting of Arab nations under his leadership, against Western aggression. Historically, Libya and the Arab world (Palestine, Iran, Egypt, etc.) have been subject to Western imperialism, military conquests, colonization, and other aggressions by such "civilized nations" as Italy, France, Portugal, England, Germany, and the United States. In this light, Khadafy's vision is a somewhat justified reaction to this historical Western aggression. His means—his method of carrying out his vision—although detestable in Western eyes, must be understood as the only means by which a militarily-inferior Libya can fight against, in this case, a militarily-superior United States.

The West continues its racist treatments of the Arab world in the same manner that it treats all Third World peoples—as inferior, illegitimate, and unsovereign (as, for instance, Grenada, Nicaragua, Chile, Guatemala, El Salvador, the Philipines etc., ad infinitum.) Specifically, U.S. monetary and military support for the expansionist, anti-Arab policies of the Israeli government, and its war against Palestine, is seen by Libya, and by most of the Arab world, as a direct attack upon the self-determination of Arab peoples, and indeed, upon their very existence.



It is no wonder then that Reagan sucummed to Libyan heckling in the Gulf of Sidra. Is it such a great threat to "international rights" for Libya to claim more than the 12-mile limit when the Gulf of Sidra leads nowhere, but to Libya? Khadafy has claimed this for years. Why its new importance, except for a show of force? Reagan played right into Khadafy's hand then, and again with the bombing: an internally unstable Libya now has the incentive to corral around Qaddafi, Arab nations (including now Egypt and Jordan) are more likely to express solidarity with Libya, and most importantly, terrorism will escalate in the short run. In the long run, this aggressive act of the United States, unsupported by any Western nation save Britain, will undoubtedly add to the instability in the Middle East, the Mediterranean, and perhaps the whole of western Europe. United States citizens are more vulnerable than ever now that Qaddafi must (and promised to) retaliate.

Reagan claims he does not have any "quarrels with the Libyan people." Why then has he murdered and injured scores of innocent Libyans in his flexing show of force? He claims we acted in "self-defense." Since when is self-defense carried out several days after a physical encounter, with intricate calculations and meditated, destructive intent, in effect, as a shot in the back to the Libyan people? No, this unjustified brutality was not an act of self-defense; it was an act of revenge and aggression. Who is the terrorist now? Or will the murders of the Libyan women, children, and civilians be somenhow rationalized as "regrettable yet unavoidable casualties" of a necessary military action?

Instead of riding U.S. pride into a terrorist act of bombing Libya, Reagan should have: 1) attempted negotiations with Libya in a neutral country, 2) appealed to the World Court of the United Nations, 3) further pushed its NATO allies into talks concerning state terrorism and possible political and economic sanctions to combat Libya with isolation.

Military force should always be a last resort. Indeed, terrorism should rightly be condemned and fought. But what policy will Reagan adopt when Khadafy strikes back? More bombing, and more bombing and...?

Mark Caldeira is a Collegian columnist.

UNITED TECHNOLOGIES IS LOOKING FOR ANOTHER MICHELSON.

In 1882, Albert Michelson made a measurement of the speed of light that stood for two generations. Then, in 1926, he did it again. This time he came within 4 km/sec of today's accepted value. A father of modern physics, Michelson was America's first Nobel winner in the sciences.

LIVEWIRE
BY TOM MIDDLETON

The weekend looks pretty good, some of the local bands are playing but most of the shows will cost you some money. The rest of the week looks lame.

Circle and Free Press will play at the Hatch Tonight at 9 p.m. Both bands are local and have a following. The event will be video taped for you budding media stars.

The Fools and Beat Therapy will be at Pearl Street tonight. The show will cost $6. The Fools play basic mainstream rock, nothing special.

Folk guitarist John Fahey will play the Iron Horse. He plays real well so if you like guitar music you might want to catch this show. The show will be $7 in advance and $8 at the door.

If you can travel to Westfield you can catch James Montgomery tonight at 252 Elm Street for $5. Montgomery plays blues and has been around the Boston area for a long time.

Friday night, The Volcano Suns, Don't Ask and High Speed Vomit are playing at the Red Barn at Hampshire College. The show costs $3 which includes refreshments. The Suns are a three-piece Boston punk band with the old Mission of Burma drummer. Last time I saw them they were good but the sound system wasn't. Don't Ask and High Speed are locals who play around here a bit.

Los Lobos will play at Pearl Street tomorrow night. Although the show will cost you $10 in advance and $12 at the door, it's probably worth it. This band is real good and has a fine reputation for belting out Tex-Mex music. A real ethnic south-of-the-border sound is how they earned their fame and I haven't heard of them putting on a bad show yet.

Luther 'Guitar Jr.' Johnson will play at the Iron Horse. Johnson does real nice acoustic blues, perfect for a place like the Iron Horse. The show will cost you $5.

Saturday night jazz vocalist Al Jarreau will be at the FAC. When I say vocalist, I mean he's not just a simple singer. His band does sort of pop jazz while he sings his heart out. Tickets are $17, cash only.

The Fools will play with Beat Therapy tonight at Pearl St. at 9:30 p.m.

George Thorogood and Johnny Winter are at the Springfield Civic Center Saturday night. This will be strictly an electric blues guitar show mostly on the rock 'n roll side. The price tag is $13.50 in advance and $14.50 the day of the show.

For free you can see the Wildcat O'Halloran Band at Sheehan's in Northampton.

Sunday night Brian Setzer, The Thunderbirds and The Del Lords will play at the Agora Ballroom down in Hartford. Setzer is the former leader of the Stray Cats now on his own on the top 40. The Agora is a nice place too see bands so this show might be real good. Tix are $9.50 in advance and $11 at the door.

Berlin Orchestra: elegant

By MICHAEL GERVASI
Collegian Correspondent

Last Wednesday night, the Berlin Chamber Orchestra came to Bowker Auditorium and put on a technically brilliant performance and played with a delicacy and elegance that would be very difficult to surpass.

The group is made up of members of the Berlin Radio Symphony Orchestra, another well thought of ensemble. They have toured everywhere, this being their second tour of the United States. Instead of a conductor, they are led by Concert Master/ Artistic Director Heinz Schunk, an accomplished soloist who has played with such orchestras as the Berliner Staatskapelle and the Dresdner Philharmonic in such cities as Moscow, Budapest, and Vienna.

They played to their strength to start out with, opening with two Divertimenti by Mozart (k. 136 and 138). They are both very similar in composition and were played in the same manner, starting off a bright energy and broad dynamic changes. They played these first movements very crisply with close precision. The second movements were played with tender and sweet phrasing which had the effect of laying down very soft textures. The highlight of these two works was the last movement of the first piece, a moderately famous Presto. They totally ran away with the sound. It was exciting, delicate, and aggressive all at the same time- a triumph.

I say they played to their strength here, because this is the sort of music that they are particularly suited to. They play precisely with good stylistic interpretation and good balance. their opening pieces were very stylized and demanded seamless phrasing and grace.

After the intermission, however, they didn't continue this practice and played a piece that they weren't very suited to, Serenade in E Major, Op. 22 by Dvorak. They started this rangy piece well, moving easily from a warm, lush sound to a volatile one and back again. The last movement was a little flat, though. It is important when playing this piece that the finale work itself into an explosion of energy.

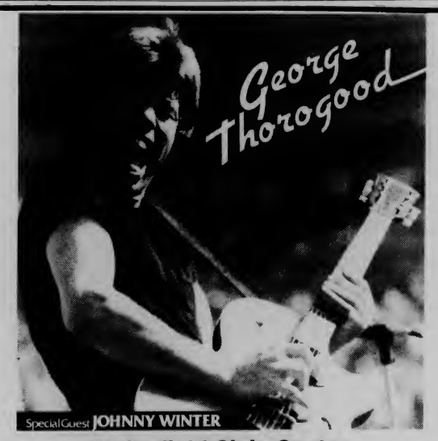
They did redeem themselves, however, playing two encores- Pachelbel's Canon and Air in G by Bach. Here, they went back to what they do well, and did it very well. The flowing textures were produced without any breaks or flaws and by the end I found myself lost in their music, as they achieved what is as close as you can come to perfection. Not bad for a bunch of Godless communists.

MOVIE REVIEW

Black Moon Rising
Directed by Harley Cokliss
Starring Robert Vaughan and Tommy Lee Jones

By JOE SHARTRAND
Collegian Staff

The ads for Black Moon Rising would lead some people to believe that this movie might be an exciting science fiction, directed by John Carpenter. The reality is far from that.



John Carpenter is only one of many writers of this boring "heist" film and the director is Harley Cokliss. This film is dragged through by the director, like an arthritic old tiger in a three-ring circus. This is not a Carpenter film, as the ads misleadingly suggest. In fact it can't even be called a film: it's an amateurish attempt to make money.

The acting, as usual, in this type of film, doesn't exist. The performers do their tricks: drive the car real fast, get beat up, and jump through the air. Characters are not formed into believable human-beings; personalities are regulated to either good or evil. Robert Vaughan is the evil one. He commits heinous actions like jutting out his chin and giving the evil eye to the hero. The hero, Tommy Lee Jones, is a joke. His ugly mug is usually the sole thing on screen and studying the scars on his face is not my idea of fun.

Bubba Smith also gets a part as a police officer with a missing front tooth; his acting ability is as evident as that front tooth.

Besides having to contend with atrocious acting, the duped movie-goer has to watch very boring action sequences. Most of the action sequences consist of one car chasing another at break-neck speed through the streets of the city. Since there is no sympathy for the characters, no one cares how fast they go, or whether they crash into a brick wall. When Tommy Lee Jones gets roughed up and kicked in the pants nine hundred thousand times, nobody cares. Jones is a non-entity in this film, and the action sequences fall apart partly because of this.

With boring action sequences, dialogue, and acting, this film doesn't have a chance to be exciting. Even though the "heist" film was never a very exciting genre in the first place, at least some of the chase scenes could have been livened up a bit. Instead this film plods along, accomplishing nothing, except to make John Carpenter look like another boring amateur.

Armstrong has been particularly potent, scoring 12 goals in her last three games. . . Hixon cited the defensive play of Kocot as being a major factor in Sunday's win over Northeastern. Unable to contend with the physical strength of bulldozer-like Husky scorer Gail Zimmerman, who terrorized the UMass defense for seven goals on the day, sophomore defensman Amy Robertson switched coverage assignments with Kocot to allow Kocot to try her luck against Zimmerman. . . Kocot shut Zimmerman down with the help of Robertson and the rest of the defense. . . Northeastern marked the first appearance of the season for junior defensman Emily Humiston who missed the season's first five games with momonucleosis. Humiston played 15 minutes of the second half. . . The game featured two Gazelle yellow card warnings: Scott for slashing, and Griswold for initiating a shoving match near the Husky bench. . . Both coaches agreed that the referees were below par and failed to promote good conduct on either side thanks to inconsistent calls.

Women's lacrosse notebook

Gazelles now ranked sixth

By JOHN NOLAN
Collegian Staff

Granted a two-day layoff after Sunday's victory at Northeastern, the unbeaten University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team returned to the practice field yesterday rested and eager to prepare for Sunday's 1 p.m. clash against nationally-ranked New Hampshire at NOPE.

The Gazelles also found out that they jumped to sixth in the Division 1 national poll, up from ninth, after victories at Harvard and Northeastern.

Worn down by a week of grueling practices and road games, the 6-0 Gazelles were fortunate to escape Northeastern's Parson's Field with an 11-8 victory over the winless Huskies. UMass, playing its fourth game in seven days, was sluggish and unable to impress its offensive game upon their inferior opponents.

Northeastern head coach Joan Broderick thought that the Gazelles had come out flat and appeared unable to play up to their capabilities.

"We caught them on an off-day. They were flat," she said. "They were fortunate to win playing the way they did but that's a credit to them because they are much more experienced than we are and have more depth."

Hixon, who embarked on a recruiting drive to New York after the game, said that she thought the rest would be welcomed by the team because fatigue hurt its performance.

"The rest will do them good. We played three games last week and we've been running really hard," Hixon said after the game. "But we can't let one day disrupt our confidence."

"I wouldn't say we're physically tired so much as mentally tired," junior defensman Chris Kocot said. "After playing Harvard (Thursday), people might not have been ready for another game. The two days off will give us time to get ready against New Hampshire the way we did against Harvard."

Heading towards the stretch drive in their season, the Gazelles are going to need all the rest they can get. UMass faces New England rival UNH (which is ranked fourth in the nation) at NOPE field on Sunday and nationally-ranked Dartmouth in New Hampshire next Wednesday. The Gazelles will travel to Temple University to tackle the top-ranked Owls on April 26, and will finish its regular season the following day at Rutgers University.

Gazelle Grapevine: The Gazelles have scored 85 goals in six games this season for a healthy 14.1 goals-per-game average. . . opponents have scored just 39 goals (6.5 gpg.) against goalkeeper's Ann Scileppi and Pam Stone, who started the season's first two games before being converted into the starting left defensive wing.

UMass offensive leadership is as follows: junior Lisa Griswold (26 goals-11 assists-37 points), Bunny Forbes (19-10-29), Ginny Armstrong (21-3-24), Mary Scott (10-5-15), Cathy Fuhrman (5-5-10), Becky Bekampis (4-1-5) and Adrienne Recla (0-1-1).

Northeast does not recieve an automatic bid to the national tournament and would only place its top seed in the national tourney.

That, coupled with the fact that the Atlantic 10 conference no longer recieves an automatic bid, means that the Minutewomen are in a must-win situation if they are to seriously contend for a national tourney bid.

"These are very important games for both teams. It will definitely give an indication of who will represent the Northeast," UConn head coach Karen Mullins said. "But there still is a long way to go to see who will be the representative."

"They are a very good team. It's always been a tough doubleheader against UConn," UMass head coach Elaine Sortino said. "It's going to be a very hard fought contest."

UConn is led by by senior pitcher Mary Lynn-Hares, who is batting at a .362 clip with 10 runs-batted-in. She is also the number two ace on the Huskie pitching staff, with a 10-4 mark and a 0.99 earned-run-average. Lynn-Hares recently set a school record for strikeouts in a season, chalking up 79 K's in 99 innings .

The Huskies are also paced by senior shortstop Jodi Dinga (.288, five RBI's) and outfielder Lynn Wisniewski (.263, 10 RBI's). Senior right-hander Cherie Anderson leads the Huskie pitching corps with a 7-4 record and a 0.33 ERA, allowing just four earned runs in 84 innings pitched. Both Lynn-Hares and Anderson have six shutout performances each to their credit.

The pitching staff is still dominating, with a combined 0.46 ERA.

Gorillas get by St. John's, 9-6

Redmen are tough, but UM's 6-1

Senior midfielder Perry Seale looks to pass yesterday in action against St. John's on Boyden Field. The Gorillas won, 9-6.

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

It wasn't easy, it wasn't pretty, it wasn't one to remember and it wasn't that impressive.

But it was a win, and that's what counts.

The eighth-ranked University of Massachusetts lacrosse team breathed a collective sigh of relief yesterday, opening a four-game homestand with a 9-6 victory over St. John's University before 1,500 fans at Boyden Field.

The Gorillas went to 6-1 with their fourth straight win of the season with the victory over the Redmen, who slumped to 6-5, but more than challenged UMass.

An outstanding effort by senior goaltender Joe Weingart (29 saves, 21 in the first half) kept the Redmen in the game, while the pesky St. John's offense almost won it with a late rush.

"I knew this wouldn't be an easy one," said UMass coach Dick Garber. "They were ready for us."

Junior attackman Greg Cannella and sophomore attackman Kelley Carr led UMass with three goals each. Junior midfielder Doug Musco added two with junior attackman Tom Carmean adding one. SJU was led by Mike Bolger with two.

The first period was the most frustrating of the season for UMass. The Gorillas outshot the Redmen 14-1 and controlled the ball for the most of the 15 minutes, yet came away with a scoreless tie—thanks to the work of Weingart.

The Gorillas won't see many goalies play as well as the senior from Levittown did yesterday. UMass took their best shots through the St. John's zone, but Weingart was there every time. Diving though the crease, eating up low shots and appearing suddenly to fill an open net. He alone kept the Redmen from suffering an early blow-out.

Weingart continued to stuff the Gorillas early in the second period as first Carr and then Carmean were denied from close range. Finally, with 9:57 to go in the half, Musco took a feed from sophomore attackman Pat Cain and beat Weingart for a 1-0 lead. Weingart kept his composure, robbing Rich Abbott and then Carmean.

St. John's spent the game shadowing Carmean, holding UMass' leading scorer to a goal and one assist, but the All-American gave the Gorillas a 2-0 lead, beating Weingart with 4:34 to go.

Musco then took Carr's feed in front of the cage for a 3-0 lead with 4:00 left. Carr then went one-on-one and snuck a shot in to make it 4-0 and SJU was reeling as the half ended.

But the Redmen owned the third period, outscoring UMass 3-1 to close to within two, 5-3, going into the final quarter.

Dan Murphy beat UMass goalie Sal LoCascio (12 saves in another solid effort) just 25 seconds into the half as SJU won one of the only four face-offs they took all day.

Carr answered right back, about two minutes later and UMass was back up by four, 5-1. But Carr was then caught offside trying to slowdown a Redman break, and Glen Falcone scored with three seconds left in the penalty to make it 5-2 with 11:41 left in the period. Bolger then scored to make it 5-3.

Carr (assisted by a persistent Carmean) scored to open the fourth quarter as Seamus McGovern (13-of-17) won the draw and fed Carmean, who passed to Carr in front of Weingart.

But Bolger, and then Ken Renga, scored and SJU was within one at 6-5 with 12:40 to go. It was cruch time for the Gorillas.

Some excellent rising work by Musco, coupled with better passing (and keeping the shots away from the ground where Weingart was toughest) resulted in the winning goal wwith 8:44 left as Carr spotted Cannella in front of the pipes and the former junior college player-of-the-year hit nothing but cotton.

LoCascio stayed tough, denying several good St. John's bids, but Tom Draghi took advantage of an unsettled situation and beat LoCascio, to make it 7-6 with 5:04 left. As a light drizzle fell, the fans, and the UMass sideline, grew nervous.

But Cannella scored with 3:06 left, circling in to beat Weingart and UMass was comfortably ahead by two. SJU then pressed, and Greg Fisk found Cannella open with four seconds left and it was 9-6.

"We survived," said Garber. "And that's what counts. I think this game will toughen us up."

Gorilla Grumblings: UMass defenseman Gerry Byrne is a close friends of Weingart, growing up on the same street as the Redman goalie . . UMass outshot SJU 52-27, had a 64-45 groundball advantage, but was one-for-10 on man-ups.

Offense paces UMass over BU

Minutemen take fourth straight, despite errors

By MATT GERKE
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts baseball team's offense more than made up for its lack of defense in yesterday's game against Boston University at Lorden Field.

The Minutemen jumped out to a 4-0 lead in the first inning and overcame seven errors to post a 6-3 victory over the Terriers at Lorden Field.

With the victory, UMass is 8-15 overall, having won seven of its last eight games. The Minutemen now look ahead to a big three-game series with Rhode Island as they search for their first win in Atlantic 10 play after an 0-5 league start.

"I was a little disappointed," said UMass manager Dick Bergquist. "A win is always nice but I thought we were capable of more. We've been working on our defense but we obviously have to improve some more."

For the Minutemen, junior lefthander Steve Allard started and went two innings before freshman Jeff Richardson came on to pitch three strong innings and earn the win.

The Terriers, 2-17, jumped on the board in the first inning. Dennis Gadbois walked, moved to third on a Jeff Fisher single and scored on a sacrifice fly by Joe Roberts.

UMass answered with four runs in the bottom of the frame. Darrin O'Conner got things started by leading off with a blast over the right-centerfield fence to tie the score, 1-1.

One out later, Jay Zerner poked a single to right field for his first of three hits on the day. Sean Flint hit a potential double-play grounder to short but Zerner beat the throw to second and both runners were safe.

After Steve Kern struck out, Steve Allen powered a triple to right-center to give the Minutemen a 3-1 lead. Allen scored on a Mike Chambers single to make it 4-1 before BU starter and loser Scott Tashman, 0-3, got out of the inning.

"We hit pretty well," Bergquist said. "But I think Tashman really hung in there."

The Minutemen registered another run in the second inning. O'Conner led off with a walk, stole second and scored on a Matt Sheran double to expand the lead to 5-1.

"Our hitting was off until the end of the game," said Terrier coach Bill Mahoney sarcastically, "but that's our style. We get behind early and then the chase is on. We had a chance to get a double play in the first inning and hold them to only one run. If we had done that, it might have been a different story."

At that point, the bats calmed down a bit and although both teams managed to put men on base, neither could push across a run until the eighth, when the Minutemen tallied again.

Mike Owens led off the UMass eighth with a single to left, moved to second on an error and scored on a Zerner single to make it 6-1.

"UMass looked good," Mahoney said. "They swing the bat well but they need work on their defense."

The defense almost came back to haunt the Minutemen in the ninth as the Terriers scored a pair of unearned runs with the help of two UMass errors, but Ken Greer shut them down to notch his first save of the season.

"I don't think we were overly impressive," Bergquist said. "But this puts us in a better frame of mind and we need that because we have some big games coming up."

Minuteman Mutterings: O'Conner has led off two consecutive games with home runs. . .Zerner gave himself a nice birthday present, raising his batting average 18 points to .405. . .The Minutemen are now 7-4 at Lorden Field and 7-7 since their Florida trip. . .Junior second baseman Rob Holiday grounded out in the first inning to halt his consecutive on-base streak at 13. . .Sheran's double raised his hitting streak to 10 games while O'Conner raised his to eight.

Softball at UConn for two

By ROGER CHAPMAN
Collegian Staff

Make no mistake about it, these are two very big games for the University of Massachusetts softball team.

The Minutewomen, 23-5 and ranked 20th in the country, battle regional nemisis University of Connecticut in a crucial doubleheader at Storrs. UMass is also ranked number one in the bi-weekly Northeast poll.

Why this doubleheader is so important is simple. The Huskies, 18-10 on the season, are ranked second in the Northeast and are coming off a split with the University of Rhode Island. UConn also took three-out-of-four from Adelphi last week, including a 3-2 win in the third place game of the Penn St. Lady Lion Tournament.

The Huskies also swept a doubleheader from Penn State along the way. Whoever looks the most impressive today, and it will probably take a sweep to do it, will have a solid lock on the number one spot in the poll.

This is crucial due to the NCAA post-season playoff structure. The Drinks poison on college TV

By LESLEY CLARK
Collegian Staff

A 17-year-old Belchertown youth took his own life Wednesday night at Hampshire College, downing what witnesses and authorities said was a mixture of cyanide and Kool-Aid on a closed-circuit television show.

Viewers and participants in the show said they watched Andrew L. Hermann, a student at Amherst Regional High School, drink the poison, but they thought it was a joke.

Amherst police said Hermann was pronounced dead on arrival shortly after 11:25 p.m. at Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton. An autopsy was scheduled for yesterday, but forensic officials refused comment.

Hermann's brother, Stephen Hermann, a Hampshire student, was co-host of the satirical show, which was filmed in a studio in the basement of the Johnson Library and carried live on the college's cable system. Police have seized two tapes of the show.

"We figured he was kidding," said one student who viewed the show but requested anonymity. "We had no clue it was for real."

Phillip Jackson, producer of the show, said Andrew launched into a "long, biting speech about what was wrong with Hampshire," including its admissions policy and other problems.

At the end of his monologue, Andrew said, "Now I'm going to join my brothers and drink cyanide-impregnated Kool-Aid," and drank about one-half a mug of purple liquid, according to Jackson.

Jackson said Andrew then hugged someone, sat down and collapsed to the floor as the camera zoomed in on him.

Jackson said he was busy running credits. Later, he said, he saw Andrew "lying behind a table, not moving but making weird breathing noises.

"Everyone said it's a joke, he drank cyanide, he's just playing it up," Jackson said. "We had to close up so we carried him out. Security came and called an ambulance."

Stephen Hermann yesterday told the Associated Press, "I had intuitive feelings that something was going wrong, but it just didn't register ... He said he would die for his views about the administration of this campus. It was tongue-in-cheek humor ... but what he did was serious."

He described his brother as very intelligent but bored with high school, and said Andrew had been accepted to Hampshire for next fall and was going to attend.

Jackson said Andrew seemed composed, his speech was coherent, and his suicide appeared to be well planned. "He wore white all the time," Jackson noted. "Last night he wore all black.

"He was pissed off at the delays in the show," he said. "He kept saying he had to have 15 minutes ... He was driven."

The program, "The Voice of the Top Two," is known for its bizarre and offbeat content. Previous episodes have included a televised enema, defecation and the killing of two rats.

Gays plan picket today

By DAVE BOARDMAN
Collegian Staff

Gay and lesbian students plan to picket the Whitmore Administration Building today in an effort to make administrators aware of repercussions from an anti-gay speech last week at the University of Massachusetts.

Paul Throne, a member of the Lesbian, Bisexual, Gay Alliance, said the protest—scheduled to start at 8:30 a.m.—should inform students and administrators of harassment and violence against the gay community since anti-gay activist Paul Cameron spoke last Friday.

Throne said Cameron's speech has spawned verbal and physical attacks on gay and lesbian students.

Students carrying purple balloons distributed by the LBGA were chased by men on campus after Cameron's speech, and openly gay men and lesbians have received threatening phone calls, Throne said.

One gay man, who spoke under condition of anonymity, said that since the speech, in which Cameron called for imprisonment and castration of gays, "There's a general feeling of not feeling safe. The atmosphere has completely changed, it just doesn't feel right."

Gay and lesbian students also plan to circulate a petition today calling for an end to open forums at the University for speakers who call for violence against any part of the community.

The petition calls for Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey to condemn the measures advocated by Cameron, and to

Lobbyist: Education not 1st priority

By DANIEL MILLER
Collegian Staff

The executive director of the state lobbying group Citizens for Limited Taxation said last night that avoiding another recession is a greater priority than federal and state subsidies of higher education.

During a talk before 25 people in Memorial Hall, Barbara Anderson responded to a request that she assess the effect of the Gramm-Rudman deficit-reduction law on student loans.

"I'm not sure that we should guarantee college educations while spending ourselves into a recession," she said. "During a recession, education isn't going to make any difference. Educated people sold apples on street corners during the last depression," she said.

Citing Gramm-Rudman, she said, "I would generally support anything the [federal] government does to reduce the deficit."

Sixty percent of Massachusetts voters approved Proposition 2-1/2 in 1980, which was put on the ballot by Anderson's group. The binding referendum restrains municipalities from raising property taxes higher than 2.5 percent each year.

Proposition 2-1/2 was approved because Massachusetts residents were impatient with the governor and legislature's ineffectiveness in reducing property taxes, Anderson said. In 1979, Massachusetts property taxes were 81 percent above the national average, she said.

She said the Citizens for Limited Taxation and the success of Proposition 2-1/2 "has established Massachusetts taxpayers as a dominant political force in Massachusetts.

"Since proposition 2-1/2, revenues have gone up 16 percent; inflation has stayed below 4 percent," she said.

Security measures are tightened at airports around the world in response to terrorist threats.

White House stands by attack on Libya

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Reagan administration, facing a spiral of international terrorism, defended its bombing raid on Libya as "absolutely the right thing to do" and said yesterday that the world will benefit in the long run from a hard-line stance against terrorists.

President Reagan called the slaying of three Britons in Lebanon a tragedy that demonstrates that "terrorism is something that we have to deal with once and for all, all of us together."

A note found by the hostages bodies on a mountain highway outside Beirut claimed one of the victims was a CIA agent, and said the killings were in retaliation for the British-supported US attack on Libya. Presidential spokesman Larry Speakes said he did not know of any ties between any of the victims and the CIA.

Another Briton was seized by gunmen en route to the Beirut airport and a previously unknown group claimed responsibility.

While refusing to link the attacks to Monday's bombing of Libya, Speakes said, "We were aware there was a potential for increased activity."

Terrorists answer bombing with violence

(AP)—Terror struck back against the United States and its friends on three continents yesterday, in an explosion of vengeful fury ignited by the American bombing of Libya.

Terrorists "executed" three kidnap victims in Lebanon, tried to blow up an El Al jetliner in London, and tossed firebombs at US targets in Tunisia.

In city after city around the world, angry crowds swirled around US embassies and screamed their hatred for "USA Agressor."

Bomb-disposal squads scurried around European capitals in response to threats. American embassy staff members were being airlifted out of Sudan. In Libya itself, nervous Westerners looked desperately for ways out of the country.

And in Moscow, in a possibly ominous development, the Soviet Union summoned foreign ambassadors and formally asserted its right to free passage through the seas and air around Soviet-aligned Libya, a move that might signal Kremlin intentions to move naval vesses or other military equipment into the tense Mediterranean.

The Reagan administration was clearly braced for further shocks.

"We are prepared for an increase in terrorism," White House spokesman Larry Speakes said in Washington.

But he said the US leadership believes its bombing of Libyan cities Tuesday will "in the long run ... reduce the risk to Americans" from terror attacks.

In Lebanon, retaliation for the US raid was swift and bloody.

The bodies of three kidnap victims - identified as writer Alec Collett, 64, and teachers Leigh Douglas, 34, and Philip Padfield, 40, all Britons - were dumped on a highway, each shot once in the head.

A note found nearby claimed they were US and British spies and had been "executed" by "Arab commando cells" in reprisal for the attack on Libya. Collett was kidnapped 13 months ago and Douglas and Padfield last month.

Arab anger has been directed at the British government because if it allowed the United States to mount the air attack on Libya from a US air base in Britain.

Soon after the bodies were found, a British television cameraman was abducted by gunment in Beirut. Eighteen kidnapped foreigners, including six Americans, are still missing in Lebanon.

In London yesterday, an alert security guard foiled what could have been a terrorist massacre.

The El Al airplane guard, at Heathrow Airport, found a bomb in the false bottom of an Irishwoman's hand luggage as she tried to board the Israeli airline's Flight 016 to Tel Aviv. About 360 people were aboard the targeted Boeing 747.

The woman was arrested but her name was not immediately released. British police said she may have been duped by her boyfriend, and Arab, and may not have known about the explosives. A search was mounted for the man.

In Tunis, someone in a passing car hurled a firebomb at the compound housing US Marine guards and other staff members of the US Embassy in Tunisia. An embassy spokesman said an American-owned automobile caught fire but no one was hurt. Later, two young Tunisians on a motorbike set two more cars ablaze with firebombs near the compound, police said. One man was arrested.

To the south, in the Sudanese capital of Khartoum, the US Embassy was preparing for an airlift evacuation of more than 200 embassy staff members and dependants.

Gunmen in Khartoum shot and seriously wounded an American embassy technician Tuesday near the Libyan embassy. An embassy statement said the anti-American threats issued by neighboring Libya, which has grown politically closer to Sudan in recent months, forced the evacuation.

Fifteen thousand protestors demonstrated Wednesday in Khartoum, burning American flags and chanting "Down, Down USA!"

Since Tuesday's US attack on Libya, the tight security at embassies and other US installations worldwide has been toughened still further. Embassies are receiving about a dozen credible bomb threats a day, State Department officials said.

Registration begins April 22.

Repaying loans harder for women

By SANDRA DIAS
Collegian Staff

A combination of unequal pay for equal work, fewer financial aid dollars and limited access to traditionally male-oriented, higher-paying jobs has resulted in a growing number of women graduates unable to pay back student loans, according to financial aid officials.

A December 1985 study of Guaranteed Student Loans by the US Department of Education confirmed that "the increasing concentration of aid in Guaranteed Student Loans tends to skew subsidies away from the traditional emphasis on equity."

In a similar study conducted in 1983 by the National Education Association, it was reported that in public universities the average loan for low-income dependent undergraduate males was $1195, while low-income females received $927. Middle-income males received $1,449 in federal loans while middle-income females received $1,283.

Although he said he was unaware of the study, Arthur Jackson, director of Financial Aid Services at the University of Massachusetts, said the sex of the individual is not asked for in the application for a National Direct or Guaranteed Student Loan.

Jackson said that women and minorities have not made progress in areas of study dominated by male students; often areas with more lucrative career possibilities. In addition, Jackson said, "there is a lack of clear information available to students, particularly women and minorities, on how to go about getting the financial aid that is available."

The NEA reported that in 1981-1982:

- Women received 26.5 percent of the masters degrees issued in computer sciences and 9 percent of degrees in engineering from public universities.
- Women students earned 72.3 percent of masters degrees in education and 75.8 percent in the health sciences, both of which are generally lower paying professions.

"Lower paying jobs could definitely lead to an inability to repay student loans. Such discrimination is a cultural and societal problem which many women have to face," said Carol Crane, communication director of the Massachusetts Higher Educational Council.

Crane said the maximum amount of time allowed to repay a loan is 10 years if the amount exceeds $5,000 and usually five years for a loan below $5,000.

"After that a person can seek a deferral of repayment for up to three years if they can prove that a they are still enrolled in school, are in the military or Peace Corps, or are unemployed. If they cannot, then it is referred to a collection agency," Crane said.

Marilyn Ramsey, a program assistant at the Everywomen's Center at UMass, is a woman facing such problems. With expenses averaging $700 a month, she said she cannot break even on a $160 a week paycheck, which goes to support both herself and her son.

Ramsey said she is also working to pay back three student loans; two of which she received a minimal deferral on. Ramsey believes that her problem is a fairly common one.

"Many women, especially the single, older non-traditional students with children have greater needs than a traditional male student. In the situation of a divorce, over 60 percent of the men involved do not have to pay child support," she said. "The woman is left with both the emotional and financial burden.

"Working, going to school, and raising even one child is murder, " Ramsey said. "School is demanding enough."

Both Jackson and Crane agreed that Massachusetts could boast a better record than most states. "Massachusetts is best in the nation in terms of loan repayments. Only about 5 percent default," Crane said.

Jackson said 9 percent of UMass students default on National Direct Student Loans while there is a 3.5 percent default rate on Guaranteed Student Loans.

WSYL reopening with a purpose

By PAUL HICKEY
Collegian Correspondent

WSYL is a newly-reopened radio station with a purpose—to help the underdog and become a training ground for students, according to promotion director Cath Alman.

"I believe there are many different levels the station can be used at," said Alman. "We'll train anyone who wants to be trained and give them radio experience without the pressures of a large station."

The radio station, located in the Sylvan Residential Area and broadcasting at 105.1 FM, has reopened after nearly two semesters of being shut down due to difficulties with new equipment the station purchased last spring, Alman said.

"We were able to reopen because of the hard work and dedication of the nearly 50 students working for the station," she said.

The musical programing of the station will feature music ranging from punk rock, heavy metal, jazz and blues—"everything but top 40," Alman said.

One of the station's main goals for the semester is to help local bands, Alman said. In order to accomplish this, they plan to sponsor a concert featuring five local bands, April 24, in the Student Union Ballroom.

"There's no outlet for the bands; we want to give them a time and a place to play," Alman said.

"We're also willing to help groups that feel they need more support and exposure," she said. "The station can be a great form of media, not only entertainment. We'll broadcast all public service messages."

While some remaining technical difficulties are being corrected, the station will be broadcasting on a limited range from 9 a.m. to midnight.

Senate recommends computer access goal

By NANCY KLINGENER
Collegian Staff

The Faculty Senate yesterday unanimously recommended that the administration work to give undergraduates an average of six hours a week of computer workstation access by 1991.

The senate debated the issue for about 20 minutes before voting, with objections raised about the lack of cost estimates and the limited aspects of the specific six-hour goal.

"We cannot tell you yet how much this program is going to cost," said Murray Eisenberg, head of the University Computer Committee. But he assured the senate that funds for increased computer access would not compete with funds for other purposes, like library books.

The purpose of approving the motion, he said, was "to give a clear signal to the administration" that the faculty supports the goal of increased computer access for all students.

Senator Marsha Rudman, a rules committee member, said she thought the motion should be approved, but "without focusing on what seems to be one small piece" of a program to increase computer use.

"My problem is that I find the motion too narrow," she said.

Provost Richard D. O'Brien, however, said the motion was important "to provide a number, a starting point for our [the administration's] calculations."

According to a report from the computer committee, undergraduates next fall would already spend an average of three hours a week at computers if enough access were available.

Also approved unanimously at yesterday's meeting were 19 new courses and revisions to the senate bylaws.

Four courses in New Testament Greek, four additions to the Inquiry Program, two new English as a second language courses and a conceptual physics laboratory were among those approved.

The only item on the agenda that was not passed was the elimination of the Academic Personnel Policies Committee, proposed as part of a motion containing various bylaw revisions.

One of two elected bodies within the senate, the personnel policies commmittee has been inactive and hasn't held elections for the past three years, according to Rules Committee chairman David A. Booth.

English professor Howard O. Brogan objected to the elimination of the committee because the faculty union "has been able to have very little effect on policy," a function the committee had served in the past, he said.

The senate voted, again unanimously, to return the issue to the rules committee, which will consider making the policy committee appointed rather than elected, Booth said.

Shopper shuttle is operating, but ridership is low

By STEPHEN JOYCE
Collegian Correspondent

The shopper shuttle, which runs from Brittany Manor and Puffton Village apartment complexes to two supermarkets, has been back in operation for more than a month, but unless ridership increases the line may shut down again.

Part of the Pioneer Valley Transit Authority system, the shuttle was started for the third time on March 15, after the Commuter Area Government's proposal to reinstitute the line was approved by the UMass Transit Advisory Board, the UMass Transit Service and PVTA officials in Springfield.

The shuttle runs six times each Saturday from the two complexes to stops near Price Chopper and Super Stop & Shop markets. It started after the CAG received more than 400 positive responses in a survey distributed in January and February.

The shuttle's cost, from March 15 until its last run on May 24, is $1455.54, or $19.02 a trip. Funding was requested by the CAG from the town of Amherst, the Graduate Student Senate, the Student Government Association Finance Committee and the Southwest Area Government.

CAG spokesman David Martin conceded that the line is not as successful as he had hoped, but added that a lack of publicity for the service was a factor. He said a publicity campaign is under way and that he is optimistic, especially since Louis' Foods on North Pleasant Street is scheduled to move from its present location to the junction of Amity Street and University Drive.

Al Byam, operations manager for UMass Transit, said that if ridership does not increase, particularly to the grocery stops, service will end because of a "lack of funding and interest."

Byam said he wants to see ridership of 17 to 20 percent increase to at least 33 percent of seats available. "We would like to see at least one-third of the passengers carried go down to the shopping area and we have not seen that yet," he said.

Republican Club office to be moved from PIRG

Because of repeated reports of the Republican Club harassing MassPIRG in their office, the Space Committee of the Campus Center Board of Governors announced last night that one of the groups will be moved into a different office space.

Currently the Republican Club, MassPIRG and the Theater Guild share an office. Several members of the the Republican Club are members of Students for Participatory Democracy, the right wing student group opposing MassPIRG in a February referendum.

Members of the Republican club have allegedly disrupted MassPIRG's meetings, removed table tents and passed out bogus posters, said Tom Butler, the space coordinator for the Board.

"We decided one of the groups will be moved at the beginning of the (fall) semester and we will facilitate the move for all members involved," said Tom Butler.

"It's not an attack on any specific group, it's better for everybody," said Rayna Sargent, the campus organizer of MassPIRG.

The Board sent a notice to the Republican Club February 27 which said, "if members of your organization continue with the alleged harrassment of MassPIRG the Board may...consider the revocation of your organization's space."

Gilbert Stair, president of the Republican Club, was unavailable for comment.

The Board also unanimously passed its constitution last night.

If it is passed by the Board of Trustees, it will be the first time since 1972 the Board will have a constitution ratified.

"Since 1978, the Board has been run with a letter of agreement with University administration," said Alex Zucker, the chairman of the board.

Her organization is lobbying for an initiative-petition bill currently in the legislature, she said. The bill restricts the state from raising taxes above annual growth in wages and salaries.

Anderson said annual wage and salary growth for last year rose 9.4 percent, while taxes went up 16 percent. "When the economy slows down, the government is going to have all these programs on their hands [and no one to pay for them]," she said.

UMass-built concrete canoe races tomorrow

By LINA PANAGOPOULOU
Collegian Staff

It didn't break any speed records, but at least it did not sink like a rock.

A canoe made of concrete floated smoothly yesterday on the campus pond, while the group of 14 students and faculty from the civil engineering department who built it cheered enthusiastically.

The final voyage for the 17-foot, 275-pound canoe will be tomorrow at the Northeast Regional Canoe Race, sponsored by the student chapter of the American Society of Civil Engineering at the University of Maine at Orono.

"The canoes are judged on design and construction, construction materials, project fundamentals and finish," said David Cannone, a senior who helped build the canoe. An eight-mile race at the Kendusceag River follows the judging and takes about three hours to complete, he said.

"The canoe is built of an aggregate mixture of sand and rocks. It is not all cement, so we named it the 'Aggregate Queen'," said Alice Thorogood, president of the UMass chapter of the engineering society.

The team started construction after spring break, and every member of the group volunteered time for the project.

"It cost $500 for the materials and we got funding from the alumni and the western Massachusetts chapter," Thorogood said.

UMass was first challenged by the University of Maine in 1974, and the competition has grown to six schools participating in the race this year.

"It floats well. We expect to win best design and construction, and to do the best in the rest," Canoone said.

"It's a completely insane talk show," said Stefan Ellis, a Hampshire student. "People expect the unexpected."

Students yesterday were tight-lipped about the incident. One said the campus "had a right to be left alone during a sad time."

"Individuality and doing your own thing are really stressed at Hampshire," Ellis said. "People occasionally get so isolated that there's no way to turn."

Newman phone-a-thon raising part of budget

By BOB KIEVRA
Collegian Staff

More than 200 students, staff and alumni of the University of Massachusetts are taking part in a telephone pledge drive this month in hope of raising $100,000 for the Newman Center.

The Catholic center on North Pleasant Street started the four-week phone-a-thon March 31, intent on making itself self-sufficient for the first time in its 23-year history.

"In the past we've been able to raise two-thirds of our operating costs from Sunday collections, donations, and income from the cafeteria," said Rev. Joseph Quigley, the center's director.

"That means that about one-third of our budget, or approximately $100,000, has been generously contributed by the Diocese of Springfield. By having the phone-a-thon, we're trying to raise this money ourselves for the first time," he said.

With one week remaining before the drive ends on April 24, more than $50,000 has been pledged, Quigley said. Rev. John Smegal, also of the Newman Center, said many students in the five-college area "find the center to be a home away from home. We're friendly and caring people who help students make sense of those sometimes overwhelming college problems."

"Right now we're not asking students for one red penny," Smegal said. "What we wanted was them to help us out by donating three hours of their time to contact our Catholic alumni. The response has been tremendous."

First-year student Tracey Harwood said she is donating her time to the center because it "offers so much to all kinds of students. I'm glad we have it on campus."

John Murphy, a junior public relations major, said he is participating in the phone-a-thon because "They've helped me a lot over the years. I'm just trying to return the favor."

Quigley said, "The enthusiasm level throughout the center has been at a fever pitch ... everyone wants to help out so much. I'm really gratified."

Karate marathon hosts clubs Sunday

The University of Massachusetts Okinawa Gojo Ryu karate club will take part in a 24-hour karate marathon beginning 9 a.m. Sunday in the Student Union Ballroom to raise money for the Save the Children Fund.

Kimo Wall of the club said he expects about 80 members of his and other martial arts clubs to participate. The marathon will be conducted according to the "traditional Okinawa style," he said.

The first break in the marathon will not occur until after the first five hours, with more breaks becoming more frequent toward the end, he said.

As well as all martial arts groups, the general public is invited. Wall said that during last year's marathon, "people came expecting just to watch and ended up training."

Last year's marathon raised more than $2,000, according to Michael Wall of Alpha Phi Omega fraternity, which is sponsoring the event. The money raised is being used to help three children, in El Salvador, India, and Ethiopia, for two years, he said.

Fight not over

At 11:30 p.m. last Saturday I glanced around at the Curry Hicks Cage. I saw decorations everywhere, a stage set up for a band to play on, two large video screens, students in green (security shirts) at stations around the cage, and a huge picture of Jerry Lewis staring at me from behind the stage. As I looked into his eyes I could imagine what he'd have to say.

I looked out onto the dance floor and I thought I saw 1,000 students impatiently awaiting the first band. I kept thinking how good it was going to feel to give a check for $15,000 to the Muscular Dystrophy Association. Yes, Jerry Lewis would have been proud! At 2:30 a.m. I glanced out at the floor again. The Modern Pladz were playing to a group of about 25 dancers. I had just checked on the money-raised figure..$681. I wondered how it had failed, why there were not 1,000 people dancing. Why? At the end of the night/day we had raised $1,500 for MDA.

To see Robbie Scott (the MDA poster-child) dancing in his wheelchair was enough to make me cry. He is so strong. I was hoping more students would have been able to see Robbie dance. But it was more than just hoping, I was counting on more students seeing him dance. For those people who did, it was inspiring. Robbie even said he hoped more people would have come, but it didn't matter because he was having fun. So were the people who did attend the dance. We all were making wants to do something this year it is not too late. Any contributions can be made through the SGA President's Office. Every little bit helps so don't worry; you can't give too little.

To the people who danced, to the people who showed up, to everyone who endured memories.

This year's dance only raised a small amount for Muscular Dystrophy, however, Chris Scott, Robbie's mother who had been there with her family since 4 a.m., said to me after the dance "that one of the dollars we raised may be the dollar that finds the cure." I hope that it's true. Our fight against MD is not over, it has just begun. Next year, we will raise $10,000. If anyone my "nervous breakdown" with me, thanks for the support, especially Stacy, Bill, Tim, Doreen from SAO, and a special thanks to Kyle and Shana, who kept me going. To the rest of the campus; wait until next year!

Greg Rothman, co-coordinator MDA/SGA SuperDance

Lack of incentive

The political science department's refusal to extend Debra Gross' contract is unfortunate. Many students are outraged; they describe her as an erudite, personable and stimulating instructor and some think she has been let go for petty reasons.

The episode is symptomatic of the administration's failure to promote teaching as much as it promotes research and publication. A similar incident last year, when Bob Cooley lost his position in the mathematics department, further illustrates that professors who are well respected by students often do not enjoy similar esteem and support from their superiors.

When a university undervalues teaching and service, students suffer. UMass professors who hold extra office hours, serve on committees or do other unglamorous service for the community do it altruistically.

They know that when it is time for promotions, merit pay or contract renewal, being published will likely be seen as more important than helping students.

Because women are underrepresented on the University faculty, this system is especially hard on them. Though women professors make up only 12 percent of the faculty, many female students specifically choose them as advisors. With a student population of roughly one-half women, female professors are often overworked.

Students have jumped to the conclusion that Gross was the victim of foul play. Publicly, Gross has said there was "no malice, no conspiracy" in the decision; she was dismissed for tardiness in finishing her doctoral thesis. Still, one wonders why, if she is so talented, arrangements could not be made to retain her. In a department that now has only one woman professor, efforts to keep Gross here could have been considered on the principle of affirmative action alone.

Debra Gross should be reinstated—if she is willing to return. More important, the University must examine how it can strengthen its recognition of teaching without weakening its commmitment to research.

Downplaying faculty service to students creates a lack of incentive for professors to talk to, listen to, advise and understand their students.

Though the MassPIRG negative checkoff question appears to have been "democratically" laid to rest for another two years, I still have some questions.

Primarily, how is it that MassPIRG representatives state they raise about $30,000 each semester at the University alone, that the local chapter receives only $400 to $500 per semester, but the locals will be forced to close up shop if the fee is changed from a positive to a negative checkoff?

MassPIRg's answer; the funds are more urgently needed back near Boston and the loss of revenue would substantially hurt the entire operation. Also, the move to change the checkoff status is merely the first step in a nationwide campaign to kill PIRG groups.

I'll admit that the campaign to defund PIRGs is a problem, but how is it that a group that raises upward of $60,000 each year cannot extract a $1,000 funding guarantee for the same period?

My other question; for such a well organized group that always has plenty of facts and figures in their literature and presentations, how is it that one of the most important fact/figures—what percentage of money raised goes to salaries —was nowhere to be found without a trip to the MassPIRG Office?

There's quite a flurry of activity following anti-gay speaker Paul Cameron's visit to campus. While administrators quietly rethink who should and should not be allowed to speak on campus, the gay community and others are petitioning that harassers like Cameron should not be provided a completely open forum to express their hatred at the University.

Additionally, some gays and lesbians are reporting a sudden increase in verbal, mental, and physical harassment following last week's rally and Cameron "lecture."

The first dilemma for all can be resolved. Those who come to directly harass all members of the UMass community group sholudn't be provided the forum to do so. Those who come to present the qualified opinion of a situation that exists outside of the University community (i.e. Nicaragua and the contras), should be allowed to speak here.

Face it; Jorge Rosales was a nuisance to those who don't support the contras and possibly a murderer to some Nicaraguans. Paul Cameron represents a magnification of the insecure homophobic harassment that some on this campus dare not exibit alone.

Cameron encourages harassment, while Rosales encourages disbelief.

Unfortunately for some victims, end of the year craziness has begun in the Happy Valley. Inevitably, the community registers an increase in the number of wanton, ourageous, and violent acts committed by those who lose control. Spring fever is one thing, letting go of all measures of decency toward others is another.

For those with short tempers and problems—relax, we've all been through tough times. For those who are coasting through their spring—don't flaunt it in front of those you know aren't doing as well.

Talking politics for once

Herb Ramy

I usually avoid writing about political issues. With people like Bill Spain, Stephen Ericson, etc., the Collegian has enough political columnists to go around. Today, I'm going to break this long standing policy of mine and give you my observations of the first day we bombed Libya.

My first reaction when I heard about the bombing was that I just don't look good in olive drab, or to put it more plainly, I just don't want to get drafted. Who wants to be part of a group that does more before 9:00 a.m. than the average person does in an entire day?

This worrying of mine may seem a bit premature, seeing that we don't even have a draft. Since I am an affirmed coward, though, I believe that there is no time to worry like the present.

When I got back to my dorm, I was surprised to find out that several people on my floor felt the same way. In fact, there wasn't a 'let's nuke 'em 'till they glow' attitude in the bunch. Instead, I found a group of half-drunk men discussing why they would be exempt from the draft. Being the good American that I am, I saw no recourse but to grab a beer and join them.

It's truly amazing to find that so many of your friends have such severe physical ailments, especially when several of them had run in the previous Boston Marathon. As if by magic, trick knees and flat feet seemed to appear from thin air. That night my floor sounded more like a hospital ward than part of a dorm.

After talking for a while, we decided it was time to watch the news. Doesn't our President speak so much better when there aren't any of those nasty reporters around asking him questions? What do they expect from the man without any cue cards?

Next we were entertained by Casper Warmonger (or is it Weinberger) and George Schultz. Thankfully George's statement was kept to a bare minimum. I'm sorry, but anyone who looks and sounds so much like Alfred Hitchcock should not be allowed in public office. No wonder every one in the Oval Office is so squeamish about taking showers.

The worst moments began the next day when the local news channels began covering the attack. First, journalists began questioning terrorism experts. My question; how many courses do you need, and how many airports must you bomb to become a terrorism expert?

But even these people had a few intelligent things to say. By the end of the day, reporters were asking the baggers at local supermarkets about their foreign policy stands on Libya.

If you think that I've taken this too lightly, let me put it this way; poking fun at these military types starting shoving matches is the best way I know of keeping one's sanity. * 'em, if they can't take a joke.

Harris incorrect

Timothy Harris' column, "Student politics and Libya," once again displays Harris' perennial lack of knowledge and ignorance of the issues typical of his columns.

Once and for all, I would like to lay to rest the allegations that the SGA [illegible] Presidential elections were not run "above board."

As elections coordinator, I oversaw all the ballot counting, as well as the subsequent recounting. Harris should have checked out his facts before making unsubstantiated remarks regarding the recount. True, M. (Mary) Lynne Murphy (or is that Evelyn?), did lose [illegible] votes in the initi[illegible] human error[illegible] zealous [illegible] Lynne supporters?), but Bill Bennett only gained 3 votes (the other candidates, Ted Capodilupo and Jay Talerman, gained votes, too) which made Bennett the victor with a 60 vote margin.

It's truly unfortunate that Harris has a problem with the democratic process.

apologize to the lesbian and gay community for letting him speak.

The group also demands that the University require all new students to attend a workshop on homophobia and heterosexism, and that it hire lesbian and gay male mental health professionals to provide counseling.

The petition also includes a demand that the Program for Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Concerns be strengthened by providing campus-wide support for the program.

Throne said that because Cameron advocated violent reprisals against homosexuals, his speech should not have been permitted.

"What Cameron was doing was not considered protected speech under the First Amendment," he said. "Anybody who speaks in any manner that puts other people down, that is not protected speech.

"Free speech is not a greater issue than any other issue. In this case what he was saying was not legitimate information. There's really no speech to protect."

Signs were posted in the Campus Center after Cameron's speech, calling homosexuals "the USA's worst enemy since Hitler" and advocating a "Heterosexual Awareness Week." Last Saturday was the end of Lesbian/Gay Awareness Week on campus.

The posters pictured a man covered with lesions, with a limp wrist. The signs bore the initials "TSM."

One lesbian student, who wished not to be identified for fear of reprisals, said she is scared but ready to fight back.

"There's a lot of us here. There's no place that's safe for me. I am more ready to fight for my rights than I've ever been. We don't have anything to lose at this point," she said.

Exhibit unveiled for W.E.B. DuBois

By BARBARA DeLOLLIS
Collegian Staff

The five-college area displayed its respect for the late W.E.B. DuBois at the unveiling of an exhibit Tuesday in the Robert Frost Library at Amherst College.

The exhibit, materials from the collected papers of DuBois, was prepared by the University of Massachusetts Archives and supported by a grant from the Massachusetts Foundation for Humanities and Public Policy. The unveiling was followed by a discussion, video presentation and reception.

Amherst College President Peter Pouncey gave a brief introduction.

Representing the University of Massachusetts was professor William Strickland from the Afro-American Studies Department.

The exhibit, which displays the "multi-dimensionality" of DuBois, will be at the library for another two weeks, according to Strickland. Upon leaving the five-college area, he said, it will travel around the country.

Afro-Am and journalism professor David DuBois said he wants to send the exhibit to Ghana, where W.E.B. DuBois died in 1963, "in order to prove that his legacy lives" there.

"It is a reccomendation I am making to the chancellor," DuBois said. "However, the decision is up to the University."

"Four days of activities, which will be highlighted by the relocation of the remains of Dr. DuBois and my mother," will take place this summer, DuBois said.

According to DuBois, the government of Ghana will officially mark the 23rd anniversary of DuBois' death Aug. 26-29.

Professor Homer L. Meade, also of the UMass Afro-Am department, presented his 1984 video, Another View: Berkshire County's Black Revolutionary Patriots, showing DuBois' ties to Berkshire County, his birthplace.

Professor Andrea Rushing, head of the black studies department at Amherst College, concluded the event by citing DuBois' importance in the five-college area.

Roxbury activists fight drugs

BOSTON (AP)-Black community activists, joined by a white suburban couple, have moved into a ramshackled, rat-infested house in an inner-city neighborhood described as a "drive-in drug market" in an effort to shut down the thriving drug trade.

"We want to send a message to the dealers that we won't tolerate them anymore," said Georgette Watson, co-founder of the Drop-A-Dime anti-drug program.

Watson and seven other Drop-a-Dime members on Monday moved into the abandoned, 2.5-story house on Oakwood Street in the city's Dorchester section. City officials have given the group permission to stay in the house for seven days.

During the week, Watson and co-founder Rev. Bruce Wall said the group will establish a presence in the neighborhood and show residents that drug trafficking can be stopped.

"Basically we're intimidating and frustrating the drug operations for seven days,' Wall said. "When we leave on Sunday, the neighbors will be able to work without us there. We show them now we work hand-in-hand with the police."

The activists say the area is one of Boston's worst for drug trafficking.

"We received telephone calls from the residents over a year ago that the dealers had taken over," said Wall, comparing the street operations to a drive-thru restaurant.

"You drive into McDonald's and order your food. The people here would drive up to the corner, a drug dealer would come out of the building and the person in the car would place his order," said Wall.

"They were taking orders ... in broad daylight."

Watson said the most important aspect of the group's work is the example set for city children.

When the group moved into a Roxbury project two years ago, the area children saw "a fear in the drug dealers that they never saw before. They thought the drug dealers were the tough guys running the neighborhood and they would not move," she said. But Watson said Drop-a-Dime instilled a new thought that "the drug dealers weren't the toughest people in the world."

Wall and Watson said their work has a lasting impact on neighborhoods. They said in two neighborhoods where they occupied homes previously - a Roxbury project and a Dorchester apartment - there remains a tangible decrease in the drug traffic.

But not all members of the group share that optimism.

"I'm skeptical," said Swartz, 45, an insurance salesman from Canton, a suburb 10 miles southwest of Boston, far removed from Oakwood Street's intense drug problem.

New World Theatre finale tonight

By LISA RIDDICK
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts New World Theater opened its final play of the season, To Be Young, Gifted, and Black, Monday in the newly renovated Bowker Auditorum.

The production is based on the life of Lorraine Hansberry, a black woman who was the victim of attacks from whites in the south side of Chicago, where she grew up.

It opens with the Azanian national anthem, the stirring freedom song called "Nkosi Sikaloli Africa," which is well known to black South Africans. It moves on through other traditional songs.

The play goes back in time to when her parents and grandparents were in slavery. Hansberry,played by Celia Hilson, recalls stories her mother told her, an experience she had with a teacher at Inglewood High School in Chicago, and her experiences at college in Wisconsin.

The play was written by Hansberry's husband after her death in 1965, from a collection of her memoirs. Pieces were also extracted from Sean O'Casey's play Juno and the Peacock.

The production is directed by Afro-American studies professor Esther Terry and edited by author and lecturer James Baldwin.

The New World Theater strives to highlight the separate yet related experiences of people of color.The final performance of To Be Young, Gifted and Black will be tonight at 8 p.m. Tickets are $2 for students and $4 for the general public.

FRIDAY FILM FOLLIES

By DON LIPPER
Collegian Staff

Dear reader, you should fall down on your knees and thank your lucky stars you are not a film reviewer. I don't even want to think about some of the junk I've had to see this week.

The band of Band of the Hand.

Band of the Hand is a two hour Miami Vice episode without Crockett and Tubbs. The basic premise of this emptiness is that five tough street kids who all hate each other discover self-esteem through savagery when they are left to survive in the Florida Everglades under the supervision of a tough but caring Vietnam vet. After these stereotypes get their self-esteem they go to Miami (surprised?) to clean up the streets like a cross between The Mod Squad and Rambo.

Just Between Friends stars a miscasted Mary Tyler Moore as the happy wife of Ted Danson (Sam on Cheers) who unknowingly becomes best friends with his mistress (Christine Lahti). Confused? You won't be after you watch this sappy, melodramatic episode of Soap.

If you don't want to see Hannah and Her Sisters again and you don't want to see some good old fashioned sword-&-princess movies, I would avoid the malls this week. Sleeping Beauty, that wonderful Disney classic animated feature is still going strong at the Hampshire Mall 6. I spoke with the manager and he said that a lot of older people were catching this flick. So don't be embarrassed, see the film you loved when you were young.

Legend is a fantasy starring Tom Cruise, a princess and a unicorn. I haven't seen this one but I hear it isn't so good.

Weekend Best Bets: The Amherst Cinema is showing two taut political thrillers. Missing stars Jack Lemmon as the father of an American who disappears in El Salvador. Sissy Spacek stars as the missing man's wife. This is a very good movie, see it. Also on the same bill is this year's Oscar winner for best foreign picture The Official Story. This movie is about an aristocratic woman who soon discovers that her adopted child may have been stolen from a family murdered by the government.

How to buy a performance.

You can use the American Express® Card to buy concert tickets for your favorite groups or airplane tickets for your vacations. It's the perfect way to pay for all the little things, and the big ticket items, that you'll want during college.

Bluesman and his band make a hot combo

Stevie Ray Vaughan played up a storm with and without his band Wednesday night at the UMass Fine Arts Center.

By PHIL SERAFINO
Collegian Staff

Stevie Ray Vaughan seems to take the role of blues guitar hero seriously. He has all the moves down pat, including the guitar solos behind the back, the slow, tortured blues solo, the fast blues jam [with solo], the solo solo, and of course, the pay-homage-to-Jimi solo.

Don't get me wrong. I've said it before and I'll say it again, anyone willing to work as a full-time blues musician in this MTV world has a lot of guts, and anyone who can actually achieve widespread success [i.e. airplay and record sales to anyone other than hardcore blues fans] without compromising on the song content deserves some credit.

But while he isn't pandering to radio airplay, Vaughan isn't taking a whole lot of chances. At Wednesday night's concert at the Fine Arts Center, Vaughan and his group Double Trouble played extended blues jams, the singles, and a few of his better known songs. He's recorded a little jazz [Stang's Swang], and a nursery rhyme [Mary Had a Little Lamb], which don't exactly fit into the guitar hero mold. It would have been nice for him to step out of the mold a little.

Enough of the negative waves. Vaughan is hot. The band is hot. The songs are hot. "Couldn't Stand the Weather," "Scuttlebuttin'," "Cold Shot," and "Little Sister," are some of the best rock and roll songs written in the past few years. They've all got fast riffs that make you want to play air guitar and dance around a lot, which is exactly what the audience did. Keyboardist Reese Wynans added the proper blues feel with his funky organ chords, and drummer Chris Layton and bassist Tommy Shannon are one of the tightest rhythm sections around. The group knows their job, which is to set the foundation to let Vaughan take off.

Whether he was soloing or playing rhythm Wednesday, Vaughan proved why he has been anointed the guitar hero of the 1980s. He's got the sheer speed, which alone doesn't qualify one for the title of hero, but he also has the delicate phrasing, and the killer tone required. Like Clapton, Beck and Page, Vaughan's sound is unmistakeable. He relies mostly on a beat-up Fender Stratocaster with his initials on the body, and he also uses a wah-wah pedal and a Leslie amp, which is responsible for the organ-like tone on "Couldn't Stand the Weather."

Vaughan appeals to an audience that is sick of pampered pretty boys singing and playing empty fluff, and at the FAC they were responsive to his style. No one minded that he didn't step up to the microphone until about ten minutes into the set, because Vaughan, like all good guitar heroes, is a singer almost as an afterthought. It's probably just as well too, because the vocals, buried in the mix a little, were muddy.

Vaughan's show hasn't changed drastically since he toured after his second album, Couldn't Stand the Weather. He has added a handful of songs from his latest release, Soul to Soul, and dropped some of the older material, but he played the same mix of old and new, fast and slow. "Let the Good Times Roll," a rowdy blues shouter that best exemplifies Vaughan's gutty vocal style, was probably the best of the new songs. The Shaboo All-Stars, a six-piece band that's been making the circuit of New England bars for years, opened the show with a schizophrenic set of blues standards and original tunes. They played the covers ["Kansas City," "Flip, Flop, Fly"] with precision and feeling, and alternated them with pop originals that had radio potential. They sounded at various times like the J. Geils Band, the Stompers, Beaver Brown, and Southside Johnny and the Asbury Jukes. In other words, they played fun rock and roll to party by.

Sophomore attackman Kelley Carr was down for a minute against St. John's Wednesday, but he wasn't out, returning to score two goals in a 9-6 UMass win.

want to do as a team."

Gorilla Grumblings: Freshman goalie Sal LoCascio is allowing 5.8 goals-per-game and has a save percentage of .713, among the nation's best...Tom Carmean is now 17 in career points and 14 in career assist. Junior attackman has 22 goals and 13 assists this season. . .In the last three games, the UMass attack has been balanced. Carmean has 12 points (eight and four), junior attackman Greg Cannella has 11 (seven and four) while Kelley Carr also has 11 (eight and three). Senior middie Greg Fisk has eight (four and four).

In the face-off circle, Seamus McGovern has won 41-of-59 draws in the last three games. . .the UMass defense has allowed only 5.1 goals-per-game in the last three games.

UMass t-shirts will be sold at the game with the Lacrosse logo on the front and either "Kick Ass UMass" or "Catch a Thrill on Boyden Hill," on the back. . .the shirts have been popping up in increasing numbers at the home games. . .the Gorillas mascot was at the St. John's game again. Junior defenseman Chris Knapp sported a Gorilla mask while patrolling the endlines on crutches, a result of his recent knee surgery.

Freshman midfielder Chris Zusi may play for the first time since early this season after a shoulder injury, he has the sling off his arm and could see action against Yale. Garber said he had high hopes for the middie before the season and that he showed flashes of his ability in practice.

New England rivals.

"We didn't hit the ball well at all. We left so many runners in scoring position. We would have one out and a runner on second and not be able to score. It was frustrating."

The second game saw UMass fall to UConn's Mary Anderson (now 8-4) as the Husky hurler scattered eight hits.

Sophomore righthander Lisa Rever took the loss and fell to 9-5 on the season.

She went the distance with a six-hitter, allowing three walks.

"Lisa didn't pitch a bad game at all," said Sortino. "She couldn't get any breaks and had some troubles, but overall I'm pleased with the way she pitched. It was good enough to win the game, because we should've scored six runs and won, 6-5."

The Huskies, now 19-11, scored two runs in the third, one in the fifth and two in the sixth to get the important split.

The second inning saw rever allow a walk before a single and sacrifice set up outfielder Lynn Wisniewski who singled in what proved to be the winning run.

UMass scored their only run in the fourth inning.

With two outs, Ilene Freeman tripled and jogged home on a single by sophomore outfielder Chris Ciepiela.

But that was all the offense UMass could muster as Anderson got in frequent jams, but worked her way out of them.

Pop Flies: While coaching third base in the third inning of Tuesday's second game at Springfield College, UMass assistant coach Anita Kubicka nearly had her head taken off by a broken bat.

The Rams, 3-2-1 in A-10 play, are led by Greg McCarthy who, before Thursday's game, was batting .340 with seven home runs and 19 runs batted in. Tony Hill is the top hitter with a .357 average and also has four homers and 16 RBI.

In terms of hitting, the Minutemen will have their work cut out for them in the Saturday's opener. The Rams will send their ace, Joe Ward (6-1, 3.10 earned run average) to the mound. The senior righthander tossed a one-hitter against Rutgers last week.

"Ward is a good pitcher with an excellent curveball," said UMass manager Dick Bergquist. "He beat us last year so we know he's tough."

Rhode Island will probably follow with John Damiano (0-3, 6.76 ERA). URI took two of three last season in Kingston, beating UMass 5-4 and 9-6 with the Minuteman taking a 7-3 decision.

Although the UMass rotation was not set as of Thursday, it is probable that senior Bob Kostro (2-2) and Matt Sheran (1-1), who is also riding a 10-game hitting streak at the plate, will start.

Offensively, the Minutemen are led by Jay Zerner with a .405 average and 19 RBI's. Mike Chambers, recently called up from the junior varsity, is hitting .462 through seven games.

As for home runs, Steve Allen leads the club with five and Steve Kern is second with four.

The one facet of the game that the Minutemen will have to improve on is defense. The team has committed 64 errors in 23 games and has a fielding percentage of .920.

"This team works better than any other UMass team I've been on since I've been here so I think we're going to win this year," Forbes said.

Hixon's sentiments were the same, saying that this year's team prepares better than any team she's had in the past and that up until now, the Gazelles have proven that they belong where the national poll has placed them.

Hixon said that she expects a fast, physical game in which it will be up to UMass to fast-break on offense while slowing down the UNH transition.

"UNH just runs and we don't want them to run the length of the field," she said. "We want them because they're the National Champions," junior All-America attackman Lisa Griswold said.

Rankings battle: Gazelles face UNH

By JOHN NOLAN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team faces its biggest test of the season tomorrow, facing defending national champion University of New Hampshire at NOPE Field.

The Wildcats are currently ranked fourth in the NCAA Division 1 poll with UMass close behind, in sixth. With a victory, the unbeaten Gazelles should rise in the polls and crack the top five.

The game, which had been at one time scheduled for Sunday, was rescheduled yesterday for Saturday at 10 a.m.

"I always get nervous for UNH games," said senior attackman Bunny Forbes. "They go down to the last second."

Last year, the Wildcats cost the Gazelles any shot at the national championship by knocking them off in double-overtime during the regular season and then handing UMass a 6-4 loss in the ECAC finals. Following the ECAC's UNH advanced to the Final Four and the championship. The Gazelles will be looking to avenge last year's frustration and perhaps use the game as a stepping stone toward the tournament.

A lot of distance remains between now and May, however, and whatever tommorrow's outcome, the season will by no means be over for either team. UMass head coach Pam Hixon knows that and, downplaying the game's importance, said that the game will be no different than any other.

"As far as I'm concerned, UNH will just be another opponent and we'll just be trying to do the best we can," Hixon said. "We're not looking to the ECAC's right now."

But New Hampshire, 5-2, is currently ranked fourth and comes off a narrow 7-6 loss to top-ranked Temple University at Durham, NH on Sunday. Head coach Marge Anderson's Wildcats are a solid unit, averaging 12.1 goals-per-game while allowing just 4.4 gpg.

UNH has four players with ten or more goals, led by junior Pauline Collins with 21 goals. Junior Karen Geromini leads the team in scoring with 14 goals and 15 assists while senior co-captain Susie Haynes (15 goals) and junior Anne Sherer (11 goals) add to the attack. Junior Cathy Narsiff will be in goal, anchoring the stingy Wildcat defense.

The task of beating the Wildcats looms difficult but both UMass head coach Pam Hixon and her players know that they can.

Hixon scouted the Temple-UNH game and said that despite the close score, the Wildcats were fortunate that the Owls didn't run them off the field.

The Gazelles only played well enough to win last Sunday, getting past unranked Northeastern, 11-8. But with six days of rest, the team feels confident that they will win.

Yale is next up for Gorillas

Slumping Elis tomorrow

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

The eighth-ranked University of Massachusetts lacrosse team is learning quickly that its success this season makes it a target for unranked teams looking for respect.

A hungry St. John's University pressed the Gorillas to the limit before falling 9-6 on Wednesday at Boyden. Tomorrow, a Yale University squad, one that is also looking to prove itself, comes to Boyden for the second of a four-game UMass homestand.

"Yale's just like St. John's in that we are a big game for them," said UMass coach Dick Garber. "A win over us makes their season better. That's one of the things that happens when you're one of the top teams, everybody's gunning for you."

Yale, however, will not as good a team to Boyden as St. John's did. The Elis are an underachieving 5-6 this season, beating up on the weaker teams on their schedule while losing to three of the four ranked teams they have played.

Yale is 2-3 in the Ivy League, but has a 13-9 victory over Harvard to its credit. Against Duke (16-12), Navy (16-11) and this past Wednesday against Army (15-4), the Elis have come up losers.

Boston College and Cornell are the only two common opponents UMass and Yale share. Yale was a 15-8 winner over BC (UMass won, 17-2) while Cornell was a 11-6 winner over UMass and a 17-9 winner over Yale.

The Elis are paced by All-Ivy sophomore attackman Adam Puritz, with 22 goals and 11 assists for 33 points. Senior attackman Ted Moran has 13-16-29 numbers. In goal, junior Jason Reece has allowed 85 goals for a 9.44 goals-against-average and has a save percentage of .514.

The Gorillas were a frustrated team after St. John's Joe Weingart stopped 29 of their shots on Wednesday.

UMass totally outplayed the Redmen in the first quarter, outshooting the visitors 14-1, but coming away with nothing but a scoreless tie to show for it.

"I still can't believe we didn't score in the first period," said Garber. "I watched the films, and it was amazing how many good shots we had, but Weingart stopped everything we threw at him."

The Gorillas eventually broke through, but their nine goals could've easily been 15. The UMass defense was outstanding, allowing almost a goal less then they usually do. The Redmen also scored twice on man-ups and once on a breakaway.

A 9-6 victory over the Redmen is nothing to be ashamed about, St. John's is a well-respected team, but a good win over Yale is needed if UMass will be able to maintain their strong position in the poll.

Against Harvard, the Elis toughened up their defense and shut off a solid Crimson attack. Using the Penn ride (a defense designed to keep an opponent from clearing the ball out of their end), the Elis has their best outing of the season.

But Wednesday against Army, the Cadets easily dispatched of Yale. The Elis have lost three of their last four, beating UMass would do much to putting their season back on track.

"I think the players are ready, we played well against St. John's and we'd like to have another good effort against Yale," said Garber. "With games against Harvard and Army coming up, we have to maintain our level of play. This game is important to accomplishing that goal. We can't let-up, we still have a way to go, there's a lot we

Stockley one-hits UConn as softball splits two

By ROGER CHAPMAN
Collegian Staff

STORRS, CT—Senior lefthander Lynn Stockley threw a one-hit opening game victory, but the University of Massachusetts softball team's offense sputtered in the second game and the 20th-ranked Minutewomen split a doubleheader with the University of Connecticut here yesterday, winning 1-0 and losing 5-1.

The Minutewomen are now 24-6 on the season and play a crucial doubleheader at Penn State on Sunday at noon. With the split yesterday, a sweep of Penn State is needed to help UMass' NCAA playoff hopes.

In the first game, Stockley went to 13-1 on the season, with her third no-hitter of the season (she also has a perfect game to her credit). She allowed only one walk and struck out five as her earned run average fell below the already-microscopic 0.25 it was entering the game.

The game lasted eight innings with the Minutewomen winning thanks to Carol Frattaroli's run-scoring double.

In the UMass half of the eighth, outfielder Emily Bietsch singled off of loser Mary Lynn-Hares (10-5), was sacrificed to second and came in on Frattaroli's single.

Infielder Paige Kopcza had the other UMass hit as Lynn-Hares authored a three-hitter.

"Lynn (Stockley) is really chugging along, but I wish we werre right behind her," said UMass coach Elaine Sortino, who was upset with the split with the

The University of Massachussetts baseball team is on a roll and it couldn't be happening at a better time.

UMass goes into a big three-game, Atlantic 10 series with University of Rhode Island at Lorden Field over the weekend, in search of its first league victory after an 0-5 start in the A-10.

There will be a doubleheader at Saturday at noon and a single game Sunday at noon.

The Minutemen, 8-15 overall, are 7-7 since their Florida trip and have posted a 7-3 record at Lorden. They have won four games in a row, seven of their last eight, and are coming off a 6-3 win over Boston University on Wednesday.

Rhode Island comes into the series with an 8-9-1 record before Thursday's opening game of the Rhode Island Tournament against Bryant College.

Regents board looks for new chancellor

By PHIL SERAFINO
Collegian Staff

The search for a new chancellor of the Board of Regents of Higher Education will begin its interview stage in "10 days to two weeks," according to the regent who is heading the search committee.

The regent, Paul Ylvisaker, last week said the committee is now screening the applications of 110 candidates. "We'll try to get it down to 12 or 15" for interviews, he said. "The schedule we're on is to have a presentation of the finalists to the regents at their June meeting. We hope to have a decision in time to have someone in place for the next academic year."

Ylvisaker would not release the names of any of the candidates, saying "It becomes a public thing when we get down to the three to five finalists."

However, he said there was a broad cross section of applicants. "We had a good spread as far as race, sex and geography. It's a good pool."

Among those mentioned as possible candidates are Amherst's two state legislators, Sen. John W. Olver and Rep. James G. Collins, both Democrats. Collins is a 1968 graduate of the University of Massachusetts. Olver is a tenured professor of chemistry, now on leave, at the University.

Collins, who served on the House Education Committee for 12 years and is now part of the House Ways and Means Committee, said Friday, "I've been contacted (by the search committee) to let me know that I've been nominated. At this time I m awaiting further contact from them."

Olver yesterday declined to comment on his interest in the seat because he said doing so would be unfair to those candidates who are currently in other jobs and cannot speak to the media.

"I confirm indeed that my name has been put in, but I don't think it's appropriate for me to speak," Olver said. "I'd like to tell you a whole lot of things that could be done in this area (higher education), but I don't think it's appropriate."

Collins received strong support from Regent J. John Fox and House Speaker George Keverian, both of whom pushed in January for his immediate hiring. After meeting with Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, however, the committee decided to proceed with a full search.

In an interview in January, Collins said his first priority if he were appointed chancellor would be to "engender and foster first-rate low-cost education. Then we must work on our graduate and research capacity so we can work closely with the private sector to be the incubator for economic development in Massachusetts."

Collins also said he would seek to develop the community service role of the state's campuses.

Less public drinking sighted

By JEFFRY BARTASH
Collegian Staff

As the temperature increases during springtime at the University of Massachusetts, so does the number of students spending time outside.

However, with the raising of the legal drinking age to 21 last June and stricter campus rules, police do not see many people drinking outdoors anymore except at major concerts or sporting events, according to UMass Police Chief Robert Joyce.

"If persons are seen by police drinking beer in public, we will check to see if they are of age and, if they are, they'll be told it's not a good image maker for the University," Joyce said.

There is no town bylaw prohibiting drinking in public and Amherst police tolerate it "so long as you are 21 and do not cause a problem," according to an officer in the Amherst Center station.

UMass police said minors in possession of alcohol can receive up to a $50 fine.

Many are willing to test the University's alcohol regulations, as evidenced during lacrosse games played at Boyden Field, where groups of people can be seen drink-

Panelists speak on directions for peace movement

By REBECCA THATCHER
Collegian Staff

The peace movement in the United States must regain the "moral high ground" from the right wing, according to a panel of local activists who spoke on new directions for the peace movement last night.

"The right has moved to the moral high ground taking with it the flag, the family and the bible," said Andrea Ayuazian, director of training for the Peace Development Fund, an Amherst-based group.

Ayuazian said the peace movement is at a low point, characterized by fragmentation, competition and superficiality. She said while traveling around the country she found a movement that is "a mile wide and an inch deep" and "bankrupt in terms of leadership and strategy."

A turn away from strategizing, a new emphasis on human values, a vision of a better world and reclaiming history are some of the steps Ayuazian recommended to a 75-person audience in Mahar Auditorium.

Randy Kehler, the former director of the Nuclear Weapons Freeze Campaign, said the peace movement should continue to use the old methods and try to heal the split between those who believe in legal political tactics and those who believe in civil disobedience.

Kehler called for bridging the gap between the peace movement and the broad population by going to the root of that gap—the attitude that it is anti American to protest and national security is most important.

The national security state and the Cold War mentality must be critiqued, Kehler said, because they are "the single most effective silencer."

Reagan hopes for cooperation

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Reagan said yesterday that after he decided to launch a limited military strike against Libya, some US allies suggested a coordinated, "all-out" attack to force a change in Moammar Khadafy's policy of exporting terrorism.

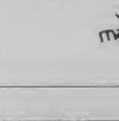
In an interview with The Associated Press, and other news agencies, the president said the suggestions were "that we look seriously together at real major action" against Libya.

He did not name the nations or the leaders who offered that advice. But the Washington Times, in a report published yesterday, quoted a senior administration official as saying French President Francois Mitterand told US envoy Vernon Walters he would support the mission only if it were strong enough to be aimed at over-throwing Khadafy.

Walters made a whirlwind tour of European capitals in the days just before the April 14 air raid to inform the allies of US intentions and seek their support. Only Britain publicly backed Reagan's action and permitted use of British air bases by US Air Force planes participating in the attack.

"We found that some of them were suggesting that—not that the answer be nothing of that kind—but that we look seriously at, together, real major action against Libya," Reagan said. "Some of them suggested that,...if we were going to resort to force, that then perhaps it should be a wider-based and a more all-out effort to change the Libyan policy."

Walters consulted with leaders in Great Britain, West Germany, France, Italy and Spain between April 11-15. The bombing raid occured early on the morning of April 15, Libyan time.



Arrests investigated

BERLIN (AP)—A Palestinian man arrested in connection with the April 5 bombing of a West Berlin discotheque may be the brother of the man held in Britain in the attempted bombing of an El Al jet, a West German security source said yesterday.

"We are investigating whether the two men are related and there are strong indications that they are brothers," said the highly-placed source in a telephone interview with The Associated Press. He spoke on condition he not be identified.

The source said the man arrested in West Berlin on Friday is a Palestinian who apparently lived for a long time in Jordan. The arrest "came through the London case," said the source, who declined to elaborate.

The suspect in the discotheque bombing was arrested the same day Scotland Yard seized Nezar Hindawi, 35, a day after his Irish girlfriend was stopped by El Al security guards as she tried to board a Tel Aviv-bound jumbo jet at London's Heathrow Airport with a bomb hidden in her bag.

State school will revise system

BELCHERTOWN, Mass. (AP)—Administrators at the Belchertown State School said they plan to overhaul their system for investigating complaints of patient abuse at the institution for the retarded following a report that found as many as half of the cases may be going unreported.

Joan Pine, acting superintendent, told the Daily News of Springfield in a story published yesterday that she was surprised at the high rate of unreported incidents of abuse found by Clarence J. Sundram, chairman of the New York Commission on Quality of Care for the Disabled, and Paul F. Stavis, in their study.

The two blamed inadequate training, fear of retaliation and lack of confidence in the disciplinary system for employees' reluctance to report their co-workers.

However, the report said that cases of physical abuse to the institution's 387 residents were usually reported and that unreported incidents "are generally seen as less serious and not indicative of any imminent danger to clients."

"I think the report shows we are already doing a good job...And it also shows us where we can do better," Ms. Pine told the Daily News, noting the investigators said the staff "placed a high value" on the rights of the residents.

The $3,000 study, completed in January and obtained last week by the newspaper, recommended training and better equipment and supervision of the institution's one full-time investigator.

Four locked in fast food freezer

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP)—Four employees of a McDonald's restaurant were locked in a zero-degree meat freezer by an alleged would-be robber, who was left out in the cold by officers who surrounded the building, police said.

None of the four employees, who were in the freezer for about 25 minutes, was hurt.

Police said they arrested Charles E. Conway, 43, of Boston on three counts of armed robbery and four counts of assault with a deadly weapon, a handgun.

The man allegedly entered the store at Massachusetts Avenue and Douglas Street through a back door early Sunday and forced employees to hand over about $1,663 in cash from registers and a safe.

Turo Russell, manager of the store, said he was in his office with Hector Diaz, a shift manager, when he heard someone ask the employees if they had keys to the downstairs freezer.

"I peaked around the corner and saw pants and the barrel of a gun. Then I ran out the back door," Russell told the Boston Herald. He contacted police, who surrounded the building.

rise of a police state if the peace movement does not confront what the Pentagon calls, "low intensity conflict."

Low intensity conflict is guerilla war, counter-guerilla war, wars fought with mercenaries, and police operations, he said. These conflicts will increase the risk of nuclear war and cause increased political repression in this country, Klare said.

Smith College theatre professor Deborah Lu ar said her work with a group called "Peace Activists, East and West" helped her to see the link between peace and human rights. She said the group was rising above the cold war mentality "like a piece of grass growing through the cement."

Two get credit for orderly senate meetings

By PATRICK JOHNSON
Collegian Staff

Something strange has been happening lately during the Undergraduate Student Senate meetings. Gone are the shouting matches and the constant pounding of the speaker's gavel.

Paul Wingle, Undergraduate Student Senate speaker, and Kathryn Strickland, the senate's treasurer, are the duo that some say have returned law and order to weekly senate meetings.

The sessions actually appear to be orderly, following the turbulent term of former speaker John Ruddock.

Much of the credit for the senate getting back to business has been given to the new senate officers, speaker Paul Wingle and treasurer Katherine Strickland, who took office April 1.

Both Wingle and Strickland said in an interview last week that gaining order on the senate floor is the first step to gaining credibility on campus.

"People pick it up through the campus media. They don't see the senate as a battle of personalities any more, which helps [the senate's reputation]," Wingle said.

Strickland added, "The meetings are boring now that it's running so well."

Wingle considers himself part of the progressive wing of the Student Government Association, but has been praised for working with all factions of the senate.

Student senator Nate Moore, a conservative from Baker House, said, "Paul will be unbiased in his rulings and make a better environment in the SGA."

Prior to becoming speaker, Wingle, a junior political science major, served as an assistant to Ruddock and senate parliamentarian, responsible for interpreting procedure during meetings. He said both roles helped him strive for impartiality.

"The senate should have the necessary environment to make coherent public policy," he said. "I don't want to see an environment where people hate each other for different political views."

Strickland, a sophomore political science major, has been a member of the senate for four semesters. As treasurer, she said she spends 55 hours a week overseeing the finances of the 420 registered student organizations that tap into the Student Activities Trust Fund.

Wingle said he and Strickland are qualified for their positions because "basically, we're masochists."

Earth Day events will begin today

Earth Day, the annual environmental awareness event, will be held today and tomorrow beside the University of Massachusetts campus pond.

This year's Earth Day theme, "Metamorphosis," represents a "change of attitudes towards the earth, which precedes external change. People would become caretakers of the earth instead of exploitative," said Michael Pattavina, the manager of the UMass Recycling Office.

Events planned for today include workshops throughout the day, and a contra dance at 8 p.m.

Tomorrow, Dave Zwick from the Clean Water Action Project in Washington, D.C., will speak at the Student Union Building steps. Also, the UMass Peacemakers and the Coalition for Environmental Quality are sponsoring bus trips to the Peace Pagoda in Leverett, leaving from the Student Union Building at 12:30 amd 2:30 p.m.

Pattavina said he expects 400 to 500 participants.

Earth Day was first held April 22, 1970, in Washington, D.C., and started at UMass the following year.

One of UMass' first Earth Day projects was the formation of the coalition and the Recycling Program, he said.

"The environment isn't a mainstream thing," he said, lamenting that "Earth Day hasn't been continued at other campuses."

Funding for the event was provided by CEQ's fundraising on the Campus Center Concourse, the Student Activities Office, the Campus Center Board of Governors and various grants.

Events will commemorate genocide victims

A series of events in an effort to remember Armenian victims of genocide begins today, sponsored by the Armenian Students Clubs of the University of Massachusetts and Mount Holyoke College.

"On April 24, 1915, in Constantinople, 235 Armenians, intellectuals and the elite, were imprisoned and eventually killed. That signifies the beginning of the genocide," said Aram Kaligian, a member of the UMass club. In Turkey, 1.5 Armenians are said to have been murdered.

The commemoration will include a poster series at the Cape Cod Lounge today and tomorrow, with documents, quotations and newspaper clippings from the genocide. A slide presentation by historian Ruth Thomasian will take place at Mount Holyoke tomorrow at 7:30 p.m.

The commemoration will close with a vigil outside the Student Union Building Thursday from 8 a.m. until 10 p.m. Video monitors at the Campus Center will carry "The Forgotten Genocide" and "The 70th Commemoration in Washington, D.C."

"We commemorated those who died so history won't be forgotten," said Seda Aghamian, president of the UMass club.

A banner advertising the event was taken down illegally at the Campus Center Garage Sunday morning, added Aghamian.

Protesters disapprove of Reagan

By REBECCA THATCHER
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON—While people around the world protested the US attack on Libya at US embassies, about 100 people gathered on the sidewalk in front of the court house to express their disapproval of the retaliatory bombing.

Passing motorists either honked and gestured their approval with a thumbs-up sign or insulted the gathering, which consisted of UMass and Smith College students and Northampton residents.

Peace activist Francis Crowe held a sign which stated "Nuclear war can start this way." Crowe said she was glad "people seem to be waking up on this issue." She condemned the bombing because, "it will only increase the violence around the world."

The protesters chanted "he he, ho ho Reagan's bombing's got to go," and "take the toys away from the boys" during the two-hour demonstration.

Protesters also expressed concern that the bombing of Libya would serve to distract the public from the issue of aid for the contras, who are fighting the government of Nicaragua. Many consider the contras to be terrorists.

"Reagan is perpetuating terror and committing crimes against the people of Libya and we are not going to stay silent..."

—Karen McKee, UMass student

"It is important to note that the Reagan administration backs terrorism in Nicaragua," Northampton resident Sandra Goodman said.

Goodman said the protest was organized by an ad hoc group, "Women Against Male Terrorism." She said the group sought to draw connections between militarism in foreign policy and domestic violence against women.

"We maintain that Reagan has actually taken a role in abusing American citizens here, particularly poor people and particularly women and people of color," Goodman said.

She said she was delighted people showed up with only a 24-hour notice. "It shows people are outraged about the bombing and aid to the contras," she said.

UMass women's studies major Karen McKee said, "Reagan is perpetuating terror and committing crimes against the people of Libya and we are not going to stay silent and let (him) bomb the people of other countries."

Some signs protesters carried read: "Violence is not stopped by violence," "Drop Reagan on Khadafy's house," and "Not a penny to the contra cut throats."

In Britain, rallies at seven United States and British military bases on Sunday led to 154 arrests, The New York Times reported. Police near Bremen, West Germany, used water cannons, tear gas and truncheons to disperse about 1,300 demonstrators who blocked the driveway to a US barracks for two hours, according to the story.

ing alcohol outside the fence next to the Curry Hicks Cage. After Saturday's game against Yale University, beer cans and case boxes littered the areas near the field.

Bryan Murphy, 24, a UMass graduate, said he brings coolers of beer to lacrosse games "all the time" and police never bother him.

"There's too many people around and they're not causing trouble," he said.

Breta Dahlstrom, 20, and two of her friends came from Bentley College in Waltham to visit her boyfriend. They said they bought a case of beer and carried it to the lacrosse game without being stopped by police.

"I came to a lacrosse game last year and had a hell of a time," she said.

Not all students escape trouble, however. Phil Sayles, 20, a resident of the Northeast Residential Area, said Saturday he received a summons to court for being a minor in possession of alcohol. He said he arrived at Boyden Field at 11 a.m. with three friends and prepared for a barbecue. Moments later, police confiscated two cases of beer, he said.

"We were just having a good time," he said. "It's unfair; I was the first one down here with beer in my car. There are so many other people drinking, why should I get busted?"

Joyce said kegs and beer balls at spring sporting events are prohibited and police will watch for alcoholic excesses. When asked what police consider an excess, he replied, "We'll be the judge of that."

"It's OK (drinking) as long as they are moderate and pick up after themselves," he said.

Carlene Riccelli, an educator at University Health Services, warns students to control their intake of alcoholic beverages on warm days, because being out in the sun can spur people to drink more.

"A person might feel lack of energy from the sun and might feel more inebriated," she said.

Women's support program needs to expand services

By KATHRYN POHNER
Collegian Correspondent

As the number of women over 23 years of age returning to college increases, the Women's Admissions and General Educational Support needs to grow, according to the program's new coordinator.

WAGES has two main functions, according to Adele Smith: To help women with admission forms and other procedures for re-entering college and to provide counseling and support groups for college transition.

The program, located at the University of Massachusetts Everywoman's Center, began in 1972 as the Poor Women's Task Force.

"Any woman who is over 23, is a single mother, a Third World woman or living on a low income is qualified for the program," Smith said.

The program tries to help women gain academic recognition for life experiences without relying solely on past grades, she said. Many of the women in the program haven't been enrolled in school for many years, Smith said.

Smith, who recently replaced Leona Sidman Phillips as the coordinator of the program, has previous experience as a minister, psychologist and a counselor. All three have been useful in her new position, she said.

"I try to help women in learning to ask important questions to enable them to see what is available to them in the area, and make positive use of it," Smith said.

Smith said the program focuses on providing services to women throughout their years at UMass.

"There are over 100 present WAGES students," she said. "What happens to them after admission to UMass—the follow-up—is important."

Anxiety mounts. The first Scottish king sits on the throne of England. He is a foreigner, a poor administrator, a ruthless prosecutor, his Catholic mother died on the block for treason. Now the Catholics plan to blow up Parliament, the Puritans plot a rebellion, witchcraft spreads. Shakespeare's new play is on Scotland, on James's ancestry, on devils, murder, regicide and treason. More than a work of drama and poetry, it is a daring political act and you decide to see it.

Right is mixed up

Jonathon Kaufman's comments at Tuesday's rally against the air-strike in Libya finally pushed me over my level of tolerance for right-wing name calling.

First and foremost, I would like to stress the fact that, aside from foreign students who may have participated, the students at the demonstration are every it as American as Kaufman. I am an American and glad to be one, but that does not mean I should uncritically applaud every decision taken by this country's leaders, especially when these decisions involve little or none of the popular input that they should in a country that calls itself a democracy. Does Kaufman envision American citizens as a flock of sheep? If he does, then he's insulting us and trying to pull the wool over our eyes. Perhaps he is forgetting that this country was founded by dissidents, and that, in order to avoid tyranny, despotism, and blind nationalism, dissidence will always be a part of American life. Kaufman and those who feel as he does had better get used to it, or find themselves another country to be part of. Maybe they would feel more comfortable in the Soviet Union, where peace activists not sanctioned by the State are routinely silenced.

It is ludicrous to say, as Kaufman did, that we "have no point of view." In fact, this is simply (and how simply) nonsensical. Obviously we have a point of view. It just doesn't happen to agree with his own. Similarly, Kaufman states that those who protested this act of war are "not Americans." Perhaps he would like to see my passport. Kaufman is in no position to decide who is American and who isn't. In this country, there are agencies and departments to decide such matters.

I would like to respond to Thomas Lynch's charge that we are "communist bastards" who "should be deported." Lynch clearly has no information whatsoever to back this absurd statement. No one at the rally addressed the issue of whether or not we call ourselves communists. As far as I know, we do not. We never have. Lynch is imagining what he would like to be true, but isn't. He is simply making the classic right-wing mistake of using the word "communist" as an insult devoid of an political significance whatsoever. Being on the political left of Reagan and the Republican party in general (and the Minuteman, Accuracy in Media, Jerry Falwell, etc.) does not by any means make a person a communist. Joining the Communist Party does. Please, get your facts straight. As for his desire to deport us all, perhaps Lynch would also feel more at ease in the Soviet Union, where political dissidents are deported to Siberia.

Overall, I believe that the use of name calling only shows how little the right on this campus has to say. Since they have nothing to say on their own, the best they can do is to try to discredit the left they so disdain. I'd just like to see some factual basis for this discrediting, instead of the name calling that anyone, no matter how ignorant, is capable of.

NRA craziness

Jeffry Bartash

The House of Representatives shot down our safety one and a half weeks ago by weakening an already deficient gun control law in an effort to retain the "Wild West" image of the United States.

Congress voted to allow the interstate sales of shotguns and rifles and to allow unloaded shotguns, rifles and handguns to be carried across state lines. Dealers will also be able to sell guns from their personal collections without keeping records.

Now our friendly neighborhood murderer can freely move to a neighborhood in another state to rob and kill.

The main force behind the Houses' vote was the National Rifle Association. The NRA has continually attacked gun-control laws and was also pushing for a repeal of the ban on interstate handgun sales. That measure was also defeated.

Congress passed the bill despite the presence of police officers from 21 states who were lobbying in Washington against the campaign by the NRA.

One has to wonder why each year a few dozen persons are killed by firearms in other western, industrial countries such as Canada and Britain, compared to 30,000 persons killed by firearms each year in the United States.

The answer is obvious; strict gun control laws.

Gun control is a major step in public safety. Yet Congress once again was pushed around by a powerful special interest group that doesn't give a damn about public safety. It's about time Congress protected—instead of harmed—the public.That's Congress' true responsibility, not following the orders of a minority special interest group.

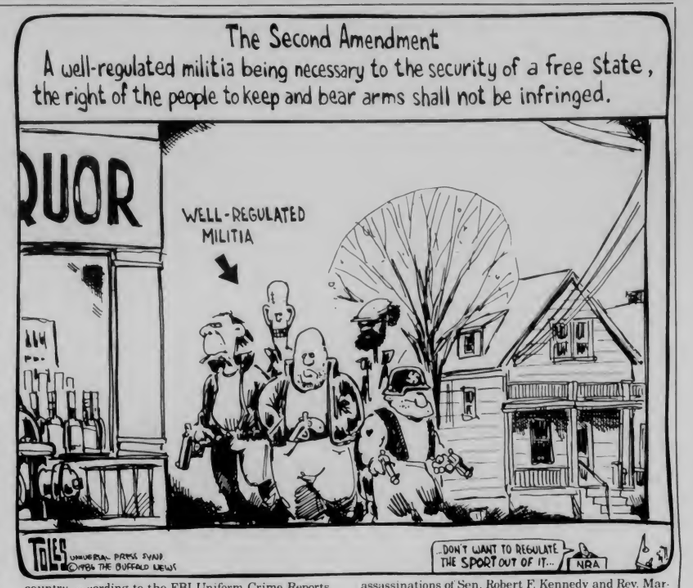
The NRA doesn't believe in any gun control. If they had their way, everyone would be toting a gun and we would all be dueling in the streets.

The NRA argues persons have a right to defend their homes. I agree. Let persons purchase a shotgun or rifle, but force them to keep it in their home. For those who want protection, the weapon serves no legitimate purpose outside the home.

The NRA says persons who hunt animals should be able to purchase weapons and bring weapons across state lines without restrictions. That's ludicrous. This also makes hunting easier for those who hunt people. Let people make recorded purchases of rifles and shotguns, but also make them register when they cross state lines with weapons. Criminals have to be weeded out.

I remain adamant that all handgun sales ought to be stopped and all handguns banned. Only law enforcement officials should be allowed to possess and carry handguns. Handguns are responsible for half the murders in our country, according to the FBI Uniform Crime Reports. Handguns are too often used to hunt people.

The NRA contends that a handgun ban would leave homeowners and storeowners defenseless before an illegally armed criminal populace. That argument fails miserably, because homeowners and storeowners would have recognized rights to possess rifles and shotguns.



A ban on sale and posession of handguns would eventually lead to the near-distinction of handguns in our country. Lawful confiscation of handguns would not be offset by continuous production of hanguns. Within a few years, handguns would no longer be available to criminals.

Gun control legislation was passed in 1968 after the assassinations of Sen. Robert F. Kennedy and Rev. Martin Luther King. Will we wait until more of our great leaders are killed before strict gun control laws are elected? Or will we wait until the number of deaths related to firearms doubles in our country?

The Old West and violence that accompanied it have often been popularized by the modern entertainment industry. Back then, robbers and killers wore leather and rode horses. Contrary to popular belief, the Old West still exists. Only now, robbers and killers wear three-piece suits or blue jeans and drive cars.

The senseless killing continues.

Abortion: easy way out

Rusty Denton

Last Friday, the American Studies Program at Amherst College sponsored the rarest of events; a debate on the morality of abortion which did not lapse into an emotional free-for-all. I don't think I can do justice to either speaker in the limited space I have, but one point made repeatedly by Prof. Jan Desard for the pro-choice position was that women have a right to improve their careers, finances, and personal lives without interference from nameless inhabitants secluded in the womb. If you follow this line of thought, abortion is just another tool for engineering the end to poverty and personal dead-ends.

It doesn't surprise me to hear an argument such as this one. Twentieth century America is fascinated with social engineering, especially if it eliminates poverty. It's not that most Americans care that much about poor people; certainly not enough to spend the time to know them as individuals. It's just that Americans don't want the smells and uncultured look of the poor soiling our lovely cities and towns. More than that, this nation is obsessed with the opportunities for living the good life, and can't imagine how anyone could be happy with lower living standards. The Bible has a name for this sort of obsession; it's called idolatry.

Idolatry is the condition where personal desires supercede any regard for ethics. Because so many Americans worship "quality of life," we find citizens who admire the methods of a thief named Robin Hood and a murderer named John Brown. Given role models like these, it's not much of a surprise to find the government playing Robin Hood among citizens of different economic classes, and playing John Brown by murdering their unwanted masters--the unborn babies. The rich, at least, can defend themselves quite handsomely. The babies are a bloody sacrifice to this god called "quality of life."

This is a sore point for the pro-choice tribe. They can't honestly deny that every abortion is a woman delivering a baby, sometimes sliced into parts, sometimes covered with chemical salt burns, sometimes ejected with sickening bruises from head to foot. Some of those babies survive for hours or even days--even the ones aborted earlier than six months. To know this and take a pro-abortion position is to look at a baby who looks just like you and me, and to say, "This isn't really a person." That kind of attitude is the root of racism and every other sort of arrogance.

The act of abortion indicates some other attitudes as well. It says, "This baby was created without personal worth," which implies that the mother was also created without personal worth. An abortion says, "History and humanity are so vast that nothing I do here will make any difference." Great--not only are we supposed to be created worthless, but our personal lives are never important. That's a lousy message to deliver to a young woman in distress, or to anyone else, for that matter. Idolatry is like that. It steals God-given personal worth, and places more value on some elusive illusion which yields only temporary satisfaction.

I think that's the real message of the pro-life camp--that everyone has personal worth, including both mother and unborn baby. An unexpected pregnancy is not the end of the world, and the baby probably wasn't planning on it, either. I seriously hope that area women who find themselves in this situation will consider calling an organization like Birthright for information about or assistance with alternatives to abortion. There are many of us locally who do care about a woman's future, as well as her baby's. We're willing to help in any way we can.

A 'token' stance, indeed

William Spain's column of April 16, entitled "Going to the source," represents the worst part of the academic climate here at UMass.

Spain begins the column by reminding readers of his usual political posture and warning them of his perceived departure from those polices on this particular issue, "Even we 'running dog liberals' can occasionally see some good in the antics of our least favorite Chief Executive. Most of us have a token conservative stance or two and one of mine happens to be on international terrorism." Spain goes on to applaud Reagan's decision to drop bombs on Libya. References to the attack as "our little act of pest control" and to European allied countries as "spineless" make it increasingly difficult to believe that this one of Spain's "token" stances. How much was required of Spain to abandon his supposed liberal politics in favor of his bandwagon rhetoric? It all sounds too easy to me.

UMass has long held a strong leftist slant, a liberal majority that seems to have only recently been threatened by the Reagan-catalyzed national conservative wave. As the political composition of the campus continues to even, it will be interesting to watch the William Spains wriggle out of the woodwork. They'll be seen wandering through the Campus Center and Student Union with dazed looks on their faces, trying to listen in on other conversations [illegible] attempt t[illegible] ty. A few may even agonize to the point that they form their own opinions.

In the meantime, we'd like to know more about Spain's "token conservative stance or two." Who knows? Maybe the printing of the next one will bring a job offer from the Na[illegible] service.

Marcos predicts government will fall in one month

MANILA, Philippines (AP)—Ousted President Ferdinand E. Marcos predicted in a videotaped interview released in Manila today that Corazon Aquino's government will fall within a month, possibly to communist rebels.

Marcos claimed in the interview that Moslem forces loyal to one of his former political leaders, Ali Dimaporo, out-number govenrment troops 10-1 on the large island of Mindanao, and that 34 percent of the nation's soldiers have left their posts since he left the country Feb. 25.

Marcos' statements, made during the weekend before a group of U.S.-based Filipino supporters at his home in Honolulu, came as pro-Marcos demonstrators and communist insurgents both increased pressure on Mrs. Aquino's government.

Mrs. Aquino announced Sunday that despite increased communist rebel attacks, she still plans to call a cease-fire in the fight against the guerillas.

She appealed to the insurgents to "give peace a chance" after a weekend in which 35 soldiers were killed in rebel ambushes. She urged the estimated 16,000 members of the communist New People's Army to lay down their guns and help build peacefully the society they have sought to create through revolution for the past 17 years.

In her commmencement speech at the University of the Philippines, she also warned Marcos loyalists not to stand in the way of peace. "This government of peace is not unarmed," she said.

Marcos was videotaped at his rented Honolulu residence Saturday night by Manila independent television producer Sol Vanzi, who showed the tapes to The Associated Press today.

Marcos said people supporting him were planning a big rally in Manila on May 1. "I of course support them to the limit and maintain that the only legitimate government is the government headed by me," Marcos said.

Cuba to crackdown on lazy

HAVANA (AP)—Cuban officials are planning a crackdown on lazy, negligent and irresponsible workers as well as those who defy socialist ideals by making huge sums from illicit profiteering.

"These things have to be rectified," Cuban president Fidel Castro said in an unusually candid assessment of the shortcomings of some Cuban workers.

"We have lazy people, people who don't want to struggle, irresponsible people, people who are not sufficiently demanding within their area of responsibility, people who seek privileges, people who seek easy money," he said.

The occasion for Castro's remarks at a local theater here was the 25th anniversary of the victory of his forces over the U.S.-backed brigade of Cuban exiles at the Bay of Pigs.

With many family members of Bay of Pigs' victims in attendance for the Saturday night speech, Castro said the memories of those who died in the revolution's defense are being defamed by Cubans who refuse to do their share.

Jarreau 'goes to college,' pulling MTV viewers away

Al Jarreau put on an electrifying show Saturday night at the Fine Arts Center at UMass, a performance rare in these days of MTV stars.

By KATHRYN POHYNER
Collegian Correspondent

In a time when most vocalists are content to churn out videos for MTV, Al Jarreau turned the Fine Arts Center Saturday night into a living showcase of his work, electrifying an audience who danced, clapped, and sang along with every number.

Finishing his opening number, "Raging Waters" to a standing ovation, Jarreau said "Thanks for coming out tonight. I know how easy it is to stay home and watch MTV."

MTV could not have done justice to this jazz vocalist's performance, as he entranced the full house with his own smooth blend of jazz and pop. Jarreau's voice, clean and strong, hit every note on the musical scale while he manipulated his range in a way that had the audience clapping, laughing, and trying to keep up with him.

"Trouble in Paradise" brought another standing ovation, as did many songs throughout the show. Jarreau put all his energy into each number by dancing, moonwalking and joking with the audience.

"Well, well," he laughed, "Al Jarreau goes to college." His infectious mood led to more bantering back and forth with the crowd, and then breaking into song again.

Jarreau's band kept up with all his antics, proving that their talent and style are as polished as his. The horn section added a special bluesy touch.

The music was at its most beautiful during "After All," a romantic ballad that brought hand-holding in the audience and another ovation at the closing refrain. Jarreau finished the last verse of "After All" on his knees, after singing to a woman in the audience as she handed him a flower.

Other songs that brought waves of dancing and singing along were "Get Your Boogie Down" and "High Crime."

Jarreau's electric mood and his high level of energy intoxicated the audience for a show that was really sensational for both him and his audience.

The Hampden Program is presenting a performance by choreographers/dancers Barbara Bennett, Elaine Colandrea and Anne Deloria, who recently returned from a tour of "The Melting Pot" in West Germany.

The performance is titled "Made in West Germany: Dances of Women" and consists of three dances; "Anniversary Dance," "The Bones Lie Under, Can You Fit Them Together" and "Vortex."

"Made in West Germany: Dances of Women" will be held at 8 p.m. on Friday and Saturday at the Hampden Theatre, Southwest Residential Area. Tickets are $2.

Mitch Easter does it all on Let's Active's latest LP

LET's ACTIVE
Big Plans For Everybody
I.R.S. 1986

By ADAM BRIGHTMAN
Collegian Correspondent

Unlike the last LP Cypress, this latest offering from Let's Active did not take three months for me to become thoroughly enraptured in its popish beauty. Also unlike the last time around, this one really is a producer's record, in that leader/singer/songwriter/producer (of R.E.M. fame) Mitch Easter plays most of the instruments to boot. Producers like to get everything just right, and he did, he did.

To be fair, Cypress had a wonderful childlike quality, featuring tiny, fragile voices that breathed life into its sweet melodious center. Also like a child, it tended to ramble on a bit, especially the guitar parts. With "Big Plans For Everybody," the adult in Easter takes over and the result is more discipline, also more fun and some weirdness.

Vaguely familiar guitar hooks and tricks flitter about in this batch of songs. Easter raises the chunky spectre of glam rock (Sweet and Slade) with his "Last Chance Town," and indulges in a little Pagean slide guitar mania while riding down Route 67 (a title).

While most of the lyrics are relatively obscure (which is a polite way of saying that the revieres doesn't feel like wading into it whole hog), Easter does offer an occasional shining tidbit to linger upon. Easter says to ask him later, you will sort something out. "Nothing is easy," he insists, but he will not disappear in little ways.

But, and this is the big but, one finds that the lyrical sense of it all makes only frosting on an already very accomplished cake of dynamite melodies and smart guitar bits. They are all just tools to this producer, and he has fashioned a very good piece of plastic this time around. Dig around in Easter's metaphors if it pleases you. Me, I like pop, and this is the best of the stuff I've heard in a year, and it rocks too.

If I had a rating system, this would be an A letter grade, waiting on an A plus. But, I don't have a ratings system, so if your're wondering, "Big Plans For Everybody" is the good stuff you should be spending money on.

Editor's Note: Catch Let's Active this Saturday night at Mt. Holyoke's Chapin Auditorium. They are half of a double bill, performing with the Reducers.

Rhino's release of the oldies worthwhile

By JAMES NEILL
Collegian Staff

Rhino Records, fans and archivists extraordinaire, have unleashed the latest in their endless wave of reissued relics. The Turtles' superb Battle of the Bands and the Ray Davies produced Turtle Soup have finally been flipped off of their backs and out of obscurity. Flo and Eddie and the gang were pop geniuses in an absurd sorta way and are well worth rediscovering.

Volume 1 of The Yardbirds Greatest Hits ('64 - '66) is simply a must. The album includes the A's and B's of some landmark singles and the cream of their earlier LP's. This period in the Yardbirds influential history saw the departure of then blues purist Eric Clapton claiming the band had sold out in favor of "pop rubbish." He joined Mayall's Bluesbreakers and was replaced by Jeff Beck. Not such a tragedy after all. Hear songs that later became big hits for Aerosmith and Warren Zevon. Hear today's sounds yesterday and stay tuned for Volume 2 and the arrival of Jimmy Page.

Rhino has also bought up the entire Beserkley Records Jonathan Richman catalog and now that they're back on the shelves you can kick yourself for buying that first Modern Lovers LP for twenty bucks last month. Meanwhile, Jo Jo's latest album of all new material, "It's Time For . . . on the Upside label, is hard to resist despite its predictability.

There are some long lost Monkees albums that Rhino has freshly re-pressed including Headquarters, the first album that featured the band as active musicians, and includes the track "For Pete's Sake," the closing theme from the TV show. Rhino is a veritable cornucopia of mandatory music. Get their address off the back of any album and I'm sure they'll send you a catalog that'll make your eyes bug out.

Back to the present, the fabulous Frontier label (who spawned The Three O'Clock & Suicidal Tendencies among others) have released new albums by Thin White Rope, Naked Prey, and the Pontiac Brothers. The Rope play a deranged, slinky, slither-pop. Naked Prey have got a big chip on their shoulder and their guitars bear the brunt of it. They sound like an angrier Dream Syndicate. The Pontiac Brothers, my pick for best of the bunch, work up a string-snappin' guitar frenzy, rocking out as clean and hard as Creedence and the Stones used to. All three of these west coast bands will be at Northampton's Pearl St. Wednesday night for a stop on their grueling Good, The Bad and The Ugly tour. Come on down anytime after 4 p.m. to the Collegian Arts desk, tell us any of the bands any of these guys used to play for and win an album or cassette by any of the three.

If you've got any cash left I'll vouch for the new Let's Active LP and don't miss them at Mt. Holyoke's Chapin Auditorium this Saturday night with the renowned Reducers from Connecticut. Other new goodies include the 2nd album from the Del Lords, Yo La Tengo's debut, Dumptruck's 2nd, The Things, Green on Red, Tommy Keene, Alex Chilton, and The Swimming Pool Q's.

Mel Kendrick's "Recent Sculpture," an exhibition of wood and cast metal sculptures, is now on view at the University Gallery, UMass. The show is open through June 8.

the 12:33 mark to complete the hat-trick.

"Some guy hammered me and I got fired up," Carmean said. "They play a slowdown defense and work it round to keep the score down. They did the right thing."

"It really wasn't that hard once we jumped out," said junior midfielder Neal Cunningham. "If you can get then out of their slowdown zone, then you can take charge. Get them one-on-one and they're not that good."

Yale outscored the Gorillas in a low-scoring third period, 2-1, on two goals by Ted Moran. The lone UMass tally came courtesy of Cain who, was set up nicely by Carmean at the 14:05 mark.

The UMass defense then put the clamps on the Elis, as Yale failed to score the rest of the way. The Gorillas went up 9-6 when Cain picked up a loose ball to the left of the cage and found Fisk (who had three assists) all alone for an easy goal. UMass capped the scoring when Cunningham walked in from near midfield and blasted a shot past the right post.

To the Gorillas' credit, UMass played Yale's slowdown game in the second half and was very patient on offense. The Gorillas got their shots, but reserve goalie Eric Levengood came up big several times for the Elis to prevent things from getting ugly.

got that, also. Senior co-captain Bob Kostro (3-2) went the distance in the first game, giving up six hits and two earned runs.

Sheran (2-1) followed with a complete game, three-hit shutout and allowed only one Ram to get past first base.

"Kostro threw a good game in the opener," said Bergquist. "And Sheran finished with our best pitched game this year."

The hitting has not been a problem for the Minutemen and they continued stinging the ball over the weekend. UMass pounded Ram pitchers for 33 hits, including home runs by Cimini (a grand slam), Zerner and Allen. Cimini also drove in seven runs in Saturday's opener.

"We put everything together," Bergquist said. "This is one of the most satisfying times for a coach, seeing your team gain confidence the way these guys have. We have a lot of tough games coming up but we'll just try to win everything we can. This was a good weekend for us."

Minutewomen, as they are currently locked in a tight battle for the number one ranking in the Northeast. UMass was the first seed going into last week's doubleheader with second-ranked Connecticut, but split with the Huskie's, forcing a must-win situation at Penn St.

As it stands now, UMass must win the remainder of it's games to stay in a favorable playoff position. This won't be an easy task, as the Minutewomen still have conference doubleheaders with St. Joseph's University and the University of Rhode Island. UMass will also face Adelphi University before the A-10 tournament.

Stockley, Zerner cop A-10 honors

Two University of Massachusetts athletes were honored by the Atlantic 10 Conference this week.

Lynn Stockley, a senior pitcher, was named the league's softball pitcher-of-the-week for the third straight week for three wins, including two shutouts and a one-hitter.

Jay Zerner was selected as the baseball player-of-the-week for several multiple hit games. The junior outfielder helped lead UMass to six straight wins this past week as the Minutemen went to 12-15 after an awful 1-14 start.

With three games remaining tat nationally-ranked Dartmouth on Wednesday, at top-ranked Temple on Saturday and at Rutgers on Sunday), UMass can improve its ECAC playoff chances with a win over either of the three remaining opponents.

A loss, however, could hamper their chances. With only two games against top-ten competition this season (a 15-11 win over previously tenth-ranked Harvard and Saturday's loss to fourth-ranked UNH), losses to either Dartmouth or Temple could hurt UMass' status in the eyes of the ECAC tournament selection committee.

Barring a total collapse on the part of the Gazelles, it would be difficult for the selection committee to overlook UMass' performances to date. Despite Saturday's loss, the Gazelles have shown that they belong to the nation's elite.

UMass jumped out to a quick 1-0 lead over the defending national champion Wildcats (6-2) just 2:43 into the game as junior All-America attackman Lisa Griswold scored from a free position (penalty shot). UNH responded, scoring the next three goals over an eight minute span to lead 3-1 with 14:01 remaining in the first half.

Goals by senior attackman Bunny Forbes, senior midfielder Mary Scott and sophomore attackman Ginny Armstrong put the Gazelles ahead, 4-3 with 2:24 remaining. UNH midfielder Anne Sherer picked up a loose ball in front of the UMass net and beat freshman goalkeeper Ann Scilleppi to tie the score, 4-4, with 39 seconds left for an apparent halftime deadlock.

But winning the ensuing faceoff, the Gazelles scored the final goal of the half as Griswold (who had three goals) circled the left side of the UNH defense, split three defenders, and fired past senior goalkeeper Cathy Narsiff to give UMass a 5-4 lead.

"We played very well in the first half because we avoided committing many turnovers," Hixon said. "Unfortunately, we beat ourselves with turnovers in the second half."

Hixon said that UNH's team experience prevailed in the second half as UMass forced several turnovers in key situations leading to the Gazelles' eventual second half collapse.

"We could barely throw and catch in the second half," she said. "For some reason we felt rushed and desperate when there was no need to be."

Cutting through the middle of the UNH crease, Armstrong (two goals) took a pass from Forbes and beat Narsiff to stake UMass to a 6-4 advantage just 42 seconds in to the second half. UNH cut the lead to one with 19:04 remaining before Griswold scored her third goal from a free position with 17:34 left. UMass led 7-5 and controlled the tempo.

But the Gazelles collapsed in the game's final fifteen minutes, creating numerous unforced errors which led to easy scores by the Wildcats.

"We got caught in transition in the second half by giving up the ball so easily," Hixon said. "Offensively we were rushing the ball and that led to breakdowns around the net which in turn led to their fastbreaks."

The Wildcats took the lead, 8-7, with 7:23 left and ran away with the game, scoring twice more to seal the Gazelles' fate.

Gorillas ease past the Elis,10-6

Fifth-straight win moves lax in to tie for seventh

By ROGER CHAPMAN
Collegian Staff

It was the sort of game that didn't really have anything special about it. As expected, the University of Massachusetts lacrosse team defeated Yale University, 10-6 before 2,000 at Boyden Field on Saturday for its fifth-straight win.

The Gorillas rode a three-goal performance by junior attackman Tom Carmean to send the Elis packing and avenged an 11-10 overtime loss in New Haven last season. The win raises the Gorilla's record to 7-1, while Yale fell to 6-6 on the season.

UMass moved into a three-way tie for seventh in the Division I national poll, up from eighth. The Gorillas are tied with C.W. Post and Rutgers.

UMass will next face 14th-ranked Harvard University tomorrow at Boyden in a game that should decide the New England champion.

"We're not dominating like we should because we're not putting the ball away," UMass coach Dick Garber said. "We had some fast breaks, which is our bread and butter, and we didn't score until our very last break."

As was the case against St. Johns last week (a 9-6 UMass victory), the Gorillas started very slowly. UMass trailed 2-0 on Chris Clark's goal at the 6:02 mark of the first period. The Elis struck quickly for the opening goal when Yale attackman Craig Lunde picked up a loose ball in front of Gorilla goalie Sal LoCascio and flipped it past his right shoulder 58 seconds into the game.

Yale executed a zone defense in the infant stages of the game and stymied the usually-potent UMass attack. In fact, the Gorillas didn't have a substantial possession for the first 4:13 of the game. UMass failed to get on the scoreboard until the 10:23 mark, when sophomore attackman Pat Cain took a nifty feed from senior midfielder Greg Fisk and beat Eli goalie Jason Reese high to make the score 2-1.

Junior attackman Greg Cannella, right, dodges past Yale midfielder Ted Moran Saturday at Boyden. UMass was a 10-6 winner.

The Gorillas then tallied three unanswered goals from junior midfielder Doug Musco, sophomore attackman Kelley Carr, and junior attackman Greg Cannella to go up 4-2 at the 2:01 mark of the second period. At that point, it seemed that the Gorillas had figured out the Eli zone defense and a rout was in the makings.

"They had to play a zone defense if they wanted to beat us," Cannella said. "When they are down, its hard for them to come back. Every game they play is the same, that's how they win. But not against us."

The Eli's came back to tie things up at 4-4 when all-Ivy attackman Adam Puritz netted two goals in an 18 second span and it looked as though Yale would make a game of it.

That's when Carmean took over. The Ithaca, NY native answered with three consecutive unassisted goals to give the Gorillas a seemingly comfortable 7-4 halftime advanatage.

Carmean's first goal came at the 11:40 mark on an extra-man advantage when he snuck in from the right slot and beat Reese over the left shoulder. The second goal was a carbon-copy of the first as he took a feed from Carr behind the Eli goal, slipped past the defenseman and beat Reese low. Carmean struck again, beating Reese to his left at

An upsetting weekend

To say the least, it was an upsetting weekend in Division 1 lacrosse.

Top-ranked Syracuse played at Division 3 national champion Hobart, and in front of a huge crowd, was defeated, 16-13 in a major upset. The Orangemen fell to second in the Division 1 poll and are now 9-2.

Also, fourth-ranked Navy fell to Virginia and number five Rutgers lost to Army, 11-6. UMass and top-ranked Johns Hopkins (a winner over third-ranked Maryland) are now the only teams in the nation left with one loss. The Gorillas are tied for seventh in the poll.

Back from dead: Baseball wins 8th straight

UMass, 12-15, sweeps URI, downs Vermont

By MATT GERKE
Collegian Staff

When you hear people talking about the University of Massachussetts baseball team, you won't hear laughter anymore, forget about the cracks about being season-long cellar dwellers too. UMass baseball is back.

Sweeping three games from the University of Rhode Island over the weekend, and then handing the University of Vermont a 17-10 setback yesterday, the Minutemen are now the strong team they projected to be when the season started.

After a dismal 1-14 start, UMass has made an incredible comeback. The Minutemen have won eight straight and 11 of their last 12. Welcome back.

"We've come back well," said UMass manager Dick Bergquist. "The guys have their confidence back and I think we're one of the hottest teams in the East right now."

The series with the Rams was pivotal in more ways than one. A doubleheader sweep, 13-2 and 3-0, and a 17-7 win in Sunday's contest boosted the Minutemen's confidence tremendously. They raised their record to 11-15 but, more importantly, got their first three A-10 wins to bring their league mark to 3-5.

Yesterday, in a doubleheader that was shortened to one game because of the weather, UMass rebounded from a 9-2 deficit with eight runs in the fifth inning to defeat Vermont.

"We're not the doormat anymore," said senior first baseman Jeff Cimini. "We're starting to look good. We picked ourselves up after a bad start and we have a lot more confidence now."

At Vermont, UMass ripped 15 hits to down the Catamounts (4-16) as sophomore Steve Allen picked up the win with two innings of strong relief (four strikeouts).

In the fifth, UMass scored eight runs as Mike Chambers, Matt Sheran and Jay Zerner had key hits. Allen then ripped a two-run homer in the sixth for the game-winner, a blast to left that landed in the bleachers of the adjacent football field.

Cimini had three hits in the game with Zerner, Sheran, Allen and Steve Kern getting two each. Freshman Jeff Richardson also pitched well in relief.

UMass came into the Rhode Island series needing more consistent fielding after a seven-error outing against Boston University last Wednesday.

The Minutemen proceeded to play error-free ball in the doubleheader, and despite three in Sunday's game, boosted their fielding percentage.

"Our fielding has improved a great deal," said Bergquist. We played good, consistent defense."

Another thing the Minutemen needed from the series was strong pitching. They

Minutewomen now 26-6

UM softball sweeps up Penn State

By ROGER CHAPMAN
Collegian Staff

The 20th-ranked University of Massachusetts softball team did what it had to do to keep its post-season tournament hopes alive as the Minutewomen swept Penn State University, 3-0 in nine innings in the first game and 3-0 in the second game. The doubleheader victory raises the Minutewomen's record to 26-6 overall and 4-2 in the Atlantic 10.

The Minutewomen travel to Chestnut Hill, today, to face Boston College in a make-up doubleheader from a March 27th rain-out.

In the first game, senior pitcher Lynn Stockley, who was named A-10 pitcher-of-the-week for the third time this season, improved her season record to 14-1, tossing a four-hit shutout. Stockley struck out seven and walked three in her 10th shutout performance of the year.

Sophomore right-fielder Chris Ciepiela was the offensive star as she went two-for-three with the game-winning run batted in with an RBI single, and scored two runs. Sophomore catcher Ilene Freeman was two-for-two with one RBI.

In the nightcap, sophomore pitcher Lisa Rever was one out away from notching her second perfect game of the year, but gave up a two-out single in the seventh inning before beating the Lady Lions, 3-0. Rever raised her record to 10-5 on the season.

The Minutewomen got single runs in the second, fourth, and sixth innings as sophomore left fielder Emily Bietsch went two-for-four with the game-winning RBI. Senior Cathy Reed chipped in a pinch-hit RBI single to seal the victory for the UMass.

The weekend sweep of Penn St. was crucial for the Gazelles drop first, to UNH

By JOHN NOLAN
Collegian Staff

Saturday's 10-7 loss to fourth-ranked University of New Hampshire probably will do little to change sixth-ranked University of Massachusetts's position in the NCAA national poll, according to UMass head coach Pam Hixon.

"No one can really say what will happen in the polls," Hixon said. "I don't think the game was a question of them outplaying us. We outshot them by about a 2-1 ratio."

The loss was the first for the 6-1 Gazelles, who entered the game needing a victory over the Wildcats in order to make any substantial move in the rankings.

The director of alumni affairs at the University of Massachusetts yesterday said he will run for state representative from Amherst if current Rep. James G. Collins is chosen to head the Board of Regents of Higher Education.

Jonathan Hite, 30, a former aide to Collins and a 1978 graduate of UMass, said he started gathering nomination signatures from registered Democrats Saturday. 150 signatures are needed to put a candidate on the ballot.

Hite emphasized that he will not run for the seat unless Collins is granted his wish to become chancellor of the regents.

"This is purely speculative," Hite said. "If he doesn't get this Board of Regents job, I'm off the ballot ... I won't run against him."

Collins, a Democrat, is one of about 15 candidates now being considered for the regents post, which was vacated in January when Chancellor John B. Duff resigned. A regent search committee is expected to begin interviewing the candidates within two weeks.

Last Friday, Collins said, "I've been contacted [by the regents] to let me know that I've been nominated."

Other candidates for chancellor include state Sen. John Olver, D-Amherst.

Hite said he could not speculate on whether Collins will be chosen, but he said, "I think I can do a good job" in the Legislature. He cited his experience as Collins' legislative aide from 1979 to 1981, as a former member of Amherst Town Meeting and as a commissioner of the Amherst Housing Authority for the last five years.

While at UMass, Hite seryed as speaker of the Undergraduate Student Senate and later as Student Government Association co-president, and wrote columns for the Collegian. He received a degree in political science "with an emphasis on political journalism." He has been employed at the University since 1981.

Cleric: revolution nationalistic

By NANCY KLINGENER
Collegian Staff

Nicaragua's Sandinista revolution is misrepresented in the US as a Marxist-Leninist movement, when in fact it has nationalistic and religious elements which keep it from being one, a Nicaraguan priest told a University of Massachusetts audience last night.

"The Sandinista movement, in its nationalistic aspect, is the backbone of the revolution," Rev. Uriel Molina of the Church of Liberation said, speaking to about 45 people in the Campus Center.

To understand the revolution, Molina said, one must understand the motives of the late Nicaraguan popular leader, Augusto Cesar Sandino, after whom the Sandinista movement is named.

"It was the purpose of Sandino's work to defend the Nicaraguan sovereignty against the American military presence," he said. This nationalism took on a socialist aspect when he "also had to confront the economic establishment in the country," which was dominated by the US.

"Sandino was not questioning the capitalist system in a radical way. He was rather trying to reform it," Molina said. "Sandino was anti-imperialist, but he was not anti-capitalist."

Sandino's realization that religious faith would play an important role in any movement also distinguished his beliefs from classical Marxism, according to Molina.

"There's a convergence in the mind of Sandino between his religious faith and his utopia, his dream of a better society," Molina said. "The revolutionary movement and the Christian ideal can come together to inspire the uprising of the people."

The modern Sandinista movement, which started in 1961, did not gain the crucial popular support it needed until 1968, when it came together with religious movements in the cities, Molina said.

"The Sandinista Front recognizes the clear difference ... between the Nicaraguan experience and classical Marxism," he said.

Molina spoke in Spanish, with translation by Raul Cotto-Serrano, a graduate student in the political science department. The speech was sponsored by AHORA, a Latin American student organization, as part of Latin American Week.

Libby will discuss sexual repression

A former University of Massachusetts professor and sexologist is scheduled to speak about the repression of sexuality at 8 p.m. today in the Student Union Ballroom.

Conservative religious groups like the Moral Majority want to repress sexual activity, but there are also "new left" groups who want to censor pornography, an expression of sexuality, said Roger Libby, a sociologist and resident of Amherst.

"The 'new left' can't distinguish sex from violence," he said in a telephone interview this week. "Sex doesn't have to be a problem. Sex is an expression of caring with responsibility."

Libby was an assistant professor of home economics at UMass for six years, until he was denied tenure in 1985. He has filed a $165,000 lawsuit against the University, asserting, "I was denied tenure because of my sexual views."

He said his speech will cover three topics: family planing and abortion, pornography and censorship, and AIDS and homophobia.

Libby, who currently tours college campuses and lectures about the problems and ideologies of sex, said he fears groups who oppose his views may try to prevent him from speaking on campus.

"UMass doesn't have the open atmosphere to hear this point of view," he said. "I'm going to give my lecture no matter what."

He is the co-author of Sexual Choices, which was named book of the year in 1981 by the Association of Nurses.

Tonight's lecture is sponsored by a new campus group, Progressives and Conservatives Involved for You, which aims to bring controversial speakers to UMass.

FYI:

Arthur F. Kinney, professor of English, is scheduled to speak today on "Re-viewing Macbeth," the final event of this year's Chancellor's Lecture Series, at 8 p.m. in Memorial Hall. He will also receive the Chancellor's Medal, the highest honor awarded by the University.

Kinney will speak on the political, social and economic background of the play from the viewpoint of a contemporary playwright.

Amherst residents who have not yet returned the town's annual census-by-mail forms to the Town Clerk are asked to do so by Friday. State law requires all residents to supply the information requested, which will help protect residency rights. The clerk's office is in the Town Hall.

Joyce Miller, president of the Coalition of Labor Union Women, will speak at noon in Campus Center 162. She will speak on equal pay for women in the workplace.

A warning is a morale boost for railroad strikers

BILLERICA (AP) - The flagging spirits of striking railroad workers in New England and New York have been raised by a warning that they may lose their jobs if they continue an eight-week walkout, a union leader says.

"I should thank Colin Pease for bringing morale up so much," Bill Hildebrand, vice president of the Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employees, said yesterday in a telephone interview.

Pease is a vice president of Billerica-based Guilford Transportation which owns the Main Central and Boston & Main railroads.

Pease said the company sent out letters last weekend warning 1,500 workers from Maine to New York that it would hire replacements for permanent spots unless they returned to work by Friday.

"That means a significant number of people are not going to have jobs to come back to," said Dennis Coffey, a company spokesman.

Coffey said Guilford Transportation has hired at least 400 replacements to fill the spots left vacant by 2,000 workers honoring the strike throughout New England and New York, including about 200 replacements for the B&M lines in eastern Massachusetts.

No strikers have crossed picket lines to return to work since the mailing, Coffey said.

Hildebrand called the mailing "another bogus attempt by the railroad to coerce and hassle people into crossing picket lines" and strikers would not return to work until management guaranteed job security.

The strike began March 3 in Maine against freight runs last month when 123 maintenance workers walked off the job in a demand for job security. Nearly 200 people had been laid off in the past three years.

The strike soon spread to sympathetic workers on Massachusetts commuter rails because they also carried freight.

Anti-Libya moves praised

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Reagan administration praised European allies yesterday for taking steps to rein in Libyan diplomatic personnel while revealing it has decided against expelling Libyans from the United States.

Noting the arrest of 21 Libyans in Britain and moves by other European countries to curb trade with Libya and restrict the movements of its diplomatic personnel, White House spokesman Larry Speakes said, "These are the kind of steps, this is the kind of cooperation that is essential if we're going to combat terrorism on an international basis."

But Speakes also said, "Quite frankly, though, more needs to be done."

President Reagan's chief spokesman declined to spell out what he meant by that. However, Speakes did say, "we will take up these kind of issues at the economic summit in Tokyo" from May 4-7.

While saying it was heartened by the arrest of the Libyans in Britain and the move by a dozen European nations to restrict the size and activities of Libyan missions known as "People's Bureaus," the administration disclosed it had weighed ordering the estimated 2,000 to 3,000 Libyans out of this country.

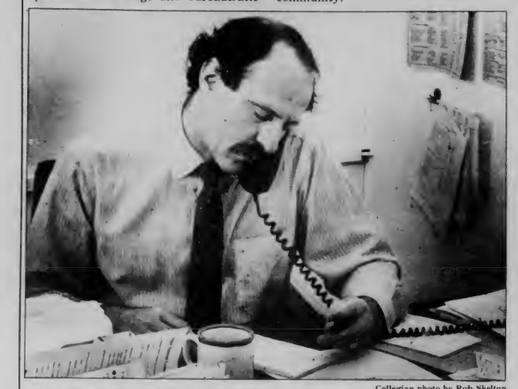
"We have considered whether to send them home and have decided not to," John Whitehead, deputy secretary of state, said in an appearance before a pair of House Foreign Affairs subcommittees.

But in response to questions, Whitehead also said FBI surveillance of Libyans in the United States was being stepped up after last week's raid on Libya. He said there was concern over the possibility some of the Libyans might carry out terrorist raids at the behest of Libyan leader Moammar Khadafy.

Utility must pay for reactor

BOSTON (AP) - The Massachusetts Supreme Court, in a decision that affects utilities across the state, has ruled that a power company's stockholders-not its customers-should pay for higher fuel costs caused by a temporary closing of the Pilgrim nuclear power plant.

The justices voted 4-1 yesterday to uphold a decision by the state Department of Public Utilities, which said stockholders of Commonwealth Electric Co. can be held liable for higher costs stemming from the Pilgrim shutdown even though Commonwealth was just buying a small amount of power from the plant.



Ombuds office deals with grievances

By SHERYL JEAN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Ombuds office, one of the oldest in the country, is crucial in dealing with some of the problems of a large and bureaucratic school such as UMass, according to the University's ombudsman.

The office handles confidentially any type of grievance, including harassment or discrimination against students or staff by other members of the UMass community.

UMass ombudsman Howard Gadlin

Howard Gadlin, a psychology professor who teaches one graduate course each year, has been the ombudsman since 1982. Six persons have held the job since the program began in 1971.

About 80 colleges and universities employ formally titled ombudsmen, and about 40 other schools have people who do the same duties but are not formally titled.

At UMass, a search committee makes recommendations to Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey, who then appoints a candidate to a two-year term which may be renewed. By University statute, the Amherst campus position must be filled by a faculty member.

Gadlin has already been reappointed once and is up for a second term, a recent modification of the rules.

"We function primarily by working informally as mediators and informal watchdogs over formal procedures," Gadlin said.

He said mediation facilitates the administration processes so "you don't get bogged down in red tape." He called it "shuttle diplomacy," or a lot of shuffling between people.

Janet Rifkin, who was ombudsperson from 1980 to 1982, said Gadlin has helped to "push the movement" for informal mediation of disputes on campuses.

Grant Ingle of the UMass Office of Human Relations said grievances seem to be decreasing recently and are being dealt with more confidentially and quickly.

Ingle said he has collaborated with Gadlin on sexual harassment cases involving both procedural and individual problems.

Gadlin said he refers cases to Ingle's office when a pattern of complaints begins to form, suggesting a systemic as well as an individual problem.

Most ombuds offices have only one or two people working confidentially and they do not often have a chance to discuss problems or new approaches with their colleagues, Gadlin said.

Gadlin is one of seven university troubleshooters recently elected to the board of directors of the University and College Ombudsman Association, the first national organization of its kind. It was formed last fall by about 40 schools.

"This association is a more serious effort to focus on issues dealt with and technicalities used by ombudsmen," said Gadlin, adding that in the past informal groups have been "useful, but haven't gone far enough."

The association will also try to encourage larger schools to form ombuds offices, Gadlin said.

The issue of adopting a code of ethics will be discussed at the association's first annual meeting to be held in the fall of 1986 in Denver, he said. The first executive board meeting was held last month in Detroit.

Rifkin said the association will help people to recognize the importance of ombudspersons.

'Wheel' formed to combat oppression

By PEDRO M. PEREIRA
Collegian Staff

A coalition of Third World and progressive groups at the University of Massachusetts, called the Wheel, has been formed to fight racism, sexism, anti-Semitism and homophobia, according to one of the group's members.

The Wheel, formed last month to symbolize a circle with spokes that work to move forward, "has arisen out of an increasing need for unification of all groups who realize the true common causes of the human race," said the member, Patsy White. The gains progressive Americans won during the 1960s are being threatened, she added.

"Our influence will eventually spread beyond the campus and community," White said.

Jonathan Spaulding of the UMass Peacemakers, part of the Wheel, said the coalition concerns itself with a wide range of issues, from caring for the homeless to resisting militarism.

"We need the Wheel for means of communication between like-minded people and groups on campus and because, isolated into our special interest, we have little hope for success," he said.

Progressives have been losing power in the Undergraduate Student Senate, Spaulding said, because the number of right-wing senators is on the rise.

But he added, "It (the Wheel) is not primarily a reaction to conservative assault ... It is a positive action that is going to build the power of progressive forces."

Forming a coalition of progressive student organizations has been attempted in the past, Spaulding said, but the effort never got off the ground. This time, he said, there is a very strong determination to make it work because "it's critical at this point. I have really high hopes for it."

Spaulding said the coalition will be as successful as those involved wish to make it. Much hard work is necessary and setbacks will occur as in any new student group, he said, adding, "It takes a while to get momentum."

Organizations in the Wheel also include the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group, the American Indian Student Association, New World Theater, AHORA and others.

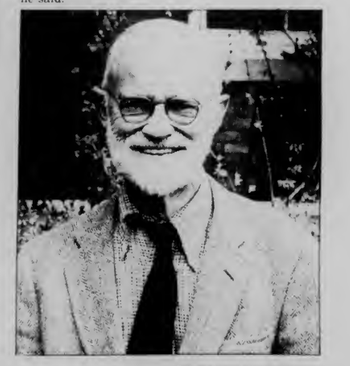
Socialists urged: downplay Marx

By JEFFRY BARTASH
Collegian Staff

A leading Catholic socialist, speaking yesterday to a labor studies class at the University of Massachusetts, said socialists in the United States must distance themselves from Marxist principles if they are to be accepted by the American public.

If Marx were alive, he would tell American socialists to forget about Marxism because of its association with Cuba, China and the Soviet Union and because of its hostility toward religion, said John Cort, co-founder of the Association of Catholic Trade Unionists, which existed from 1937 until 1953.

"Simply on the basis of historical record, Marx and Marxism have a bad name – at least in this country," Cort told the class in Draper Hall. "The US is probably the only country in the world that does not have a significant socialist movement; that is a reflection of our own intelligence as well as our morality."



Marx was not simply an atheist; he had a profound contempt for religious faith and insisted that reason demanded people lose that faith, Cort said.

Since America is a highly religious country, Americans link socialism with religious persecution, he said.

Cort said socialists should quote the Bible, especially the 25th chapter of the gospel according to Matthew, because the Bible advocates many views of today's socialism.

Socialists believe not in a monolithic centralized state, but in a pluralistic society that has public ownership where necessary, and private ownership everywhere else, he said.

"Present socialists want to see the world changed for a greater degree of justice, equality, freedom and peace," he said.

The quietest SGA meeting yet

By PATRICK JOHNSON
Collegian Staff

At the meeting of the Undergraduate Student Senate last night nothing happened, as the senate failed to reach quorum.

The senate, which usually holds meetings Wednesday nights, switched it to last night to avoid conflict with Passover, which begins at 7 p.m. today. Because the meeting was held a day early, 33 senators attended, 10 shy of the minimum necessary for quorum, and the session was adjourned after roll call.

No one seemed surprised about the decreased attendance; before the meeting, Senate Speaker Paul Wingle said he had received 12 excused absence forms from senators.

"Twelve [forms] is a good indication that we won't meet quorum, but you never know until roll call," he said before the meeting.

The senate reserved a room in the Campus Center which was half the size of the usual meeting room. As he called the roll, Wingle said, "If I don't get through this fast, more people might show up and we'll have to have a meeting in here."

Mike Cerrato, a senator from Northeast, summed up the meeting by saying, "There was no debate ... There was no haranguing, no fist-banging. We were in complete agreement."

Senator Tony Rudy from Cashin said yesterday afternoon that he would be at the meeting because "it's the best place on campus to meet women." However, Rudy did not show up.

Wingle said the meeting was held a day early "out of respect for the Jewish community." He added that nothing on the agenda was very urgent, except a motion wishing the University Jewish community a happy Passover.

"It'll be kind of a moot point [by next week]," he said.

Pediatrician calls for study of stress-related maladies

By SHERYL JEAN
Collegian Staff

The medical community must concentrate on the psycho-social aspects of health care and assess the ways in which stress affects biological illness, a pediatrician said yesterday in a lecture in the Campus Center.

"Medicine tends not to see illness related to stress," said Dr. Robert Haggerty, professor of pediatrics at Cornell University Medical School. "We do not currently deal with people in the medical system who have stress."

Haggerty, who is also president of the American Academy of Pediatrics, was the keynote speaker for the 1986 World Health Day, sponsored by the division of public health at the University of Massachusetts.

He said health care systems should be reconstructed to deal with the stress that is behind many physiological illnesses.

He cited a study conducted on 100 people in 16 families, which analyzed strep throat antibodies in response to reported upsetting events.

After a two-week period, the study found, there was an increased susceptibility to all infections in families where a stressful event had occurred.

"It is associated to the relation between biological and psychological factors," Haggerty said. "But it can't be proven."

He also cited a study done in England which concluded children under stress are more susceptible to pneumonia.

Children are good indicators of family stress since parents are more likely to bring a child to a doctor where the psycho-social aspects of an illness can be monitored, he said.

Dr. Robert Haggerty, professor of pediatrics at Cornell: "We do not currently deal with people in the medical system who have stress."

Haggerty said the medical profession is working to address the psychological aspects of illness.

The rapidly increasing ratio of pediatricians to children offers one opportunity to analyze the psycho-social aspects of childrens' minor physical ailments, he said.

He also said that the increasing popularity of prepaid health plans will shift health goals from treatment to prevention of illnesses.

Honors society is a further reward

By JASON SHAW
Collegian Correspondent

The Golden Key National Honor Society at the University of Massachusetts, which received its charter early last December, is a further reward for students who achieve academic excellence, according to chapter president Adam MacDonald.

"The society is something above and beyond the usual Dean's List pat on the back," MacDonald, a junior, said. "If students can stay on for four years, it shows true excellence."

The six chapter officers were elected last Sunday and all juniors and seniors with a grade point average of 3.5 or above will be invited to join, or can apply, said junior Chester Clark, co-vice president.

There is a lifetime membership fee of $45, which goes to the UMass chapter to maintain the chapter, and the rest to the national society, MacDonald said.

Involved in the society are North East regional advisor Stephen Pracht and physics professor Arthur R. Quintan.

MacDonald said Quintan "has helped enormously. He is able to talk to people at an administrative level better than we can and he is able to get the lists of students [with a G.P.A. of 3.5 or better.]"

After it inducts its members, the society will hold meetings Thursday nights at the Newman Center to plan movies and select faculty members who deserve special recognition. It will not do much fundraising, MacDonald said.

Other events will include the awarding of two scholarships and annual receptions. Scholarships will be awarded by the national society to a junior and a senior member who have 60 credit hours and are in the top 10 percent of their classes.

Bicycle rider severely cut after collision

A 23-year-old Amherst woman suffered severe facial cuts after she hit the fender of a car while riding her bicycle at 4:35 p.m. Monday on East Hadley Road, Amherst police said.

The woman tried to cross the street's median strip and hit a car driven by a 22-year-old Belmont woman, police said. The cyclist was thrown into the windshield of the car and knocked to the ground. She was brought to Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton, treated, and released, police said.

In other police reports:

•Three 19-year-old men were charged Monday with larceny and receiving stolen property after Hadley police found $800 worth of University of Massachusetts computers in their car at 4:55 a.m. Sunday. The computers were taken from room 169 Hills North, University police said.

•A $400 stereo system was reported stolen at 5 a.m. Sunday from an unlocked room on the second floor of Wheeler House, police said.

•A $265 camera flash and $20 in Swedish currency was reported stolen at 8 a.m. Friday from the second floor of Cashin House, police said.

•A 1983 Mazda received $300 in damage which was reported at 3:19 a.m. Saturday after "someone jumped on the hood" on the east side of Wheeler House, police said.

UMass prof will go on tour

A University of Massachusetts zoology professor has been appointed by Phi Beta Kappa, the national honor society, to a committee of scholars scheduled to lecture next semester on campuses across the nation.

The professor, Vincent G. Dethier, equated the experience of being on the committee to that of a performer. "Why does a concert musician go on tour? He does it to be heard, not for the money," Dethier said.

The committee, created in March by the honor society from a national pool of candidates, aims to bring eminent speakers to campuses which would otherwise not be able to afford them.

Dethier said the committee's main concern is broadening the educational experience of students.

He said committee members, of both the "scientist and humanist" schools of thought, will spend three or four days at each campus.

Bible not the answer

I am responding to Rusty Denton's column on abortion. Denton seems to think the Bible has a name, and an answer, for all twentieth century ills and issues. Obviously, it does not, not in America, at least. Otherwise, we'd all be going to church instead of to the bar, library, theatre and ball park. How Denton is able to equate John Brown with those who seek abortions is perplexing and disturbing. One only has to attempt to piece together one of Denton's convoluted arguments in order to see that he has never "spent the time to know" the issues, history, or understand in any meaningful way the plight of the poor, minorities and women. Yet the reader can understand who the would-be "masters" Denton refers to really are (John Brown knew too): affluent, white, male politicians, businessmen and journalists who want to "lead" poor people (especially black women and children) to a Dairy-Queen promised land.

Only the "handsomely" rich can afford such self-delusion; the poor know better. They know the rich will always have the best doctors, "special" friends and "safe" places for their unfortunate mistakes. Poor women know the church and middle-class morality want to "save" their babies, but don't want to pay for it. They understand that our society considers one-woman households and single-parent children "worthless." They know that their children will receive from our enlightened society not enough food, miserable housing, the worst education, a bleak future. They know their baby is better off aborted than trying to claw its way out of the cage of "social engineering" which America has built for it. Yet, I'll bet some times these women probably think that, instead of receiving any more "help" and "care" from Denton and his ilk, that perhaps they would be better off living in that promised land they babble so much about. I know I would.

Frank Flanagan
Northampton

Choice of the affected

Let me first praise Ruston Denton's admission that a rejection of unborn babies who resemble us is akin to racism and other sorts of "arrogance." If we introduce sexism into the debate, what have we got? Two very separate experiences of pregnancy. Denton has given his vote of support to women willing to gestate and deliver. I would like to widen the debate by looking at the causes, and the contexts, of pregnancy.

Rape-not a willing intercourse. There is no partner to confer with. The choice is with the mother, and her religious or moral grounds.

Artificial insemination-a conception carried to term, if the fetus stays healthy.

Woman wants a baby-clearly this position is a matter of choice, whether the partner sticks around or not.

Faulty birth control methods-a disaster of education, carelessness, bad communication, and so on. Possibly there is a partner to talk with. No doubt, any decision will be difficult, and may even at some point be regretted.

Women who are willing, in this age of safe and legal abortions before 16 weeks, to give birth to an unexpected pregnancy, probably believe either in Hell or in raising that child themselves. The value of a human life is that whole, entire life. Ask any mother. Simply because women have sex (mistakes aside) is no reason to put a 12-16 week old fetus before the already living.

Here Denton and others will interrupt and urge me to consult Birthright or some other private group for assistance. They will not, surely, hand me a weekly check for extra food, doctors bills, clothes and rent. They will urge me to go home to Mom and Dad, marry my partner, or enter a home for "unwed mothers," after which I must put the child up for adoption. The thread running through these realistic options is a hostility on the part of our middle class culture to, as a whole, provide the unwed mother with the resources and guaranteed support toward being a parent. A pregnant woman or mother of an infant is in a state of financial dependency, and "unwed" tediously on welfare, under the thumb of a federal agency, socially marginalized.

Why should she gestate and deliver on the "moral imperative," if she (as most women in this position) believes first and foremost in the quality of lives already being lived? This goes not only for the mother of four, the survivor of rape, but also the political science major. The choice remains, rightly, with those willing to take responsibility.

Legislating oppression

Gregory Girling

I am not gay.

It seems unfortunate to me that, in making this statement I am delineating myself from a different group, i.e. the gay community, which many regard as of a lesser order in terms of values, intelligence, emotions, etc. Even many heterosexuals who declare that they pass no judgement on the gay/lesbian population, are quick to communicate that they themselves are not of that persuasion, so as to distance themselves from social pressures, sometimes subtle, but often otherwise.

Yes, this is another column written "in the wake" of Paul Cameron. I write this out of a genuine concern over the suppositions upon which Cameron believes a program of action against gays should be "logically" based. While many have questioned this man's professional integrity concerning his interpretation and means of gathering data (off-hand I am unable to recall a single gay or lesbian mass murderer, however numerous heterosexual psychopaths do spring to mind), this, to me, does not seem as crucial as the matter of prescriptions that are made, based on such data, for legislation. Cameron would move that the individual rights of gays be suspended.

My problem with the man's logic may be illustrated as follows. Studies have indicated that men from families with a background of alcoholism are five to six times more likely to become alcoholic, than their counterparts with no such family history. The abbreviation DWI is familiar to most of us and reflects the fact that society recognizes that those who attempt to drive "while under the influence" run a high risk of causing themselves and others personal injury. Yet, I would have great difficulty with the idea that individual rights of those more prone to alcoholism, hence more likely to drive drink, should be suspended simply because that person is more likely to cause others injury. The argument is based on numerous suppositions - Cameron uses such reasoning as a foundation for his call to penalize gay people (including such Draconian measures as castration).

Cameron and others have earnestly sought legislation that would punish gays and lesbians for being the cause of Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome. I recall a converstion that took place in Washington, D.C. last summer with someone working the "the hill." This person mentioned that he and a number of his colleagues were in agreement that the immorality of homosexuality was at the root of AIDS and that there must be some way of putting to law measures that would address such blatant perversion. Somehow God was linked to all of this, yet two problems came readily to mind - if God is responsible for such redress (and I do not believe that He is), is He not capable of dispensing justice singly, without the aid of self-righteous zealots? Secondly, the assumption that the is illness is just reward to those engage in immoral acts would seem to indicate that anyone who is a carrier of contagion should be subject to extreme punishment.

AT HOME WITH PAUL CAMERON

Yet, it would seem ridiculous to track down all those who were carriers and/or afflicted with Legionnaire's Disease, pneumonia, bubonic plague and the host of other afflictions that have occurred throughout history, "to do justice."

I cannot say that I understand the attraction that would draw one man or woman to another of the same gender, beyond what is seen as conventional friendship. It is often expressed by straight people that because they cannot understand this, there is basis for condemnation, however it is precisely because of this lack of understanding, along with the knowledge that gays and lesbians do not deviously seek to harm others (as Cameron contends) that I am unable to find any convincing or substantive argument to deplore this lifestyle.

As difficult as it may be for Cameron to reconcile himself with, people possess certain rights, including whom they wish to share their lives with. To attempt to deny this by any means - social, institutional or otherwise, is oppression. In a society that stresses constitutional rights of such fundamentals as equality, individuality and self-determination, the legal sanctioning of such repressive attitudes would constitute hypocrisy.

An image-conscious bureaucracy

William Spain

One might not know it just by looking around, but there has been a great deal of new construction at UMass over the last few years. Hordes of people have been polishing, painting and renovating our beloved institution with a great deal of vigor. Enthusiasm, buoyed by state money and bureaucratic boredom, is still running high.

Ever since the now-legendary "Year Towards Civility," I have watched hordes of administrators scurry around in an all-out attempt to bury the ZooMass image once and for all. Convinced that it would never die a natural death, they have put a great deal of time and money into their tireless efforts. Perhaps most importantly, these unselfish folks refuse to wait for a pat on the back. They periodically cease their clean-up campaign to do that themselves.

I suppose I should appreciate it more. Nobody wants to go to a university known only for its outrageous partying atmosphere. I am pleased that UMass is finally getting some credit for our academic and cultural prowess. Shameless self-promotion is one of the most effective ways to get it but an excess of same can easily cloud some of the more important things that need to be done around here.

There is a major problem of adequate study space. The Campus Center leaks like a sieve. Many of our buildings are monuments to graft and incompetence. The Tower Library, since its completion has, at best, achieved the status of a bad joke. Guess who it happens to be on?

Painting over the graffiti and sweeping the floor are all very fine but calling it "renovation" gnaws at me. The people responsible for that brick monstrosity laughed all the way to the bank and left us to do research in the blast furnace called Goodell. It might make the heat a bit easier to bear if I thought that someone in the administration was really interested in running crooked contractors down.

Governor Dukakis listed the library as an "example of corruption" in his 1982 campaign literature. However, now that we are his again, it has become clear our image is more important than our interest. That the library scandal did not originate on his watch does not seem to matter. It is an ongoing embarassment that the Duke would rather not hear about.

There is no doubt that many of these shortcomings make image-conscious administrators cringe -- when pointed out. It is sad that they are more concerned with bad press than with the reasons for it. Money is poured into a fight against negative publicity to treat the symptoms, not the causes, of our failings.

I realize that it is very easy for me to sit back and slash at the administration's attempts to rid us of a bad reputation. I do not consider their achievements in this area to be meaningless and it is not my intent to completely trivialize them. Believe it or not, I enjoy talking about the good things to be found at one of the best universities in the country.

Occasionally, though, I feel a need to inflict some heavy seas on the UMass dreamboat. I would probably be a great deal less driven if, just once, the administration would tackle a problem without the overriding concern of appearances. Until then, I plan to continue pointing out our faults and leave the good news to the people who manufacture it best.

Dismissing the quality of teaching

Debra Gross

I wish to express my thanks and appreciation to the Collegian reporters and editorial staff for their coverage of my dismissal from the political science department. I especially commend the editors of the Collegian for a bold and forthright statement of the situation. I agree with the policy editorial (Friday, April 18) and believe that the political science deartment has made an egregious error in choosing not to renew my contract.

I have only minor revisions to make on the dissertation and these are now well underway; I expect to defend the dissertation in the coming months. Given the fact that the Executive Committee had both an oral and written statement from my advisor indicating that no further research and no substantive changes had to be made on the dissertation, I must confess that the department's decision not to renew my contract was unexpected. My record, in these past 2 1/2 years has been excellent. I have served on departmental committees, University committees and have advised and supervised large numbers of students. I have been an active political scientist having produced two convention papers from my dissertation data and revised a paper for publication this summer. My teaching record has been excellent. Yet, the department, despite these accomplishments, and despite its record on affirmative action, has chosen not to renew my contract.

The question, students as well as faculty outside the department ask, is why? There are, I suppose, a variety of answers: from some I am told it simply was a matter of not meeting my February deadline, from others it was intimated that the perception was that I would not publish enough to get tenure at UMass. I find this claim patently absurd and unfair. First, my tenure year would not be until 1991. It seems to me, and to others, that given my past 2 1/2 years I am well on my way to producing publishable research. Besides, many young faculty do not publish significant amounts in their first few years and let's face it, this is an empirical question. Why not let me at least get to my mini-tenure review to make that determination?

Finally, I believe strongly that not only has the department made a predetermination about my research capabilities, but it has also dismissed the significance of the quality of my teaching. I am not simply popular with the students. As Andrew Hacker, in a recent review in the New York Review of Books points out, students are fully aware of quality teaching they know when they are being challenged and asked to think. My classes are provocative and they demand that students analyze and critically evaluate a variety of points of view. I might add that I frequently challenge students with new ideas that come directly from research projects that have recently been published or that I expect to be involved with in the future.

I strongly urge the Department and the administration to reconsider this decision.

One last point-I am deeply honored at the support and encouragement of many students on this campus. This is my chance to publicly say thank you--you have made these years worthwhile.

Van Halen (Warner Brothers)

Well after all the waiting I can't help but be a little disappointed with the new Van Halen album. The second side is pretty good but the first is terrible. The way Eddie was talking about David Lee Roth I was expecting a real change in direction for the band. Even the single "Why Can't direction, but listnening to the first side it seems like meet the new boss/same as the old boss, that Sammy Hagar seems to step into David's shoes without David's sense of humor. But fortunately the album has a second side without the leering and without the stupid "Heyyyyy Baby" and the "she loves to act like my human toy."

The second side is more about real adolescents dealing with real things, love and lying for success, that sort of thing. Eddie's playing seems like he's decided to stop doing his fake Jimi Hendrix squeal and get down to some real playing, and it's about time. "Inside" is a really great song and there are a few others. So while the album as a whole is a little disappointing it is not completely so. I shouldn't bitch, one side is better than none.

BIM-SKALA-BIM
Bimskalabim (Fonograff Records)

Bimskalabim is a Boston ska band like the Specials or the reggaesized Clash. They are white guys who sing with Jamaican accents, but at least do it well. Singer Shanty Dan Vitale lets a little bit of hardcore slip through creating a truer form of white reggae, or ska. Basically Bim-Skala-Bim is a danceable album with both good politics and good humor going for it. With a song titled "Jah Laundramat" how could it lose? It may be tough to find the record in stores up here so if you need more info about one of the United States' few true ska bands write BIM INFO, 41 Boston St., Somerville, MA 02143.

GUITARS, CADILLACS, ETC., ETC.
Dwight Yoakam (Reprise Records)

It's not clear why Dwight Yoakam, a certifiable Hank Williams figure is being promoted by the label which produces Jimi Hendrix, but never mind that, Guitars, Cadillacs, Etc., Etc. is interesting for no other reason except that it is a good, solid, country album. I suspect that Yoakam, who is a buddy of Lone Justice (there's a duet with Maria McKee) is the purest of the L.A. back to the roots (Rockabilly/country) movement. The album is a compendium of country themes such as coal mining, lost love, and alcohol–plus there is a marvelous cover of a June Carter song, "Ring of Fire."

UNDER THE BLUE MARLIN
Naked Prey (Frontier)

These guys are the west coast's answer to the Del Fuegos. They take themselves a little more seriously (less humor) and they are a little bit more influenced by Neil Young. What does this brief description mean? Naked Prey are a tight band rooted in a fusion of the folk rock and the blues only with a harder edge. Got that? Also it means they are a refreshing change from the Bangles and Modern English and other "new" bands which are not as new as they would like to think and certainly not as interesting.

Naked Prey will be playing with Thin White Rope and the Pontiac Brothers, two other good Frontier Records bands from the west coast tonight at Pearl Street.

Another posthumous release

Live in New York City
John Lennon
(Capital Records)

By TOM HARRINGTON
Collegian Staff

I have a friend who insists that John Lennon can't be dead because he's still releasing videos. It's easy to see his point. Since Lennon's tragic death in 1980, he has appeared on three albums and several singles. Now Capitol has released "Live in New York City," a fine document of a concert performed in 1972.

Considering that it was one of the few planned concerts Lennon ever gave, it's remarkable what a fine example it is of his live performance ability. The songs are a well selected overview of his career at that point, and Lennon throws himself into the vocals with real energy and drive.

Producer Yoko Ono has done a commendable job of preserving her husband on vinyl. Lennon's voice sounds a little muffled on the first number, "New York City," but comes across loud and clear on the rest of album, thanks in no small part to some digital remastering and the original production supervisor, Phil Spector.

Lennon had always been a smart live performer, and he takes the opportunity to do some memorable reinterpretations of his best songs. Particularly well done is the famous protest song "Woman Is the Nigger of the World," which is performed with more compassion and feeling here than on the histrionic album version.

Lennon also plays freely with his lyrics, providing interesting alternatives of his songs without destroying their meaning. On "Imagine," for instance, "Imagine no possessions/I wonder if you can" becomes "I wonder if we can," and "brotherhood of man" is ammended to "brotherhood and sisterhood of man."

The classic of the album though, is probably his rousing cover of Elvis Presly's "Hound Dog." Despite his reputation as a musical visionary, Lennon loved rock's roots as much as its possibilities, and he could always belt out those rockers.

Lennon is full of humor throughout the evening, making fun of his lack of preparation ("welcome to the rehearsal" he says after the first number), greeting the audience in a Ringo impersonation, and introducing "Mother" as a song he made "since I left the Rolling Stones."

New York City is a fine collection of classics like "Instant Karma" and "Come Together" performed by one of rock's most distinctive voices. My only reservation about it is that its appearance means it will soon be harder than ever to find Live Peace in Toronto that wild jam with Eric Clapton from 1969, and "Give Peace a Chance," which is listed as a number on the jacket, is really just twenty seconds of chanting between Lennon and the audience.

To be Young, Gifted, and Black

By BARRY LEFSKY
Collegian Correspondent

THEATRE REVIEW

I was amazed at the quality of Wednesday's production of To Be Young, Gifted, and Black, performed by the New World Theater. Although I have enjoyed all their productions, I found this one to be an exceptional perspective on black experience in this country, from the days of slavery to the civil rights activism of the 60's.

Unlike many plays I've seen in the Valley, this play focused not only on plot, but also on emotion. Who could fail to emphathize with the slave who felt that the only good way to be a slave was to be a bad slave, and escape as soon as one could?

My favorite scene was one in which a black man wanted to accept the white man's money in exchange for not "dirtying up" his precious white neighborhood. His family argued that they didn't want the white man's money, and they wanted to move to the new house. But the black man had the white man come to his house and negotiate with him–and then refused to accept the tainted money and announce that they were indeed moving to the new house in the white neighborhood. Good for them, I thought.

I thoroughly enjoyed the scene where three white people were discussing a relative who was now a Florida prostitute. The mother wanted to find her a husband. The son responded that she'd found someone suitable, who used to be a Communist (gasp!) but wasn't anymore, that this person liked her and didn't know what she did for work. And, oh yes, he happened to be black. The mother was visibly upset and asked if there weren't plenty of plain, ordinary white folks available to marry her daughter. This clearly shows the racism of today's white community.

To be Young, Gifted, and Black illuminated the reality of the black struggle against racism in our society, and it didn't just show us, it emotionally involved us.

Sakharov in trouble with Soviets after picking up hitchhikers

BOSTON (AP) - Andrei Sakharov told his wife by telephone yesterday that authorities in the Soviet city where the Nobel Peace Prize winner lives threatened to take his driver's license away because he picked up hitchhiking gypsies.

The authorities cited a law banning the use of cars for profit in warning Sakharov to stop his habit of picking up hitchhikers in Gorky, the city he was banished to six years ago, his family said

"I don't think the gypsies offered him anything," his son-in-law, Efrem Yankelevich, said in a telephone interview from his Newton home, where Sakharov's wife is staying on a six month visit.

Yankelevich said he had few details because Sakharov's tale was cut off by static. He said the interruptions throughout the call were the worst in the couple's conversation since Yelena Bonner came to Newton for medical treatment in early December.

Static clouded the line at least five times, "even when she gave him instruction on how to plant flowers in the box on the balcony," Yankelevich said.

He said Sakharov often gives strangers lifts because cars are rare in the Soviet Union and the dissident leads a lonely life in the city 250 miles west of Moscow.

"He doesn't speak to anybody apparently for days," Yankelevich said. "There is nobody around him except for KGB agents, and nobody can approach him on the street because they are immediately intercepted by the agents."

Apartheid protesters arrested at Brandeis

WALTHAM (AP) - Eight students were arrested yesterday for blocking a road to Brandeis University and painting slogans protesting the school's holdings in companies doing business with South Africa, police said.

The arrests brought to 28 the number of people booked for disorderly conduct on campus since Friday, when a university committee recommended holding on to $3.5 million in South African-related investments.

"The money that is invested by our university is invested in our names without any regard for student opinion," the arrested students, all members of the Brandeis Divestment Coalition, said in a prepared statement.

The students awaited arraignment in Waltham District Court.

Brandeis spokesman Steven Cohen said the students blocked the main entrance to the campus at about 10 a.m. by lying across the road, which they painted with such slogans as "Divestment."

They were arrested by campus police, booked at the Waltham police station and taken to Waltham District Court for arraignment, he said.

RE-VIEWING MACBETH

Anxiety mounts. The first Scotsman sits on the throne of England. He is a foreigner, a poor administrator, a ruthless prosecutor; his Catholic mother died on the block for treason. Now the Catholics plan to blow up Parliament, the Puritans plot a rebellion; witchcraft spreads. Shakespeare's new play is on Scotland, on James's ancestry, on devils, murder, regicide, and treason. More than a work of drama and poetry, it is a daring political act, and you decide to see it themselves even more. A victory over the Big Green would strengthen their chances of being selected to the ECAC tournament and would build confidence going into the season's final weekend (Saturday at third-ranked Temple and Sunday at Rutgers).

"It's imperative that we win the games against the two teams below us (Dartmouth and Rutgers). If we should beat Temple, that would only help us in the polls," said Hixon, who refused to discuss the possibility of losing, saying that the team must only think of winning.

Dartmouth, 9-2 and ranked eighth, will be gunning to hand the Gazelles their second straight loss to a New England opponent. Ranked below UMass, an upset would push the Big Green closer to the top, while dropping the Gazelles from its fifth spot.

"We have to go into the game like its life or death," Hixon said. "We're going to have to roll over them - not that we have to run up the score, but we have to play hard and go at them for the entire 50 minutes."

Fifth-year head coach Josie Harper's squad is led by a trio of high-powered attackmen whose scoring average rivals the Gazelles' Lisa Griswold-Bunny Forbes-Ginny Armstrong connection.

Junior Beth Hunt leads the Big Green in total points with 28 goals and 12 assists. Sophomore Julie Clyma, among the nation's top goal scorers, has netted 35 to go with four assists. Freshman Ann Moellering rounds out the trio with 21 goals and three assists.

Junior Maureen Towers will be in goal for Dartmouth. Allowing 57 goals in nine games, Towers sports close to a 6.5 goals-against-average to go along with a 51.7 save percentage.

"If we can come out and put them on their heels, we'll be in good shape because I don't think they have the ability to come back like UNH," Hixon said.

Gazelle Grapevine: The new Women's National Division I Poll is as follows: 1. Penn State 40; 2. Virginia 36; 3. Temple 32; 4.New Hampshire 28; 5. Massachusetts 19; Loyola 19; 7. Maryland 16; 8. Dartmouth 14; 9. Northwestern 12; 10. Harvard 6.

Hixon said that in order for the Gazelles to win the remainder of their games, it will be necessary for them to play with more consistency than they displayed against UNH.

Junior attackman Tom Carmean (25-14-39) and Greg Cannella (16-12-28) and sophomore attackman Kelley Carr (16-6-22) were uncharacteristically sloppy in their shooting against the Redmen and Elis, getting the shots but not converting them.

"We've talked about that," said Garber. "I don't know if they're picking up bad habits or what, but they need to score on the shots they've been getting. Hopefully, it's a short phase, because we need them."

Indeed they do. The season is basically this week for UMass. A win over Harvard along with one over 10th ranked Army on Saturday would make UMass 9-1. The Gorillas should maim 1-9 Dartmouth on the road the Wednesday after making them 10-1. Even if UMass loses to Rutgers and Syracuse on the road the week after, they should still stay in the top 10 and gain a playoff spot.

Wins over either seventh-ranked Rutgers or second-ranked Syracuse could mean a high seed and a home tournament game.

But that's in the future. "We realize how important this game is," said Garber. "We're not looking ahead, but the team knows we control our destiny. We're one of two teams in the nation (Johns Hopkins being the other) with only one loss. We control our own destiny."

Senior attackman Mary Scott, left, and the fifth-ranked University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team are at Dartmouth today.

New England title on the line for UM

Gorillas battle Harvard at Boyden today, looking for sixth straight

By PETER ABRAHAM

Senior co-captain Steve Moreland, left, goes airborn for a shot earlier this seson. The Gorillas host Harvard at 3 p.m.

It's nice to be 7-1 with five straight wins and still be unhappy with how things are going.

Don't get the seventh-ranked University of Massachusetts lacrosse team wrong. It's not complaining, but the Gorillas know they can play better than last they did during last week's wins over St. John's and Yale.

They'd better be able to, as a fired-up Harvard University team comes to Boyden Field at 3 p.m. this afternoon to take on UMass with the winner taking the New England title.

A 9-6 win over St. John's and Saturday's 10-6 victory over Yale pleased UMass coach Dick Garber. But after New Hampshire (a team UMass beat 15-7) demolished St. John's 20-9 on Saturday, Garber and team realized they need to pick up the level of their play to maintain their national status.

"We're objective about every game, including wins," said Garber. "We played great defensively in both games, but on offense we couldn't convert our shots. We outshot teams like crazy, but couldn't score. We would have five shots and miss, they'd get one shot and put it in. It was wacky."

Harvard, unranked at 6-3, is like Yale in that they will try and slow the game down. But they have much more talent then the Elis, especially at midfield. With wins over Cornell (10-7) and St. John's (10-5) Harvard was among the nation's top 15 at one time. Losses to Brown (14-10), Yale (13-9) and C.W. Post (13-11) along with unimpressive wins over weak Boston College (8-5) and Princeton (11-9) killed any momentum Harvard had.

"I expect they'll play a typical Harvard game," said Garber. "They will be great fundamentally and try and take advantage of every mistake we make. We can't let down against them and have the lapses we have had recently."

The Crimson are led by senior attackman Chris Pujols with 18 goals and 11 assists for 29 points. The midfield of Tom Corcoran (19-8-27), Rufus Clark (17-5-22) and Tim McCaffrey (6-15-21) is as good as any UMass will face. They are patient outside shooters with hard shots.

"Our midfield defense will be tested," predicted Garber. "We'll need good efforts from them. I expect our crease guys to continue playing well along with Sal (LoCascio) in goal."

LoCascio, a freshman who is among the nation's leaders in save percentage with a .7-3 mark, rescued the misfiring UMass offense in the last two games with several clutch stops. Defenders Tom Aldrich, Gerry Byrne, John Jordan, Matt Woods and Adam Rodell have also played tough. That offense will need to clean up its game with Harvard and then Army on Saturday at Boyden next on the UMass agenda.

SPORTS BRIEFS

Springfield guard signs

University of Massachusetts basketball coach Ron Gerlufsen has done something no other UMass could do, he has successfully recruited a good Western Massachusetts player.

Chris Bailey a 5-11 point guard from Springfield will joing the Minutemen after turning down Old Dominion, Northeastern, St. Joseph's and Colorado State. A two-time Western Mass player-of-the-year (21 points and six assists-per-game at Tech High), he prepped this past season at Fork Union Military Academy where he averaged eight points and six assists as captain. Carl Smith and Lorenzo Sutton, currently UMass' backcourt, also prepped at Fork Union.

"We are very pleased to be able to sign a player of Chris Bailey's talents on-and-off the floor," said Gerlufsen. "We believe he will make strong contributions to the program."

Women ink two more

The UMass women's hoop team, meanwhile, signed two recruits itself, a foward and a 6-2 center.

Jeanine Michaelson, a 5-10 foward from Northport, NY averaged 19 points and 10 rebounds to lead Northport to the Class A semifinals. She was All-County and All-Long Island.

Helen Freeman, a 6-2 center from Pennsauken (NJ) High, led her team to a 21-4 record while averaging 13.5 points, 10 rebounds and five blocks per game. She was a Courier-Post all-group selection and played the New Jersey state all-star game.

Reid hires ass't coach

New UMass head football coach Jim Reid finally has a defensive line coach.

Mike Van Diest, an assistant at Montana the past five years, will join the Minuteman staff in time for the remainder of spring practice, replacing Steve Telander who went to Texas-El Paso with former UMass head coach Bob Stull.

Van Diest graduated from Wyoming in 1975 after starting for the Cowboys for two years. He joined the Wyoming staff before moving to Montana.

UMass still needs to find an offensive line coach, but the position probably will not be filled until the summer.

Stockley shines again, no-hits BC

Softball sweeps Eagles

By ROGER CHAPMAN
Collegian Staff

CHESTNUT HILL - The 20th-ranked University of Massachusetts softball team continued to roll toward a post-season playoff birth, as the Minutewomen rode the no-hit pitching of Lynn Stockley in game one to defeat Boston College, 3-0 in the first game of a scheduled doubleheader. The Minutewomen took game two, 6-0, to complete the sweep, and now stand at 28-6 on the season.

Stockley tossed her second no-hitter and 11th shutout of the season, as the senior southpaw struckout nine and walked two while lowering her season earned run average to 0.19.

The Minutewomen scored all three runs in the ninth inning, sparked by senior second baseman Carol Frattaroli's leadoff single. After Frattaroli stole second, sophomore shortstop Paige Kopcza reached and also stole second. Senior center fielder Sally Maher then rapped a single scoring Frattaroli, and senior first baseman Beth Talbott followed with a run-scoring bunt.

Sophomore right fielder Chris Ciepiela closed the scoring with an RBI single scoring Maher. The Minutewomen battered BC loser Barbara Davenport for eight hits.

In game two, UMass scored two runs in the third, fourth, and sixth innings to back a combined one-hit shutout by sophomore right hander Lisa Rever and freshman Chris Wanner. Rever gained her 11th win of the year in four innings of work, striking out five, while Wanner collected her second save of the year in a strong three-inning stint.

Sophomore left fielder Leigh Petroski led the Minutewomen offensively, going three-for-four with two runs scored. Sophomore first baseman Martha Jamieson went two-for-three with two RBI's and Talbott added two RBI's with a triple.

The Minutewomen retained their number one ranking in the Northeast, despite a doubleheader split with the Univerity of Connecticut last weekend. UConn is still ranked second behind UMass.

The Minutewomen will now prepare for a pair of big weekend doubleheaders against Atlantic 10 foe St. Josephs University on Saturday and regional rival Adelphi University on Sunday. St. Joe's is also locked in a tight conference playoff battle and Adelphi is ranked third in the Northeast, meaning that two sweeps will put UMass in an ideal position to gain a post-season playoff birth.

Gazelles need a win at Dartmouth

By JOHN NOLAN
Collegian Staff

With one week remaining before playoff selections are made, the University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team is looking to solidify its chances with a victory over eighth-ranked Dartmouth University, today at Hanover, NH at 3 p.m.

The Gazelles, 6-1, who lost their first game of the season, 10-7, to fourth-ranked University of New Hampshire on Saturday, moved into a fifth-place tie with Loyola in this week's rankings of the NCAA national poll.

UMass head coach Pam Hixon said that despite the loss, the Gazelles played against UNH well enough to move up in the polls and she feels confident that they will continue to improve as a team.

"We were more aggravated and angry than disappointed after the UNH game because we knew we let them get away," Hixon said.

Still, the Gazelles gained a spot in the polls which Hixon felt was justified.

"If you have to lose, its better to lose to a team above you than below you," she said. "But the game didn't affect our rankings because it was such a close game. It actually helped us. Of course if we had won, it would have helped us even more."

Travelling to Dartmouth today, the Gazelles have an opportunity to help

Council: 'we won't frisk'

Rejects police role at commencement

By ANDREW WOLFF
Collegian Staff

The talent coordinator for the Union Program Council, which runs rock concerts on campus, yesterday said he intends to tell an administrator that his group will not search seniors for concealed alcohol before they attend a commencement ceremony.

The administrator, Trey Williams, special assistant to the vice chancellor for student affairs, said last week that he would ask UPC to frisk students. The University is seeking to eliminate traditional unruliness by enforcing a ban on alcohol in Warren G. McGuirk Alumni Stadium, where the ceremony will be held May 25.

Lance Foley, the talent coordinator, said Williams asked to meet with UPC members last week, and no meeting date has been set, but the meeting will mostly likely occur within one week.

Foley said he and other members of UPC would feel uncomfortable frisking graduates, and that the idea of students searching other students is a conflict of interest.

"They don't feel good being the ones to put people down," he said. "That's something the administration and Department of Public Safety have to consider."

Williams could not be reached for comment, but Dennis L. Madson, vice chancellor for student affairs, yesterday said the ultimate concern is for an orderly ceremony, and he does not believe student searches are "appropriate police responsibility."

"All we're trying to do is add dignity and responsibility, and I prefer to do that without direct involvement of law enforcement people," Madson said.

If UPC will not conduct the searches, Madson said, using other students such as graduation marshals "might be appropriate."

Foley said he will tell Williams that a small group of UPC members will be able to help out with traffic and crowd control during the ceremony, but most members will not be available because they live on campus and must move out before graduation.

"I will tell Trey we are interested, but no more than 10 people are available to work," Foley said. "That is no way to run crowd control or alchol monitoring. It is a touchy situation and not something we are prepared to deal with with 10 people."

The Commencement Task Force, composed of students and administrators, has been trying to alter the format of the ceremony, calling the event "circus-like." The task force has recommended a shorter ceremony, using a better sound system, enforcing the alcohol ban, urging better faculty attendance and adding names of graduates to the program booklet.

Student producer seeks suicide tapes

By LESLEY CLARK
Collegian Staff

One week after a 17-year-old youth committed suicide on a closed-circuit television show at Hampshire College, the producer of the show has claimed that the district attorney's office plans to destroy videotapes of the episode.

However, the Hampshire County district attorney's office yesterday denied such a decision has been made, though an official did not rule out the possibility the tapes will be destroyed.

"The district attorney's office is going to destroy the tapes after [its] investigation is completed," said Philip Jackson, the student producer. "As a student, I believe I have all the copyrights."

Jackson said he turned over two tapes of the show at the request of Amherst police. They are believed to be the only copies of the episode.

On the satirical show, "The Voice of the Top Two," last Thursday Andrew L. Hermann, a Belchertown resident and brother of the program's co-host, delivered a tirade against the college and then drank a mixture of cyanide and Kool-Aid. Witnesses thought Hermann was joking, but he died within minutes.

An assistant in the district attorney's office, who would not give his name, said, "I don't know where he's [Jackson] getting his information, but it's not from the district attorney's office ... The tapes are in the custody of the district attorney and any information about them will be released from this office."

Jackson said, "Lawyers I have contacted indicate that I have to prove the tapes are mine or the copyright is mine. I feel I have a right to my own video work."

He said the police had "hinted" that Hermann's family or the college might want the tapes.

"As far as I can tell Hampshire College has no copyright on things produced on campus," he said. "The people involved in the production of the show have the copyrights."

Jackson said the program will continue, even as the college is trying to disassociate itself from it. "The school has a strong interest in not having the tapes released. The tapes give a bad image to the school," he said.

UMass 'dragging' on asbestos

By SEAN CASEY
Collegian Staff

There are already about 200 identified cases of the known carcinogen asbestos present on campus, and a group of concerned students want to see removal efforts stepped up.

The Room 10 Committee, named for a room in Arnold House which was found to contain cracking asbestos as early as September and has not yet been cleared, charges that the University has not been diligent in removing the substance.

Helena Donovan, a graduate student in public health, said the Physical Plant department has only one removal crew. Another crew was hired recently, but must complete a two month training course before it can aid in removal efforts.

"They [the Physical Plant] are understaffed, but that's not our problem. They've been dragging their feet on this," she said, adding, "There are a lot of places on campus where asbestos has started to crumble, and teachers, staff and students have been exposed."

Physical Plant director Roger Cherewatti yesterday referred questions about asbestos removal to operations supervisor Peter Wozniak, who could not be reached yesterday afternoon.

Asbestos, which was used as insulation from the 1940s to the 1970s, can release fibers into the air once its cloth covering rips and it begins to crumble. The fibers can easily be inhaled, and have been shown to cause cancers of the lung, esophagus, colon and other organs and asbestosis, serious scarring of the lungs.

Donovan added that the Environmental Protection Agency has said that there is no safe exposure period for asbestos. "We're here to learn, not to worry about getting sick," she said.

Room 10 in Arnold house has asbestos covering on water pipes which has cracked, and the room has been locked, but a sign on the door warns only not to move anything into the room and does not mention asbestos.

"If someone who didn't know what he was looking for didn't see it, it might still be undiscovered," said public health graduate student Ralph Sbragia, noting that a faculty member found the asbestos while inspecting room 10 as a possible site for a departmental library.

"Room 10 has been identified, but it may be just the tip of the iceberg. How many other buildings built around the same time have similar problems?" Sbragia added.

Donovan said that although room 10 is known to be a hazard, there have been no air quality checks for asbestos particles in the room or the surrounding area, which includes offices and classrooms directly across the hall.

The Graduate Student Senate passed a motion Tuesday calling for stronger efforts to remove asbestos and for the divulging of all reports of asbestos hazards and efforts to eliminate them.

The senate also formed an ad hoc committee to pressure administrators and the UMass Board of Trustees to provide the Physical Plant with money for more asbestos removal teams.

Libya says US planned terrorist attacks

TRIPOLI, Libya (AP) — A Libyan official claimed yesterday that the United States and Israel have planned terrorists atttacks in Europe for which Libya would be blamed.

The attacks, Information Minister Mohammed Sharafeddin said, then would be used to justify additional bombing raids on Libya.

He told reporters he based his statement on reports from intelligence sources in "friendly states, including European countries." He gave no further indication of who his sources were, or when or where the alleged planned attacks were to be carried out.

Earlier today, he said all 250 foreign journalists who arrived after the U.S. bombing raids had completed their mission and were expected to leave Libya by week's end.

Sharafeddin told reporters in Al Kabir Hotel, the headquarters for the foreign media, that they were not being expelled. But he said the government needed their hotel rooms and they would not be taken on any more escorted tours.

The journalists have been largely prevented from leaving the hotel unescorted.

Earlier today, Libyan officials said journalists representing media in the United States and the 12 Common Market nations should pack their bags immediately and board buses for the airport.

The move appeared to be in response to West European sanctions against Libyan leader Col. Moammar Khadafy, including Britain's decision to expel 21 Libyan students.

Journalist may be dead

BERUIT (AP) - The Revolutionary Organization of Socialist Moselms said yesterday that it has killed kipnapped British journalist Alec Collett. The group realeased a video tape showing a man dangling from a scaffold that it said was the New York based writer.

The four-minute tape was provided to the independent Beruit newspaper An-Nahar along with a typewritten Arabic statement that said the 64-year-old Collett was "executed" April 16 in retaliation for British complicity in the US air attack on Libya.

WHY KEG BEER TASTES BETTER THAN COOKED BEER.

Ask most beer drinkers, and they'll likely agree: nothing tastes better than beer from a keg.

Ever since the days of Frederic Miller's original Plank Road Brewery, keg beer has always been fresher. That's because it isn't cooked to preserve it like most bottled and canned beers.

Well, now there's a beer that delivers that same fresh draft taste in a bottle. A beer specially cold-filtered instead of cooked, so it tastes like it was drawn straight from the keg.

Sexologist attacks censorship advocates

Sexologist Roger Libby spoke at the Student Union Ballroom last night.

By JEANETTE DeFORGE
Collegian Staff

There is a new "purity crusade" involving extreme left and extreme right groups to censor pornography, said a "sexologist" and former University of Massachusetts professor last night.

Roger Libby told about 150 people in the Student Union Ballroom, the "new right" which consists mostly of Christian groups like the Moral Majority, is trying to censor all expression of sexuality including sodomy laws which are against gays, lesbians and pornography.

"What they want is the father as dominate and the provider and the mother in the kitchen," Libby said.

The "new left" he describes as a group of "women against pornography, is trying to censor us and can't make an adequate distinction between pornography and violence," Libby said.

"The combined purity crusade with the new right and the new left is not going to get us anywhere positive," Libby said.

Caring and lust are important words when dealing with sexuality, he said.

"You don't have to be in love with who you have sex with, it's not realistic. Caring and friendship are more important," Libby said.

Pornography is thought of as a bad word, originally it referred to romance novels, now it is thought of as violence. The word has to be defined, or a term like erotica should be used, he said.

"I'm opposed to violence and kiddie porn. I believe violence causes violence," Libby said. "Most pornography is not violent."

Libby said he is against making abortion illegal, saying the issue is not the fetus, it is an issue of a woman's independence.

Pro-life groups are hypocritical because they are against many different types of 'life" like gays and women and are primarily Catholic but, "Catholic women do practice birth control and have as many abortions as any other women," Libby said.

Libby said in order to make sexuality more free, there is a need for more responsibility to avoid spreading disease, in using birth control and in understanding the emotions of both partners.

"We have a lack of sex education in the schools," he said.

"The AIDS crisis is something Ronald Reagan refuses to deal with. Even his friend Rock Hudson did not move him," Libby said.

He said if money was given to the AIDS research, a vaccination could be found in three years.

"We need a sense of humor in sexuality rather than viewing it as so heavy," Libby said.

Votes remain uncounted

By PATRICK JOHNSON
Collegian Staff

The votes cast in four of the six referenda held last week have still not been counted due to a lack of volunteers, the co-chairwoman of the Undergraduate Student Senate Governmental Affairs Committee said yesterday.

"People just don't want to do it [count ballots]. They think I can do it all alone, but I need people to make sure I'm not doing anything illegal," Rebecca Lauterbach said.

Lauterbach said the ballots were originally scheduled to be counted on the night after the referendum, May 15, but only 10 volunteers showed up to help. As a result only the first two questions, both dealing with the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group, were tabulated.

The committee attempted to finish counting the ballots Monday but only two people showed up, she said.

Yet to be determined is whether students supported a $1.50 fee increase for the Distinguished Visitors Program and a $3 increase for the Union Program Council, and whether they approved of increases in the Fine Arts Center and athletic fees.

"Right now is a busy time with finals and stuff," she said. A new time for the count will be established at tonight's Governmental Affairs Committee meeting, Lauterbach said.

Brad Ferris, business manager for UPC, said, "My reaction is that I'm sorry Governmental Affairs doesn't have the personnel. I will be happy to count them myself." He added that UPC and the UMass community are "very eager" to hear the results.

Lance Foley, UPC talent coordinator, said that when results are made public, the public may no longer care. "It's been a while. The people who voted are probably curious ... It'll be hard to say if people outside our organization are very concerned about it."

Navajo tribe seeks support

By JOE SHARTRAND
Collegian Staff

On July 7, the Navajo people will be forcibly removed from their land in Big Mountain, Ariz., which they have had since 1887, so the US government can mine uranium and coal, an organizer for the Navajos told an Amherst audience Tuesday night.

"They'll bring in the federal marshals and if they can't move them, then they'll bring in the military. Helicopters are going to be coming in and bombing," said Bruce Elijah, a member of the Oneida nation in southwest Ontario.

Elijah predicted resistance to the relocation, which will affect 10,000 people, and asked for donations and materials. "I am trying to organize a food drive for these people," he said. "We figure that by July, they're going to be closing all the routes to the community."

Elijah's appearance at the Bangs Community Center was sponsored by the University of Massachusetts American Indian Association and the Third World Women's Center. There are about 50 native American students at UMass, but no Navajos, according to Deirdre Almeida, who handles native American admissions.

Elijah said he hopes public pressure will spur Congress to repeal the Navajo-Hopi Land Settlement Act of 1974. The law reduces Navajos' and Hopis' sheep herds by 90 percent, forbids home construction and mandates relocation by July 1986, he said.

Elijah told of hardships of native Americans already relocated to cities: "The old ones who are relocated do not survive. They only go through the motions."

In urban areas, he said, "I've seen some people so desperate for drink that they drink hair spray. . .This is what the city has to offer us."

Reports of harassment decline

By KATHRYN POHNER
Collegian Correspondent

There are fewer reports than three years ago of sexual harassment at the University of Massachusetts, according to a survey released yesterday, but this does not mean harassment is on the decline, according to researchers who conducted the survey.

The results of the survey, conducted by Joyce Clark and Debbie Rubenstein of the Student Affairs Research and Evaluation Office, were released yesterday at a forum conducted by the University's Office of Human Relations.

The forum, titled, "Sexual Harassment on Campus: A Changing Picture?" compared the findings of a similar survey conducted at UMass in 1983 to those of a survey conducted in February.

"The reported rate of sexual harassment on this campus has declined," Rubenstein said, while emphasizing that reported figures do not tell the whole story.

About 15 percent of the women surveyed in February said that they had been harassed, compared with about 26 percent in 1983.

The two surveys were nearly identical. Added to the recent survey, however, were questions on student-to-student harassment.

"We wanted to make the questions as comparable as possible," Clark said. "We kept the telephone interview the same length as in the 1983 survey."

In the interviews, female undergraduates chosen at random were asked if they had had any experiences with sexual harassment at UMass, including experiences with University staff or instructors.

Participants were also asked how often they felt such situations were experienced by other women.

The survey also asked whether respondents were aware of the University's policy prohibiting sexual harassment and of federal and state laws on the subject.

Survey results state that 91 percent of the 347 women interviewed knew that sexual harassment is illegal, and 67 percent were aware that UMass has a policy addressing harassment.

The survey also indicated that most undergraduate women — 59 percent — would turn to the Everywoman's Center for support if they had a sexual harassment complaint, while 19.9 percent would turn to the Legal Services Office and 14.5 percent would go to the UMass police. The survey gave these choices for women to pick from instead of having them answer randomly.

Picketers protest harassment of gays

By DAVE BOARDMAN
Collegian Staff

Despite low turnout for a picket held last Friday outside the Whitmore Administration Building, an organizer said the event was successful in making administrators aware of harassment against gays and lesbians on campus.

Paul Throne, a member of the Lesbian, Bisexual, Gay Alliance, said he had hoped at least a dozen people would participate. Only a few students showed up. "I was really disappointed in the number of people who were there," Throne said.

The protest was planned as a delayed response to the campus visit by anti-gay activist Paul Cameron two weeks ago. Since Cameron's visit, Throne said, incidents of violence and harassment have dramatically increased at UMass. Cameron, a psychologist, called for imprisonment and castration of homosexuals.

The picketers spoke with administrators as they entered Whitmore and informed them of repercussions from the speech, Throne said, adding that the officials "weren't really aware of what's been happening."

Director of Public Safety Gerald T. O'Neil said that no reports of harassment or violence against gays and lesbians on campus have been filed with UMass police. "If the department does receive a complaint, we can act on it," he said.

Throne said many acts go unreported because victims do not wish to be identified as gay or lesbian.

A coalition from the lesbian and gay community will meet next week with administrators and public safety officials to examine the consequences of Cameron's speech, Throne said. "We need to press for some kind of review about the rally. I anticipate things like this are going to be happening more often," he said.

Graduate Student Senate will hold elections May 6

The Graduate Student Senate will hold elections for its officers on May 6 from 3:30-7:30 p.m. in Campus Center room 917. A question about whether to support the Massachusetts Public Research Information Group will also appear on the ballot.

Incumbent President George Claxton will run for re-election unopposed, and current Executive Officer Gary Jackaky will be uncontested in his bid for treasurer.

History Student Jonathan Frank and Public Health student Ralph Sbragia are running against each other for the senate Vice-Presidency, while Nancy Muller-Milligan and Antony Zagrados will face each other for Executive Officer.

The MassPIRG question was raised by graduate students who wanted to vote on the question but were not allowed to cast a ballot in the SGA election.

A MassPIRG representative said that the group did not want to exclude graduate students, but that the SGA would not open the election to them.

English professor honored with Medal

By CRAIG SANDLER
Collegian Staffr

The highest honor the University can give, the Chancellor's Medal, was presented last night to English professor Arthur F. Kinney after he discussed the social implications of Shakespeare's classic tragedy Macbeth in a lecture at Memorial Hall.

Macbeth is a plhy of "horrible imaginings" which reflect the political turmoil of Shakespeare's day and the inner turmoil of one of its principal figures, King James I, said the English Renaissance specialist to an audience of 200.

The medal was presented to Kinney by associate to the Chancellor James Leheny, who in his remarks recalled the long association between the two men, dating from when they were "clever teenagers" at the University, in Leheny's words.

"We have become a better University" thanks to the work of Kinney, said Leheny shortly before he handed the scholar a medal recognizing Kinney's "Outstanding service to the University."

Referring to Macbeth's "blood and organs spilling across the stages of our minds," Kinney said the play was about "not such brutal present fears as these but one of horrible imaginings" born of Macbeth's ambition and guilt.

The "atmosphere of midnight evil" that pervades Macbeth Kinney related to the political era of the play's creation, the first years of the 1600's.

William Oram, an associate English professor at Smith College called the lecture "very good" and "an honoring not of Arthur but of the whole renaissance wing of the department, which was very nice and very typical of Arthur."

English professor Arthur F. Kinney was awarded the Chancellor's Medal last night.

Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey, who indicated earlier he would attend, was absent from the evening's events, which included a reception and dinner.

Otto Preminger dead at 80

NEW YORK (AP) — Otto Preminger, the autocratic director whose 37 films included Anatomy of a Murder, and The Man With The Golden Arm, and often dealt with subjects then considered taboo, died early today. He was 80 and had cancer.

Preminger died at 12:42 a.m. in bed at his apartment, with his wife Hope, and a nurse at his side, said police spokesman Sgt. Ron Severin.

He was known as an innovator, challenging the film industry with movies like 1953 The Moon is Blue, which was opposed by the Catholic Church; the 1954 Carmen Jones, a modern-day adaptation of Bizet's opera with an all-black cast; and 1956's Golden Arm, which starred Frank Sinatra and depicted narcotics use.

He also appeared in five films, including Stalag 17, in which he portrayed the dictatorial commandant of a German prisoner-of war camp.

Preminger was born Dec 5, 1905, in Vienna, Austria, and earned a law degree there in 1928. He came to the United States in 1935 and the following year made his first U.S. film, Under Your Spell.

He also was on the faculty at Yale Drama School until 1940, and then became a stage director in New York, winning the Critics Choice Award for Broadway productions.

Corrections

Due to an editing error, the number reported killed in the Armenian genocide was written incorrectly Tuesday. It should have been 1.5 million, not 1.5.

Yesterday's story on Jonathan Hite incorrectly reported his title. He is the University's director of alumni relations. Dallas Darling is the director of alumni affairs.

Make Ron's day

Timothy Harris

The American reaction to the bombing of Libya was a little short of overwhelming. Ten thousand West Germans were in the streets, civil disobedience was held all over the United Kingdom, but here? Apparently our little gathering of around 300 was one of the largest in the nation. Were we asleep? Are we asleep? Perhaps it was all only on television

We Yankees have been provided a rather unique view of what happened. The scene opens for us in a sort of an Arabian Casablanca. At the bar is the Baader-Meinhoff gang, drinking Molotov cocktails, the house specialty. The Red Brigade is having a friendly poker game with a few die-hards from the Symbionese Liberation Army. A group of Libyans are in the backroom issuing orders over red telephones to Cuba, Nicaragua and Palestine. A Shiite Moslem is outside warming up a truck. Moammar Khadafy is throwing darts at an 8 x 10 glossy of Reagan.

The door flies open with a bang and a hush falls over the room. There stands Ronald Reagan, with the physique of a Marine and steely resolve in his eye. Flanking him are George Schultz and Caspar Weinberger, looking rather nervous. The White House press corps, banned from the bar, are just outside, furiously taking notes. "Yer a tin-pot ya-hoo whose mama wears army boots," growls Reagan in his best Clint Eastwood voice.

Khadafy lays down his darts and advances menacingly. "You sir, are an imperialist swine pig-dog, and may the fleas of a thousand camels infest your armpits." Reagan's hand moves slowly to the Magnum revolver slung low over his lean hips. "I've had about enough of you Loony-tunes and misfits." The SLA and the Red Brigade have by now put down their cards and are looking on apprehensively. "And I aim to clean up this place." Khadafy reaches for his scimitar and shouts "Mad-dog!"

Reagan squints and in a stage whisper says, "Go ahead punk, make my day."

'MY TURN!'

When the smoke clears there is blood and guts and broken furniture everywhere. Reagan calmly blows the smoke from his glowing revolver, tips his spotless white hat, and spits on the floor. "I just gotta do what I gotta do," he grunts. He leaves. The door slams behind him. The scene fades to black. A McDonalds commercial takes its place, lauding the virtues of Chicken McNuggets.

This theater of the absurd is more or less the "Made in the USA" version of what happened. We'd rather not be confused by the facts.

Our European allies have been portrayed as cowering in the wings of history, afraid to take decisive action, letting America draw the heat. The truth is that they have observed America's Rambo-esque style before, most recently in Grenada and Nicaragua, and do not want to get too close. The biggest bully on the block is a dangerous friend to have.

There is a certain racist logic which reasons that the deaths of scores of Libyan civilians are justified in retribution for the life of an American G.I. "It is unforunate," we say, "but truly surgical bombings are really not possible." So a few Libyans are accidentally killed, they're not really people anyway. A 15-month-old baby? Well, she was Khadafy's daughter. Unfortunate, but that's what he gets for breeding, the pest. This is the logic of unreasoning hatred. We have seen it before.

And we continue on in our TV-induced somnambulism. Ugly realities don't particularly bother us because they are always at arm's length. James Baldwin has said that there is nothing more dangerous than a nation of sleepwalkers. It's about time we woke up.

Timothy Harris is a contributing columnist.

Students' educational loss

Bill Bennett

When the 1986 academic year comes to an end, the University will be taking part in an important event that may go unnoticed by many. Yes, finals will be over and the summer vacations will have begun, but there will not be many who realize that the students at the University of Massachusetts-Amherst were wronged! There will not be many who understand that the University will be allowing a most valuable resource to simply vanish, never to return. No one will detect the decline in education offered at this University. Not many will notice the disappearance of a truly outstanding UMass professor. Few students will return in September knowing that Professor Debra Gross of the political science department will not be returning with them.

Although many individuals in the administration may have pictured this scene in their dreams, it's one that will remain in their minds only and will not develop into reality. Why? Well, when it comes to professors like Debra Gross, I can honestly say that, on behalf of many students, you're talking one of the best. Professor Gross has done an outstanding job in and out of the classroom. She has added to the political science department, and to education in general, what many students have searched for for years: an unbiased, competent, and caring professor. One who not only lets you speak in class, but hears what you have to say. A professor who continuously shows her dedication to students through her commitments and involvement in both the classroom atmosphere and in the individual setting...a setting highly encouraged, especially at such a large university.

Throughout my years in the political science department, I have personally found Gross to be friendly, willing to listen, enjoyable, and truly inspiring. Professor Gross was able to give me what many others could only attempt...an education that will always be with me. And I believe that it is not simply because of what she taught but more importantly because of how she taught it.

I am asking everyone and anyone who really cares about an outstanding educaton to call the political science department (545-2438), the Office of the Chancellor (545-2211), and the Student Government Association President's Office (545-0341) to voice your concerns. Let's raise our voices in unison for Professor Debra Gross and ask the political science department to please reconsider their decision to let professor Gross leave. We must communicate to the administration and faculty that we, as students, are not simply losing a professor with the departure of Debra Gross, we are losing a valuable part of our education.

Bill Bennett is the SGA campus president.

Chance to limit blown

The Reagan administration has once again shown its contempt for the people of the world and their hopes for a peaceful, secure future. By conducting yet another nuclear test this week in Nevada, the administration forced the Soviet Union to finally end their eight-month unilateral moratorium on nuclear testing, and ruined the possibility of a quick and easy halt of testing. Reagan says he is in favor of eventual disarmament, but he refused to take even the simple first step of joining a test ban.

Last August, Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev declared that the USSR would unilaterally stop all their nuclear testing until the end of the year, and that if the United States would join the moratorium it would go on indefinitely. When the end of the year came around and we had not stopped testing, the Soviets extened the deadline to March 31. After that, they said they would not begin testing again unless this country conducted another test. And Reagan blew our final opportunity this week.

When Gorbachev first proposed the test ban, Reagan gave several excuses for not going along. None of them hold water. First of all, he said the Soviets declared the moratorium after they "finished all their tests." As if testing new military technology, which is an ongoing process, can ever be "finished." Secondly, by everyone's estimates, the Soviet Union is behind the United States in nuclear technology. And thirdly, even if the tests were not finished when the Soviets declared the moratorium, they gave the administration plenty of time (eight months) to finish them.

Reagan's other excuse for not participating in the test ban was that the Soviets would not agree to on-site inspection to verify that they wouldn't cheat. But when the Soviets stated that they would accept complete verification measures, including on-site inspection, Reagan still would not join the moratorium. All this indicates that Reagan simply is not sincere when he says he is interested in ending the arms race.

During his reelection campaign, when he transformed himself temporarily from a hawk into a dove, Reagan said that "a nuclear war can never be won and must never be fought." Admirable words, but if this is true, what could possibly be the point of refusing to take part in a bilateral, mutually verifiable test ban as a first step toward disarmament? How can he justify spending countless billions on weapons that destroy human life rather than on things that improve human life, like education, housing, jobs, and so on?

Reagan has shown that he will not life a finger to halt the race unless he is forced to do so by the pressure of world and US public opinion. Congress also has the power to go over his head to stop testing. There is presently a bill in each house of Congress to cut off funds for testing as long as the Soviets do not test. The bill is called HR-3442 in the House and S-2200 in the Senate. I urge everyone to write or call their Congressperson to tell them you support passage of these bills.

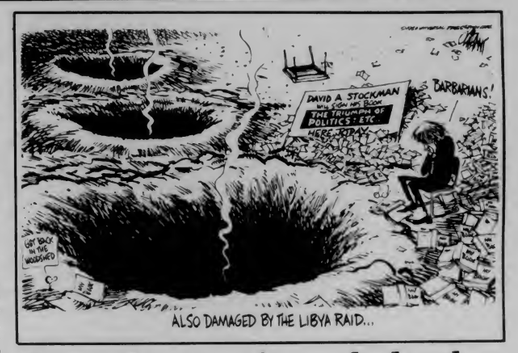
Genocide and the media

Peter Dow

Genocide has been one of this century's most effective tools in the fight against undesireable or dissident populations. Hitler used it against the Jews in 1940-1945, the Cambodian government used it against its population in the 1970s, and the Turks used it against the Armenians in 1915-1917. Yet two of the most extreme examples of genocide have managed to escape worldwide attention and condemnation; the Ukrainian famine in 1932-1933, and the slaughter of the Afgan population since 1979. An investigation into both tragedies reveals some interesting facts about the nature of the Soviet Union and the western media.

The horrendous situation in the Ukraine began in 1932, after 15 years of unsuccessful attempts by Moscow to solidify communist rule in this largest non-Russian republic in the Soviet Union. Stalin ordered the Ukrainian-Russian border to be sealed, and then proceeded to starve the Ukrainians. The famine was not brought on by drought, or crop failure, or war. It was a deliberate tactic to achieve totalitarian control over an autonomous population. Stalin used 100,000 Russian communist party activists to physically remove virtually all the food from the region, and in less than one year, he had succeeded in systematically murdering seven million humans (including three million children under the age of seven). Yet during this whole process, Stalin was not only able to muzzle the western media, and woo western intellectuals, but he also gained official diplomatic recognition from the United States.

Frighteningly, we see history being repeated today in Afganistan. The Soviets have occupied this country for more than six years, employing the "scorched earth" policy of starvation, similar to the one used in the Ukrainian massacre. The newest factor, however, is modern technology, in the form of the MI-24 helicopter gunship, which has bombed fields ready for harvest and has machine-gunned livestock. According to the Afganistan Relief Committee, more than one million Afgans have died.



Yet the media ignores this terrible human tragedy (much as it did the Ukrainian famine) for fear of reawakening the Soviet "sense of insecurity."

These issues of media cowardice and Soviet totalitarian policies came together recently in the debate over the UN Genocide Treaty. The Soviets condemned the United States for not signing the Treaty (which has been on the table since 1949). Soon, the radical types in this country (always eager to bash America) reacted obediently, claiming America "obviously" supported genocide because we refused to sign the Treaty. They never bothered to even read the Treaty, nor did they investigate why America has consistently rejected it.

According to the Treaty, genocide includes "acts committed with intent to destroy a national, ethical, racial or religious group." Notice that "political genocide" is allowed, as a result of Stalin's success in 1948 in striking this phrase from the list of outlawed practices. Thus, every genocidal act in this century is not punishable if the perpetrators claim it was done for "political" reasons. The UN's enforcement powers (almost nonexistent anyway) are now totally ineffective, and allow totalitarian regimes to continue persecuting individuals whose only crime is their desire to be free.

All of this just reinforces the fear that the western democracies are in great danger. Not only do we not take action against Soviet expansionism and terror, but we are afraid to even mention such Soviet action lest we make them feel "uncomfortable." One can only hope that the west awakens from its "voluntary ignorance" and cowardice in time to save itself. In order to survive, we cannot continue to look the other way, withdraw from our moral responsibilities, and close our minds to the advancement of the Soviets' foreign policy.

Tragedy unacknowledged

Gail Guzelian

Genocide: the mass extermination of an entire ethnic group, a crime which is punishable by UN-chartered international law. Yet the horrible reality of genocide has been allowed to take place in the past and still continues today.

On April 24, 1915, the first genocide of the twentieth century set a precedent for others, as the Young Turk Regime rounded up the leaders and intellectuals of the Armenian community and murdered them. This was only the beginning of the Turkish plan to remove the Armenian presence from Anatolia. This fact is well-documented by historians throughout the world.

In 1984, United States Representtive Tony Coelho introduced House Joint Resolution 192 to the House of Representatives, designating April 24 as a day of remembrance of victims of genocide, especially the 1.5 million Armenians in Turkey between 1915 and 1923. Under pressure from the Reagan administration and the State Department, passage of this commemorative resolution has constantly been stalled. This constitutes an embarrassing statement by the United States that in essence disregards historical fact and denotes the importance of human rights.

President Reagan has stated that passage of this resolution "would harm relations with an important ally and might inadvertantly reward terroristic attacks on Turks." This administration is, in effect, stating that recognition of this horrible tragedy is less important than political expediency. While it may be true that Turkey will be offended by this resolution, Turkey's present day government should be strong enough to admit the guilt of its predecessors, instead of stomping its feet in a tantrum of denial. President Reagan's excuses for blocking passage of this resolution are unacceptable.

First, while Turkey is a NATO ally to whom the US taxpayers give nearly $1 billion in aid each year, it is a country which continuously suppresses human freedom within its borders. Dr. Andrew Copan, professor of education at DePaul University, has stated that "Armenian Christians are in a virtual state of bondage to Turks...property of Armenians have been taken away with no recourse to police protection or the courts, as due process is not recognized for these people." As well as being one of the most frequent violators of human rights, as cited by Amnesty International, Turkey continues to deny the facts of 1915. Despite evidence in the US National Archives documenting the undisputed occurrence of the Armenian Genocide, the US administration allows Turkey to influence the failure of this resolution. Reagan's policy that passage of this resolution would hurt Turkey's feelings is a poor excuse for distorting history and telling survivors of the genocide that their parents were not killed before their own eyes.

The second stand that the Reagan administration takes is that passage of HJ Res 192 would encourage terrorism. The continual cover up and Turkish denial of the Armenian Genocide creates the frustration and helplessness which beget acts of extremist desperation. For 71 years Armenians have been attempting, though peaceful and legal channels to gain recognition of the Armenian Genocide — to no avail. Extremist acts will not escalate if a commemorative resolution recognizing the victims of genocide is passed. This action would ease some of the desperation that ultimately leads to terrorist acts. In the words of California Governor George Deukmejian, HJ Res 192 would be "a single, eloquent statement against violence."

By dismissing HJ Res 192, the US government is rubbing salt in the unhealed wounds of a people who have experienced the atrocity of genocide. The United States must stop succumbing to pressure by Turkish officials who refuse to admit the occurrence of this well-documented crime. The Armenian people have waited too long for their wounds to be healed.

Indiscriminate labels dangerous

There is a new trend within the more liberal-thinking group on campus. This is the indiscriminate labelling of anyone not within their camp as either a fascist or Nazi. I have attended many rallies and protests within my last three years as a student here, but now, more than ever, this unfounded labelling is inhibiting the process of rational thinking, as well as clouding the issues.

While one of the speakers was addressing the crowd at the "U.S. Out of Libya" rally at Whitmore, one particular gentleman stood up on the handrail of the ramp and gave a "Sieg Heil" (Nazi salute) to the counter-protesters on the outskirts of the gathering. When he jumped down, I asked why he had done this. He replied that they were fascists.

As a Jew, I find this behavior very insulting. Comparing last week's military strike against Libya with the systematic extermination of millions is like comparing apples with oranges. The image and meaning behind Nazism should never be forgotten. However, if the true sense of Nazism continues to be cheapened by the haphazard tagging of anyone who agrees with the President's stand as a Nazi, then the significance and true meaning of the word will eventually be lost. What once represented one of the most heinous acts committed by mankind against itself becomes trivialized. When it becomes necessary to label someone a Nazi (and there are appropriate situations), the term will have no teeth. However, if the sense of the word is left intact, it should serve as a flashing warning, one all should heed.

By preserving accuracy and avoiding vagueness whenever possible, intelligent opinion can be formed more easily, and, hopefuly, solutions to the world's many problems can be found. We should continue to question and argue, but words should be chosen judiciously, remembering the awesome power they hold and the possible consequences of their misrepresentation.

Limiting firearms is no answer

As a firearms owner, I found the Tuesday's column by Jeffry Bartash to be a collection of half-truths, outright lies, and hysterical anti-gun tripe. Let's look at some of the facts behind the Firearm Owners Protection Act.

The act, if passed, would allow the sale of firearms across state lines only if the transaction is legal in the state of both the seller and the buyer. Therefore, the "friendly neighborhood murderer" can't move to another state "to rob and kill."

Although the bill is opposed by some police organizations, it is supported by others, including the International Union of Police Associations, AFL-CIO. The main reason for police support, which Bartash neglects to mention, is the bill's mandatory penalties for the criminal misuse of a firearm in a federal crime of violence of five years for the first offense and 10 for the second. These are in addition to any other sentence, not to be served concurrently.

Perhaps the most naive--if not ludicrous-beliefs put forth in the column are the statements concerning gun control as a cure-all for crime. In fact, the criminal misuse of firearms accounts for 0.19 percent of total firearms owned, and only 0.4 percent of an estimated 55 to 60 million handguns. How can anyone believe that the government could control handguns any more than they can control the influx of drugs, which have been highly illegal for years now? Would criminals register their guns when crossing state lines or turn them in if handguns were banned? The simple fact is, over 99 percent of firearms owners are law-abiding citizens who have been unnecessarily restricted by the Gun Control Act of 1968, which treats all gun owners as potential criminals who must be watched at all times lest they be tempted into violence by their firearms. The Firearm Owners Protection Act will put the blame on the people who misuse guns, the criminals, and not the otherwise law-abiding person who runs afoul of another state's gun laws simply because he/she is not a resident of that state.

No ignoring Armenian genocide

I'm not a radical or a subversive or even a rabble-rouser. I'm simply a young Armenian. Yet, there is nothing simple about being Armenian. With this persona, I carry a bothersome load; the fact that in 1915 the Ottoman Turkish Empire willingly, actively, and knowingly massacred 1.5 million Armenians. Most people forget this and a lot of people tell me to forget. I can't. Somehow it seems impossible for me to forget that my homeland isn't mine. It's hard for me to forget my grandmother who lost eleven members of her family. It is hard to forget that the present Turkish government denies the Armenian Genocide ever took place and that they are actively involved in rewriting history. The worst thing I can't forget is that the country I was born in refers to the Armenian Genocide as alleged and won't acknowledge the facts behind history simply because Turkey has military bases that america wants. Yet...there's nothing simple about that either.

For the last 70 years, April 24 has been the day Armenians around the world commemorate the deaths of our people who were brutally killed at the hands of the Turks. We do not come together to prove the genocide. We are mourning the fact. Elie Wiesel once said, "To forget is to make oneself an accomplice of the executioner." Maybe it's easy for some to forget history, but I can't.

We should be thankful that there is a nice lineup of bands for the outdoor spring concerts. Although there's no truly outstanding talent, each show has something on the menu. Anyway, these are outdoor shows so you can have fun in the sun without being riveted to the musicians. Here's the deal;

Saturday: The Greek Area Concert will feature Gary U.S. Bonds, The Fabulous Heavyweights and The Drive. Bonds is a buddy of Bruce Springsteen's and he does the same hard-driving rock stuff that means something, like Bruce, but just not as well. The show should be fun but with little real flare.

Sunday: The Eastside Area Concert will bring you The Del Fuegos, Marshall Crenshaw, The Robert Cray Band and Cabo Frio. The Fuegos have a real good, fresh act and the organizers of this event should get credit for bringing this band to campus. Marshall Crenshaw has a special following but Robert Cray and Frio should not be overlooked. This will definitely be the better of the two shows this weekend with lots of variety and talent.

Sunday, May 3rd: The Southwest Area presents John Cafferty and Beaver Brown, The Modern Plaidz and The Souls. If you listen to Top 40 radio, you have probably heard Brown and Cafferty's hits like "C-I-T-Y." To me they sound like a poor-man's Springsteen.

As far as Spring Concert is concerned, it looks like there's a decent reggae band, a blues band and a few other bands scheduled but the details are classified information.

Other than the campus shows, this is not an oustanding week for music in the valley.

Tonight, WSYL Radio presents a local band showcase with Circle, The Outpatients, 8th Route Army, Liquid Lesson and Undergound Railroad. The show will be held in the Student Union Ballroom and will cost $4 for UMass students and $6 for everyone else. Most of these bands have a good following and play original music. If you go you will get a good dose of variety.

John Mayall's Bluesbreakers will play with The Wildcat O'Halloran Band at Pearl Street. The show will cost you $12 at the door and $11 for advance tickets. Mayall began with Eric Clapton and Jimmy Page and many other British 60s blues artists. He has been belting out the blues in different variations for a while and this show should be straight ahead, solid blues.

Max Creek, the famed Grateful Dead cover band will be playing at 252 Elm Street in Westfield tommorow night.

Friday night, Southside Johnny and the Asbury Jukes are playing with the Riverside Drivers at the Springfield Civic Center Exhibition Hall. The Jukes have been playing in clubs for some time and have developed a real polished act thanks to none other than Papa Pete Abraham, one-time scientist turned wrestling champ. They are a good club act but I'm not sure about seeing them in the Exhibition Hall.

ZZ Top will play the Hartford Civic Center on Saturday, Sunday and Monday. This band is real big on the charts these days and there should be a few tickets left for the serious fans.

Also on Sunday, there will be a Jam for Survival at Sheehan's Cafe. For $4 you can see Carl Dematteo, John Cruz & Joe Boyle, Rosey Palm, The Llamas, The Nice Boys and The Pocket Fisherman. All proceeds will benefit the Northampton Survival Center.

Monday night, They Might Be Giants will play at the Iron Horse Cafe in Northampton. This band hails from New York City. The price tag is $5.

Gazelles fall at Dartmouth

HANOVER, NH - The fifth-ranked University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team dropped its second straight game, losing an 11-10 decision to eighth-ranked Dartmouth College yesterday.

Senior attackman Bunny Forbes had a goal and three assists and sophomore attackman Ginny Armstrong had two goals and an assist to lead the Gazelles. Junior defensman Emily Hummiston and freshman attackman Cathy Fuhrman scored two each and senior Mary Scott and Lisa Griswold also scored.

Down 10-8 with about 12 minutes to go in the game, Griswold, the Gazelles leading scorer, was ejected from the game for committing a flagrant foul on a Dartmouth defender. Forced to cope without her, the UMass offense bore down as junior defensman Emily Hummiston, switched to offense in place of Griswold, scored a pair of goals to draw UMass even, 10-10 with six minutes remaining in the game.

The Gazelles held the ball for the final shot and had an opportunity to win the game. But UMass lost the ball in front of the Dartmouth net with 10 seconds remaining. Dartmouth's Ann Mollering picked up the ball, ran the length of the field and was fouled. She scored on her free shot with three seconds left.

confidence in herself has improved."

"I don't really know why I'm like that. I just have to pitch my game. Getting upset doesn't solve anything, so I try not to let things get to me," Stockley said. "Maybe it's because I know that when a ball is hit on the ground or in the air, someone is going to get it. Our defense is very good."

"Lynn is a light-hearted kid, one of a loose bunch of kids," Sortino said. "One reason why this team is so good is because they all are really loose. I think that's key."

With at least six more games remaining on the schedule, Stockley also has the opportunity to eclipse a few personal milestones. Her 15 victories equals her season best, as she has won 15 games in each of her three previous seasons. Stockley is also 13 strikeouts away from her personal record of 118 K's set last year. She has already broken her own record for shutouts in a season, which stood at 10 before the BC no-hitter.

Because Stockley has been the mark of consistency over the last three seasons, it is hard to imagine her improving from year to year. Despite this, Sortino, however, has seen a marked improvement from Stockley's freshman year.

"Her effectiveness is far more superior now than what it was three years ago," Sortino said. "She can come at you in so many ways. She can throw it by you, but, at the same time, she can keep you of balance with her variety of pitches. She couldn't do that consistently before."

The Minutewomen will need Stockley to be at her best, as UMass enters the stretch drive of the season. The Minutewomen have three crucial doubleheaders coming up, and the success of Stockley will no doubt control the destiny of this team.

"This is the best chance we've had since I've been here," Stockley said. "This is definitley the year for us. Now is our chance."

Baseball at home vs. Springfield

Riding an eight-game winning streak, the University of Massachusetts baseball team hosts Springfield College this afternoon at 3 p.m. at Earl Lorden Field.

Winners of 11 of their last 12 games, the 12-15 Minutemen are hoping to extend their streak thanks to the emergence of an impressive hitting attack which has knocked in 50 runs over its last four games. Junior left-fielder Jay Zerner leads the UMass offense with three homers, 24 runs batted in and a .427 average.

Freshman outfielder Mike Chambers is hitting .385 since being brought up from junior varsity while senior first baseman Jeff Cimini and junior second baseman Rob Holiday are hitting .375 and .372 respectively. Sophomore shortstop Steve Allen, hitting .308, leads the team with seven home runs.

SPORTS

Harvard can't 'stick' with UM, 10-9

Gorillas blow lead, but survive

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

Had the game been a few minutes longer, the hopes the University of Massachusetts lacrosse team has for its season may have been over yesterday.

Harvard University, given a little time, would have probably beaten the Gorillas yesterday at a cold Boyden Field, but seventh-ranked UMass snuck away with an important 10-9 victory — despite Greg Fisk's stick.

After blowing an 8-2 second-quarter lead, the Gorillas found themselves trailing 10-9 with 4:42 left in the game. Harvard controlled UMass' ensuing possession and another rescued his teammates as it failed to beat the shot clock.

Then, a senior midfielder then began clearing the ball for UMass, but was slashed by Harvard's Chris Pujols with 46 seconds left. As Pujols left the field, Harvard coach Bob Scalise played his final card, asking official Don Johnson to check the width of Fisk's stick.

The head of the stick, after close examination, was determined to be too narrow by a quarter-inch, and Fisk was given a non-releasable three-minute penalty. With each team a man down, Harvard took the ball, but attackman Tom Corcoran was assisted for warding off and UMass regained possession. Attackman Greg Cannella then ran out the last few seconds to preserve the win.

Had Harvard tied the game, UMass would've played at least the first 2:14 of overtime short a man, and the way the Crimson were pushing the placent Gorillas, the game would've been lost. UMass has won six straight, but the last three haven't been impressive. This is a good team, but one that needs to play like one for 60 minutes, not just when it feels like it.

"We had them, they were reeling and we let them get away," sighed UMass coach Dick Garber, who is suffering from bronchial pneumonia and wasn't helped by the rain and sleet that pelted Boyden. "Then Fisk gets called for the illegal stick. I've told him about that before, but he said it was ok. It was a good call, I would've done the same thing. It was a dumb thing to have happen and it could've cost us a lot."

The illegal stick came to Scalise's attention when he watched the NESN cable replay of the UMass-New Hampshire. "I just made a mental note of it, the stick looks funny. Then, we were down by one and had a penalty called on us, so I figured it was the time. I'm proud of my kids, we almost beat a very good team."

The Gorillas will now tune-up for the Army game (1 p.m. Saturday at Boyden). A win would almost assure a playoff spot, a loss would seriously damage those hopes as UM has yet to beat any of the current top 15 teams. 10th-ranked Army also needs the win.

If the Gorillas play against Army like they did in the second half yesterday, the Cadets will roll over them. After going into halftime with a commanding 8-3 advantage, UMass stopped running its offense, failed to win key face-offs and generally did a lot of standing around waiting for something to happen.

"I think we lost our killer instinct," said attackman Greg Cannella. "We had the lead and sat back. we can't afford to do that. Especially against a team like Army. We'd better smarten up, and soon."

Harvard took a quick 1-0 lead on a Pujols' breakaway with 12:15 left in the first quarter. But a goal by Cannella (who had a goal and two assists) started a four-goal spree and the Gorillas were rolling.

All-American attackman Tom Carmean, assisted by Kelley Carr, made it 2-1. Senior co-captain Steve Moreland then took Carr's pass and ripped his first score of the year home. Carmean followed that up with his second, assisted by Cannella, and the 800 or so that braved the weather sensed the Crimson were in trouble.

Rufus Clark broke up the string, scoring for Harvard, but UMass led 4-2 after one quarter. Rich Abbott then took advantage of a fallen defender and beat Harvard goalie Mark Vita for a 5-2 lead. Fisk (assisted by Pat Cain), Carmean (assisted by Cannella) and freshman Greg Collins (assisted by Cain) all scored and Harvard was looking at a blow-out, down 8-2. Brad Raymonds scored with 1:50 left in the period, but the 8-3 halftime lead seemed safe for the Gorillas.

But Harvard ruled the third period, outscoring UMass 2-0 as they scored the next three as Clark, Corcoran and Tim McCaffrey did the damage, and it was 8-6 with 13:23 left in the game.

The UMass defense, as they have in the last three shaky wins, was playing pretty well, but everyone else was watching them. Face-off man Seamus McGovern, after handling Corcoran earlier in the game, couldn't beat the adjustments the Harvard senior made and lost every key draw, the UMass offense meanwhile pressed too hard and either lost passes or dropped them. Few UMass possessions lasted longer then 15 seconds before the ball was on the ground and up for grabs.

But Perry Seale's first goal of the season, after a nice feed by Carmean, with 12:29 left, followed by a Carmean score (assisted by Doug Musco) made it 10-6 and the Gorillas were back in command.

Pujols, then Nicky Nero, scored before Raymond connected with 2:42 left to set up the dramatic finish.

Lynn Stockley: Queen of the diamond

Softball ace dominates like few others have

By ROGER CHAPMAN

Senior pitcher Lynn Stockley

It would seem odd that a person who doesn't appear to have a care in the world would be the main ingredient for a recipe of winning. Most would rather have the over-intense, gung-ho type of personality that usually accompanies a consistent winning program.

Lynn Stockley isn't that type of person, and the University of Massachusetts softball team wouldn't have it any other way.

"Outwardly, if you don't know Lynn, there seems to be an even keel of temperment," said UMass head coach Elaine Sortino. "If you do know her, then you'll find a great competitor."

A great competitor and then some. Over Stockley's sparkling career at UMass, she has gained, if nothing else, respect from her elders and her peers in the East. Talk about UMass softball, and Stockley is usually the center of conversation. But does all of this recognition faze the Pittsfield native?

"No," said a soft-spoken Stockley. "I'm just a pitcher."

Maybe so, but Stockley's numbers speak for themselves. In her career at UMass, including Tuesday's 3-0 no-hit performance against Boston College, Stockley has dominated the region like few pitchers ever have or will.

Consider these numbers:

- In 558.7 career innings pitched, Stockley has a 60-21 record and an earned run average of 0.79. She has gone the distance in 73 of 81 career starts.
- This season, she is 15-1 with a microscopic earned run average of 0.19 over 110.7 innings. Stockley has thrown 11 shutouts, including nine-of-the-last 10 games she has started and three in-a-row.
- Opponents have hit a combined .093 and slugged .103 against her this season. She has allowed 37 hits, only three for extra bases.
- For her career, she has struck out 427 and walked 168 while throwing only 17 wild pitches, perhaps the most impresive stat considering that the best pitchers usually experience bouts of wildness.
- UMass is the only Eastern team ranked in the top 20, and if this world's a fair one, Stockley should be up for All-American honors for pacing them to that height.

In short, Stockley is at the head of her own class.

The Minutewomen, behind the pitching of their ace, are 28-6 and ranked 19th in the nation.

"Defense is the reason reason why my record gets better, Stockley said. "I have a great defense behind me."

This point was perfectly demonstrated in the eighth inning of Stockley's win over BC. With one out and runners at first and second, Stockley fielded a line drive grounder and threw to third for the force out. But Stockley's throw was way off the mark, and it took an acrobatic diving stab by junior third baseman Debbie Cole to prevent the ball and the game from rolling away. But according to Sortino, it's more than just a great defense that has made the difference in Stockley this season. Stockley possesses an uncanny poise that is rare in a game such as softball. She rarely, if ever, loses her temper, something that Sortino says has developed over the years.

"She has developed the capacity within herself to dig down deeper when the pressure is on," Sortino said. "As a competitor, when things are tight, Lynn gets within herself. It's been her style since she was a freshman. Her

ID needed to carry alcohol to concerts

By BOB KIEVRA
Collegian Staff

Students entering the outdoor spring concerts, which begin tomorrow, must show identification proving they are 21 or older if they bring alcoholic beverages, administrators said yesterday.

The change from past years is a result of increased University concern over liability insurance costs, said Michael Jones, Student Activities Office program director.

Gerald T. O'Neil, director of public safety, said police will now check IDs at entrances, but will not "card" anyone inside the concert area. He added that if persons carrying alcohol do not have IDs, they may have their drinks confiscated, face a show-cause hearing in court or, if the amount is large enough, be subject to arrest.

"For the sake of a lousy beer, it is not worth the aggravation," O'Neil said. "We are looking forward to having a nice concert free of problems."

Jones said the concert organizers are not trying to put a damper on the event, but "the University has the responsibility to protect itself and its residents. That's all these changes are meant to do.

"In the past all that we regulated was the quantity of alcohol brought to the concerts," he said. "This year, because of the increased risks associated with liability, we're also complying with the state law requiring people to be 21 to transport alcohol."

He said the changes were not made in an "administrative vacuum" without student input.

"Since last September we've had an ad hoc committee of students and staff overseeing the planning and production of the various concerts," he said. "The person who first raised the alcohol question happened to be one of the students."

Bob Lopes, talent coordinator for the Eastside Concert, which takes place Sunday, lamented the restraints but said he understands the administration's point of view.

"We have to accept the guidelines for now and prove that we're responsible students," Lopes said. "The spring concerts are the last thing before students have to buckle down for finals. They are a necessary part of college life."

Concern over liability for accidents involving alcohol has also spurred concert organizers to provide more training for student security staff and to increase the amount of fencing used for crowd control, Jones said.

"The open air, the music, the camaraderie are what make the concerts so enjoyable," he said. "Alcohol should not become the sole source of entertainment."

Dean of Students William F. Field said that rather than alcohol, "groups that run over their allotted time are 90 percent of the problem with UMass concerts. The Cheap Trick disaster in Southwest in 1984 shows this.

"Cutoff times must be enforced," Field said. "Cut the cable if you have to."

Officials answer asbestos charges

By IAN POLUMBAUM
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts officials, responding to charges that they and the state are "dragging their feet" on removing asbestos hazards from campus, yesterday conceded removal is not proceeding as fast as it should.

But they defended UMass' asbestos cleanup program as far superior to those of other institutions.

The Room 10 Committee, a student group named after a room in Arnold House where asbestos is spilling from pipe casings, this week demanded the University step up efforts to remove the substance from campus buildings.

Last year UMass-Amherst hired three asbestos removal workers after the state Division of Occupational Hygiene reported that most campus buildings posed a possible danger of exposure to asbestos fibers from crumbling insulation. Inhalation of the fibers can cause asbestosis—severe lung scarring—as well as cancer of the lungs, esophagus, colon and other organs.

Helena Donovan, a public health graduate student and Room 10 Committee member, said, "They've been dragging their feet on this ... We're here to learn, not to worry about getting sick."

Physical Plant operations supervisor Peter Wozniak said the three have worked steadily—they recently spent two weeks clearing asbestos above 400 square feet of false ceiling in the UMass infirmary—and that three more employees are now undergoing two months of training.

In clearing asbestos, "We are light years ahead of anyone else," Wozniak said. But he added, "Even with six people there are going to be circumstances where we literally won't have the people to deal with the problem."

Donald Robinson, an administrator at the Environmental Health and Safety Department, said, "Just hiring additional people isn't going to be the answer. We need to do the training and we need to do the monitoring" for asbestos hazards.

Both officials said asbestos is not a hazard unless it is exposed and crumbles into fibers which can be inhaled. Thus removal efforts have focused on buildings where asbestos is spilling or most likely to crumble.

Wozniak said, "Ultimately, all asbestos should be removed," but estimated that doing this at UMass would cost up to $7 million.

Donovan, reached last night, said the state should provide whatever funds are necessary for removing the substance from UMass-Amherst and other state campuses.

"Eventually it'll all have to be removed. So why not put the money into it sooner rather than later?" she said. "What they [Physical Plant and EHS] are doing with what they've got is admirable, but they just don't have the funds."

Both Wozniak and Robinson also said they were not aware of cracked asbestos in Arnold House room 10 until they saw a photograph of it in yesterday's Collegian. Robinson said an EHS staff member inspected the room several months ago and found no leaks, suggesting "the damage there is of recent origin."

Wozniak said, "Looking at the photograph, we should probably remove the damaged material immediately ... within a week."

Donovan said students and faculty in the public health department, which has offices in Arnold House, had understood the Physical Plant and EHS knew of the room 10 problem.

Low enrollment in the Stockbridge School of Agriculture is threatening one of the program's seven majors even though a new recruiting program was implemented last year, according to the director of the school.

High school students today are being funneled into the business and computer fields, resulting in a sharp decline in both agriculture students and Massachusetts-produced foods, according to Jack Denison, Stockbridge director for the last 15 years.

Disinformation conference opens today

By NANCY KLINGENER
Collegian Staff

A two-day conference aimed at combating disinformation on Central America will open today with the keynote speaker, Nicaraguan Ambassador Carlos Tunnerman, speaking at 8 p.m. in Mahar Auditorium.

"We're really trying to get behind the kinds of news stories that we get, particularly the kind that come out of the Reagan administration," said Judith Solsken, School of Education professor and member of Faculty/Staff for Peace in Central America, which is sponsoring the event.

The organization secured an appearance by Tunnerman, Managua's envoy to the US, Solsken said, because economics professor and group member William Gibson has served as an economic adviser to the Nicaraguan government.

Further events will be held in the School of Business Administration.

Mary Ellsberg, a health care worker from Nicaragua's Atlantic coast, will speak at 9:30 a.m. tomorrow on "health care and the impact of the contra war on health care in Nicaragua," Solsken said.

Following Ellsberg's speech will be workshops at 11 a.m. Several area residents who have visited Nicaragua will relate their experiences. Other workshops at that time will discuss the sanctuary movement and "how the other countries in Latin America, particularly the people in Brazil, see the situation in Latin America affecting them as well," she said.

At 2 p.m., Edward King, a retired Army colonel, now a consultant to members of Congress, will speak on "A Political or Military Solution in Central America?" At the same time, Rev. Philip Wheaton will address "Masks of US Militarization of the Region."

More workshops will be held at 4 p.m. on health care in Nicaragua, energy and the environment in Nicaragua, and land reform in El Salvador and Nicaragua.

Aquino offered US assistance

Reagan visiting leaders

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan welcomed Philippine President Corazon Aquino yesterday as he prepared to leave on a weeklong journey including meetings with Asian foreign ministers in Bali and world leaders in Tokyo.

The White House announced that Reagan talked the Philippine chief executive by other U.S. dignitaries in meeting the challenges that lie before her government.

It was the first time Reagan had talked to Aquino since she was installed in February following the downfall of the government led by Ferdinand Marcos.

The announcement said Reagan told Aquino he supports the aid package for the Philippine government, which had been unveiled here Wednesday, and is being sent to Congress.

The package consists of an emergency appropriation of $100 million in economic aid, another $50 million in military aid and a drawdown of $405 million of past appropriations for Philippine aid.

The president accompanied Mrs. Aquino and Vice President Reagan will fly to Los Angeles today and then to Honolulu, where Reagan plans to welcome Marcos.

On Wednesday, while stopping in Bali, Indonesia for a meeting of Southeast Asian foreign ministers, Reagan plans to confer with Philippine Vice President Salvador Laurel.

Meanwhile, the crisis over terrorism appeared likely to overshadow the economic problems that make up the formal agenda of the Tokyo summit scheduled for May 4-6.

"I think it is fair to say that one of the promises will be a discussion at the summit of international terrorism and cooperation with our allies," Deputy Press Secretary Larry Speakes said after meeting with the president yesterday.

Letter could bring peace

WASHINGTON (AP) — A letter by presidential envoy Philip Habib, declaring the Reagan administration would end aid to the contra rebels when Nicaragua signs a completed peace agreement, is being seen as a potential breakthrough in ending the conflict in Central America.

Rep. Jim Slattery, D-Kan., an opponent of aiding the rebels and the recipient of the letter, said yesterday, "I think it presents a historic opportunity for us to end the contra war."

Rep. Jim Leach, R-Iowa, also a foe of contra aid, called the letter "a very profound basis for reconciliation."

In the letter, April 11, Habib said the United States interprets existing draft proposals by the so-called Contadora nations as requiring a cessation of support to irregular forces.

He said the United States would support and abide by implementation of an agreement fulfilling the objectives of the Contadora peace effort if Nicaragua does likewise.

The Contadora objectives include specific steps to eliminate the military threat by Nicaragua, such as pledges and assurances elections and the restoration of democratic institutions.

Local cable TV conference in CC

The University of Massachusetts will host a two-day conference on local cable television programming tomorrow and Sunday in the lower-level of the Campus Center.

The conference, "Community participation: When cable makes a difference," is expected to draw between 200 and 300 people, said Irene Starr of the Center for Community Access Television in Amherst.

The conference will feature workshops on producing local cable programs, in addition to the legal aspects and federal restrictions, she said.

Among the speakers will be Massachusetts State Senator George Bachrach (D-Watertown), the co-chairman of the State Legislative Cable Caucus, who is expected to speak about legislative aspects of cable television, Starr said.

Registration for the conference will take place at noon Saturday in the Campus Center, and the registration fee is $35, she said.

Information revolution 'is a myth'

William Leiss: Computer revolution will not change society

By PATRICK JOHNSON
Collegian Staff

The information revolution, which is purported to be the greatest improvement to American society since the industrial revolution, is a myth, a communications expert said yesterday.

William Leiss, a communications professor at Simon Fraser University in Canada, spoke before 75 people in Thompson Hall on the topic of "The myth of the information society."

"The information revolution is a myth, a half-truth. Something important is happening in computer technology but not something that will change society," Leiss said.

He defined an information society as any economy where "one-half of the work force is engaged in informational occupations," which used to be considered service occupations.

"Someone took occupations which we are all familiar with and gave them a new title," he said.

Leiss recently published his third book, on the effects of advertising, titled, "Social Communication in Advertising."

After the information revolution is supposed to take place, with improvements in computer technology, only the people who can afford the technology, will have access to the world without leaving their homes, he said.

While improvements are being made in information processing, Leiss cited the rising illiteracy rate in the United States.

"A significant percentage of high school graduates can't understand anything more advanced than a comic book. While information resources are coming together...The capacity of people in the public schools is eroding. This is the paradox of the informational society," he said.

"The information revolution will not benefit anyone, if no one can use it," Leiss said.

Local walk supports march

By JOE SHARTRAND
Collegian Correspondent

A 12-mile walk is set for 9 a.m. tomorrow from the Student Union Building at the University of Massachusetts to Look Park in Northampton, sponsored by a student group to show support for the participants in the Great Peace March.

The walk will proceed through the center of Amherst, down Route 9, and will end at the Northampton park with a picnic lunch, said Dawn Hamel, a member of Peacemakers, which is coordinating the Peace Walk. Transportation will be provided back to Amherst.

"This walk is to benefit the marchers of the Great Peace March," Hamel said. The main focus of the walk, she added, is to try to get people to support a nuclear test ban.

"This is important [nuclear test ban] because the Soviet Union hasn't been testing and this is the first step in stopping the nuclear arms race," she said. The other reasons for the walk are to raise money and continue the efforts of the marchers to promote peace, she said.

The UMass Graduate Student Senate has offered to pay eight graduate students $2 a kilometer for the walk. "That will be about $190 if we can find some grad students to go," Hamel said.

"We decided to do this walk to get support and money for the Peace March so that it can continue," she said. About 500 people are in the Great Peace March which was started by the Pro-Peace organization. The organization went bankrupt and now the participants must get money, permits and supplies on their own. Hamel said this inspired the Peacemakers to organize this walk to show support for the marchers' efforts to continue.

Panel tomorrow via satellite

By BLYTH HARPER
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts will be linked by satellite to London, Vienna, Kyoto, and Boston for a broadcast journalism conference at 1 p.m. tomorrow in Mahar Auditorium.

Sponsored by the Christian Science Monitor, and including over 150 colleges worldwide, the conference will examine the role of the broadcast media in identifying and reporting major issues, said Sut Jhally, an assistant professor of communication studies at UMass and local coordinator of the conference.

Participants from the colleges will be able to call in questions for the panels of journalists and international affairs specialists. Panelists include Edwin Newman, former NBC news correspondent; Pierre Salinger, chief foreign reporter for ABC News; Georgie Anne Geyer of Washington Week in Review; and others.

The teleconference will be followed by a UMass panel discussion at 4 p.m. Its moderator, Dianne Cherry, assistant professor of communications, expressed concern that the Monitor dropped Brasilia, the only scheduled Third World site, from the list of participants.

Cherry said excluding Brasilia was a "crime of omission" that showed "insensitivity" on the part of the planners. "The Third World is most of the world," she said. "People who have concerns about it need to be at the videoconference and voice their concerns."

Members of David Dubois' journalism/Afro-American studies class "The Press and the Third World" sent a letter to each of the participating colleges and panel sites lamenting the "limited scope" and "distorted perceptions" of media coverage in the Third World. It urged the conference to address the "imbalance in news flow" between the Northern and Southern hemispheres.

Dennis Maltbie, coordinator of the conference for the Monitor in Boston, said Third world issues will be addressed at the four panel sites.

Livestock Classic at UMass

By KATHLEEN MOYNIHAN
Collegian Correspondent

The 51st Annual Baystate Livestock Classic, featuring an animal showmanship competition, will be held at 7 p.m. to 9 p.m. tonight at the Grinnell Arena at the University of Massachusetts and 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. tomorrow.

Melissa Ganek, the event's chairwoman, said the events planned for the classic include pony rides, a sheep dog and oxen demonstration, sheep shearing and wool spinning, in addition to the livestock competition.

"The animals will be judged on how well they are groomed and trained, and of the showmanship of the handler," she said.

The animals which will be shown were assigned to animal students who chose the species of their particular interest, she said.

All of the animals in the classic have a "working purpose," at the University, either in reproduction, research or in the case of the horses used in the riding program, for pleasure, Ganek said. Ganek said she expects a turnout of between 300 and 500 people in addition to the 65 people who will be working at the fair.

The event, sponsored by the Animal Science Club and the Stockbridge School of Agriculture, is free and open to the public.

BOG elects new officers

Thirty-two members of the Campus Center Board of Governors voted in a new chair, vice-chair and treasurer last night.

John Hayes, a graduate student was elected chairman in an unusual contest against Tim Kress, a graduating senior.

In Kress' campaign speech, after telling the board "What a wonderful person I am," he proceeded to endorse John Hayes.

"I think you should vote for John Hayes, he is the best candidate for the job," Kress said, citing that Hayes was a member of the Graduate Student Senate, a member of the board for two years and a Governor's Program Council coordinator.

"It's the first time my opponent has endorsed me," Hayes said.

Hayes said in the following year he plans to get the board's constitution ratified, "I want to set policies in writing as to what the board has a say in and where it has power."

"I think the graduate students are the best people to fill the positions," said Alex Zucker, the current chair of the board.

Graduate student Leslie Nakajima, the publicity manager for the Union Program Council and a member of the Collegian graphics staff, was elected treasurer.

Mark Friedman, the top member of the debating team and special projects coordinator of the board, was elected as vice-chairman.

"The newly elected officers will continue the legacy of the older students in enthusiam and effiency," said Karen-Karina Gray, the current vice-chairwoman.

port about 85 percent of our food," he said.

The threatened major, fruit and vegetable crop management, currently has five students in it, said one of the students, senior Jeff Collins. Eight students are enrolled in the major for the fall semester and will be accomodated, but Denison said that if that number does not increase the major will be axed soon.

Stockbridge floriculture graduate Deborah Boyce was hired last year to recruit high school students for the program. She works out of the admissions office in Whitmore Administration Building.

Boyce has her work cut out for her. Enrollment has dropped by more than half since peaking in 1973 at 652 full- and part-time students. Currently there are 317 Stockbridge students.

Collins described Stockbridge as "specialized, direct and practical," and said the fruit and vegetable program "trains the student to manage the farm." He added that nearly all Stockbridge graduates are guaranteed job placement.

But Denison said that because of the state's high tech growth few students are applying to the major. "I hope this will bottom out and we'll come back with more emphasis," he said.

"But that's a tough job because in a high-tech state like this one, that's all you hear the government talking about ... Young people in high school have no appreciation of agriculture."

He said that with more agriculture graduates coming from UMass the state could be much more productive agriculturally and better off financially. The environment would also be protected by maintaining open space, he said.

UMass was founded in 1863 as the Massachusetts Agricultural College. It gained university status in 1947.

While Stockbridge's other six majors are not in imminent danger, "I would feel really bad to have a land grant institution which didn't have this [fruit and vegetable] program," Denison said. "That was the reason land grant was started around the country—to feed the people."

Stacy Roth: Four years of varied campus activity

By DANA GROSSBLATT
Collegian Correspondent

WOMEN ON CAMPUS

Stacy Roth's involvement in University of Massachusetts does not begin and end with the Student Government Association co-presidency.

As Sylvan Area president, member of the Commission Toward Civility, and a member of the Jewish Awareness Task Force, the senior political science major has varied her activities on campus.

Roth, the outgoing SGA president, said that it was difficult to stand up and speak in front of the senate.

"It is often a very intimidating experience," she said.

Roth said she felt "tested" by students on campus because she was the first woman campus president.

"I definitely felt the impact of being a woman president. Students on the campus had to accept the fact that I was their leader."

Roth said she wanted to revitalize organizations on campus that strive to build confidence for women, such as Women's Leadership Project and the Women's Caucus.

"They [women's organizations] are not political or philosophical, just centered on training women as leaders," she said.

The 450 registered student organizations provide numerous opportunities for women to demonstrate their skills, according to Roth. However, she said, women have been neglecting the women's organizations on campus, and concentrating more on academics.

"When they (the organizations) get more mainstream, advancement is slow," Roth said.

There is less time for women to become aware of issues and a lot of women feel they can't handle both academics and politics, she said.

She stressed the importance of participating in these groups because they help women "gain the confidence they need."

Roth said during her four years at UMass she had to choose from a range of opportunities, which was difficult. She was asked to join the University Honors program, but she declined.

"I opted for the practical experience and the amount I learned speaks for itself," she said.

Even though she said she still has a lot to learn, she is optimistic about getting started on other things after college.

"I have a jump on the game due to how involved I've been," she said.

During her remaining time at UMass, Roth said she hopes to create a community and public service network on campus that will match students to projects and act as a dispatch agency.

The senior "Mass Transformation" project, which aims to clean up the Tower Library, is another goal she is working on.

"We wanted to take an area on campus that students needed to be proud of ... thus we have the library tower. I expect it will do great," she said.

Promote safety

We want to promote safety and enjoyment for all people attending this year's Spring Events/Area Shows.

With this in mind, the consumption of alcoholic beverages at the five outdoor concerts will be limited to individuals who are of legal drinking age. Concert protocol will be observed: beer balls, kegs, large-volume containers and glass will be prohibited.

It is unlawful for persons who are under the legal drinking age to transport or to carry alcohol. Positive photo identification will be required.

We hope that you enjoy the shows!

Personal response

I feel the need to respond in my own personal way to a rally which took place a few weeks ago. This rally was a very frightening experience for me. The speaker at this rally was a man who was known as an anti-gay psychologist, and who considered himself to be an expert on homosexuality.

The hatred and inhumane atrocities which he was speaking of were directly meant to oppress all gays and lesbians. I felt the need to stand in solidarity with my friends that morning and in peaceful, non-violent ways protest all that he was saying. After the rally I walked away feeling deeply affected, but mostly afraid of what I witnessed.

My fear is that there are many people such as this one, who carry with them the same hatred and bigotry. I believe though that through our coming together to fight off such vicious lies we can raise our voices louder than his, and put an end to oppression once and for all.

Human fears and phobias

Herb Ramy

Have you ever noticed how fears and phobias seem to rule our lives? I'm not talking about fear of death, war, or anything like that. The fears I'm talking about are the little petty ones that keep us apart from one another.

For instance, why is it that in a movie theater, classroom, or Dining Commons, people insist on sitting as far apart from one another as humanly possible? It's as if a single person fills an entire row of seats. How many times have you seen people walking in circles looking for a table at the DC? And usually, right in front there is a huge table with only one person on it.

This phobia works both ways, though. The person sitting alone is praying to god that nobody joins him/her. If by some miracle strangers do sit together, tense silence is the rule. The click of forks on plates is the only thing ever heard.

A similar phenomenon can be observed in a men's bathroom. Only every other urinal is used. I've seen men at the verge of urinating in their pants who refuse to stand near someone else.

Once it is your turn, you stand with eyes forward as you blindly fumble for your zipper. Looking down is always a no-no. If you do then people might think you're gay, which has nothing to do with it.

On the more serious side we have the people who are terrified of failure. These are the people who study 20 hours a day on a regular basis. On your floor, they'll be the ones whose names you can never quite remember. These people never experience the more enjoyable side of college life. A bad grade would mean a disapproving stare from a mother or father, and to them nothing could be worse. Sadly, parents never realize what they are doing to their own children.

Then we have the people whose main fear is not belonging to the group. This fear causes some to drink to the point of vomiting, or others to take enough drugs to fry their brains. It doesn't matter that they don't want to. Fear of being alone is enough to drive these people to almost anything.

Possibly worst of all are the ones who are afraid to be happy. They walk around with angry or sad looks on their faces. A favorite pastime for these people is watching soap operas. For them it's better to watch someone else's misery on the television than to experience some happiness of their very own.

For the most part the things I've spoken of may seem to be light in nature. To a point I agree that they are, but I also believe that they are quite real. If we can't conquer these minor fears, then how can we fare any better when confronted by major ones. I guess the first step is being willing to hold out your hand to another human being. Sometimes it will get slapped, but every so often someone will grab it. It may not seem like much at first, but it's a start.

March is alive and well

Evan Conroy

The Great Peace March is alive and well and marching in Nevada. Despite some reports to the contrary and the loss of the original support organization, (Pro Peace) 517 concerned citizens have reorganized and are continuing to Washington D.C. with our message of global nuclear disarmament.

On March 1, 1200 marchers began our 3,235 mile trek across the country. After marching 120 miles to Barstow, California, Pro Peace informed us of their intentions to file bankruptcy. A number of sources reported our demise prematurely. We spent two and a half weeks in Barstow watching our water truck, shuttle vehicles, support vans, storage trucks, shower truck and communica6tion equipment being repossessed. We also said sad goodbyes to half of our group.

We incorporated as The Great Peace March Nuclear Disarmament and got office space, four school buses, food, private vehicles and money donated to us. The Peace Development Fund gave us a grant for sanitation and we were able to lease a kitchen truck, water truck, and storage vehicles.

Our individual determination to bring about a test ban, weapons freeze, demilitarization of space and nuclear disarmament, together with the love and donations of local communities here such as Victorville, Claremont, Yermo, and Barstow, California left us no other choice but to continue.

Our goals are to touch the hearts and minds of people in each community we pass through, continuing our program of creating 'Students for Nuclear Responsibility' chapters in schools and strengthen the coalition of groups that support us such as Physicians for Social Responsibility, Freeze One, The Alliance for Survival, SANE, the Unitarian Church, local chapters of the Quakers and Mormons as well as many synagogues and numberous labor unions. Our goal to save this planet joins millions of people with diverse beliefs, and we're crying out for an end to the madness of the arms race.

As a resident of Belchertown, I am proud to say Massachusetts is the third most represented state in this group. I hope our peaceful community will continue to support the Great Peace March and it's vision of global nuclear disarmament.

If you would like to support our vision, UMass Peacemakers are sponsoring a 12-mile walk to benefit the Great Peace March tomorrow. Call 545-2661 for more info.

Letters from the editor

Larry Bouchie

If there's one aspect of student involvement in RSOs, such as the Collegian, the SGA, the BOG, WMUA, UPC, etc., that merits academic credit, it's election participation. Politics are politics, and the same oddities, manipulations, and heart breaking that occurs in any election race outside the University also manifests in UMass student group elections.

The Collegian is just completing a runoff election with referenda, while the BOG has just completed officer's elections. In recent weeks, many have also witnessed the SGA and other races. Needless to say, each of the elections produced some similar results: haggard, academically-lapsed winners, losers, and campaign workers, initial resentment to perceived pre-election political hijinks, and high expectations on the part of everyone of the new office holders.

Fortunately, the ends usually blur and quiet the means in student races and the University has a large pool of dedicated, honest, and hard working students who will work for their constituents, whether they hold some high office or not. The politics we all participate in are an education not to be forgotten.

UMass professional workers are keeping a low profile before they vote for no union, a Massachusetts Teachers Association union, or an Office and Professional Employees International Union this Thursday. MTA and OPEIU organizers, however, are stealthily making a case for their own unions, while trying to debunk the other's claims.

Union issues include: amount of union dues, current representational makeup of each union (clerical, professional, etc.), success in negotiations, percentage of dues to remain in local coffers, and past involvement of each union with the UMass system.

OPEIU organizers charge that MTA will send a disproportionate percentage of local dues to the state organization, that MTA didn't succeed in their two previous University union drives, that they rarely bring anything to the point of arbitration, and that MTA literature distibuted locally is misleading.

Similarly, MTA organizers charge that OPEIU's low dues won't deliver on OPEIU promises, that an officer (Alan Clarke) named in an OPEIU State Labor Relations Board filing has requested in writing that he not be included as an officer, and that OPEIU represents far fewer "professional" workers than organizers have claimed.

Unions are a tough beast to get a grip on, and this recent turmoil, though subdued, is forcing many University workers to mentally wrestle with an issue that promises much in resolution, but is exacting some personal prices on the way.

With the advent of three successive weekends featuring free concerts of different scales and the ultimate conclusion with commencement, UMass administrators and UMass and local police are keeping a very close eye on the perennial abuse of alcohol and other drugs. Surely, the season, the weather, the atmosphere, and the influx of people from outside the University contribute to a revelry that can't be ignored. The problem for all is somehow moderating alcohol use to a point where everyone can enjoy themselves in safety. The police and adminstrators announce guidelines and restrictions each year because they witness the utter downside to the coming weeks' events, and alcohol most often plays a role the accidents and abuses that inevitably occur.

Wise Guys Directed by Brian DePalma Starring: Danny Devito and Joe Piscopo

By JEROME STERN
Collegian Correspondent

Brian De Palma is back, and he's done something a little different this time. The name of the film is Wise Guys and there are no chainsaws, drills, or razor blades--just great comedy.

Danny Devito and Joe Piscopo are Harry Valentini and Moe Dickstein, best friends and neighbors who work for the Mafia in Newark N.J. Harry is given all the important jobs like buying the boss' tropical fish and starting the car every morning just in case it's wired with explosives. Moe is a nice Jewish guy who lives with his mother and swears to be "the Jackie Robinson of organized crime."

Together, they get into plenty of trouble, especially when they bet the boss' money on the wrong horse at the racetracks. Some strange characters come after them, including Captain Lou Albano, with greased back hair and food hanging out of his mouth.

Watching this film you'll be reminded, not only of The Godfather, but Pope of Greenwich Village and Prizzi's Honor as well. One would expect that audiences have become tired of films about the Mafia, but Devito and Piscopo play off of each other perfectly, and always keep the film fresh and original.

These actors do not merely react to the craziness around them, they create it. Danny Devito has the funniest facial expressions to come along in a while and Joe Piscopo's N.J. accent brings back memories of that old Saturday Night Live skit: "Are you from Joisey? I'm from Joisey."

But it would be misleading to say that Wise Guys is pure comedy. After all, it's a Brian De Palma film. This is the man who poured pig's blood on Sissy Spacek and made Al Pacino into a crazy Cuban, so there's a good amount of suspense, violence, and strong language to keep his fans happy.

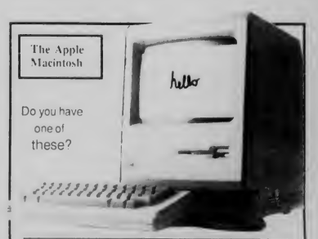
Best of all are the two partners. Everything they do works, and every line is a gem.

New director Herek spoofs sci-fi films with his Critters

Critters Starring Dee Wallace Stone, and Billy Green Bush Directed by Stephen Herek

By JIM COLE
Collegian Correspondent

Critters rips off just about every science fiction film from Alien to Gremlins. But it's done so well and with such self parody, that it works.



Furry bowling balls with teeth called Krites escape from a prison asteroid and land in rural Kansas. They immediately start gobbling up the town, preying mostly on a "typical" farm family, played by Billy Green Bush, and Dee Wallace Stone (of E.T. fame). Even their son (Scott Grimes), who is rather good with homemade explosives, can't do it all by himself. Help arrives, however, as two alien bounty hunters land with enough weapons to insure that the Krites are destroyed, as well as most of the town. When they join forces with the family, the climax is literally explosive.

Critters is clearly a B Movie, but in the hands of first time director Stephen Herek, it has a great comic tone which never goes as far as slapstick. Besides the humor, there are quite a few scares and surprises as well. The cast is perfect. Billy Green Bush looks exactly like a gruff farmer, Dee Wallace Stone plays her panicked mom routine that she did so well in Cujo, and Don Opper has fun as the town drunk who receives alien transmissions through fillings in his teeth.

Critters has a great 1950's tone; the malevolent aliens attacking earth, as well as spoofs of just about every sci-fi film in recent years. Basically, it's a lot of fun.

FRIDAY FILM FOLLIES

By DON LIPPER
Collegian Staff

Once again it's the dry season at the malls. Those who wish to quench their cinematic thirst really don't have a lot to choose from.

I'm a sucker for any action/adventure/fantasy, but I'm sorry to say that Ridley Scott's Legend, is really best forgotten. These types of hero journeys have been entertaining folks since God was a kid but Hollywood seems to have run out of ideas about the genre. Scott, who has directed some very striking and rivteting films such as Bladerunner and Alien, creates a film that is visually beautiful and interesting to watch but at the same time emotionally flat.

Weekend Best Bets: Wiseguys starring Joe Piscopo and Danny DeVito as a couple of low level functionaries in the New Jersey mob is a pretty funny comedy directed by Brian (kill-em-with-powertools) DePalma. (See review on page 8)

Utu is a New Zealand film that's at the Mountain Farms Theatre of all places. This movie is probably the best western ever put on film, it has absolutely everything. Utu has murderously restless natives, victimized homesteaders, horses, guns, brutal non-stop violence, cultural conflict with the white man's world, passionate men and women, the cavalry and a whole cast of characters seeking revenge. Briefly put the story is about a New Zealand native who deserts the white man's army after it destroys his village and who then goes on to build an army of natives to destroy the white men.

The action sequences are suspenseful and well-coordinated. The film moves quickly from one scene of brutal violence to the next. The story has a mean quality that comes from its basis in historical fact which makes the audience uneasy. We're unsure of what will happen from one moment to the next in this non-formula film. Please don't mistake this film for the senseless commando movies we've been subjected to this year. Utu (which means revenge) is an intricate and intellectually sophisticated movie that examines the endless thirst for violence and the affects of cycles of violence. Its characters are very real and complex. Distant narrative strands come together to weave a sweeping storyline. Utu doesn't make judgements about its characters, all are tainted by their need for revenge. The movie is entertaining and thought-provoking and even delivers a few laughs. See it this week because it will probably go away next Friday.

The Trip to Bountiful stars Geraldine Page as Carrie Watts, a woman determined to escape from her son and daughter-in-law so that she can see her childhood home before she dies. This is a wonderfully touching film that will leave Northampton's Pleasant Street Theatre after Tuesday April 29. See it before it goes.

Kevin Kline and Sissy Spacek star as high school sweethearts reunited in Violets are Blue, which will begin a run at the Hampshire 6 Theater in Hadley tomorrow.

Five College playwrights debut works

The Hampshire College Theatre will present its New Play Festival, a collection of plays written, directed and performed by Five College students.

The festival originated in an attempt to give student playwrights the opportunity to see their plays performed and to understand the workings of live theater. An open critique will follow each set of plays.

The second set of plays will be performed tomorrow and Sunday at 2 p.m. and will be held on the Mainstage Theatre, Emily Dickinson Hall at Hampshire College. There is no admission charge.

UMass choreographer premeirs new work at faculty concert

By VICTORIA HYATT
Collegian Correspondent

The Spring Five College Faculty Dance Concert will feature diverse and original choreography by members of the Five College Dance Department.

The show will include ballet, modern, jazz, as well as original music compositions. Andrea Watkins, a member of the University of Massachusetts Dance Department faculty will be premiering her newest work.

Watkins' piece, titled "Grounded on Silence" is performed by three women and two men, all selected from the Five College dance community. Watkins uses the dancers' bodies as supports for one another, as springboards, and as sculpture, combining her love of floorwork and traveling through space.

The title of the work was chosen as it is to be performed in silence. Because her "challenge would be to keep the audience intrigued without using zippy music," Watkins choreographed the piece from a kinetic (relying on body motion and awareness) point of view rather that having music which suggested movement.

Watkins she considers herself a "maverick" due to the antagonism that often exists between ballet and modern dance. Says Watkins, "My favorite thing to do in dance is to set a new piece.

The concert will be held tomorrow and Sunday at Smith College and again on May 1, 2 and 3 at UMass. Tickets for the event are $4 general admission, $3 students, and $1 for senior citizens and are available at Smith College Theater 14 Box Office, the Fine Arts Center Box Office, and at Datatix Outlets.

Shih-Ming Li will perform "Solstice" by Terese Freedman in this years' Spring Five College Faculty Dance Concert, to be held tomorrow and Sunday at Smith College and May 1, 2 and 3 at UMass. Tickets are available at Smith College Theater 14 Box Office and the Fine Arts Center Box Office.

Rebels bombed in Afghanistan

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP)—Waves of Soviet and Afghan warplanes today blasted guerrilla positions in southeastern Afghanistan, and commanders of the Moslem guerrillas said they were forced back with heavy losses.

"This is the worst fighting we've ever seen. The air attacks are terrible," Rahim Wardak, a top commander of the National Islamic Front of Afghanistan, one of the guerrilla groups, told the Associated Press.

Guerrilla leaders said about 10,000 Soviet and Afghan troops supported by tanks and artillery were attacking rebel positions in Pakitia province, where the guerrillas have important supply routes to neighboring Pakistan.

The guerrilla leaders confirmed that a major guerrilla base at Zhawar was overrun and destroyed earlier this week by the Soviet and Afghan forces.

Wardak, who returned from Paktia today, said heavy fighting now was concentrated around the main government-held town of Khost, and the guerrillas were expecting new attacks at any time.

Wardak said Soviet and Afghan SU-22 jet bombers and MiG-21 and MiG-23 jet fighterbombers were raiding guerrilla positions around the clock. He said it was the first time Soviet aircraft were conducting major bombing missions at night.

10 B.U. protesters arrested

BOSTON, (AP)—Ten protesters were arrested at Boston University yesterday after they tried to prevent the dismantling of a shanty intended to protest apartheid in South Africa, city police said.

The five men and five women belonged to a group called the Southern Africa Task Force, which has been urging the university to divest of its holdings in companies doing business in racially separated South Africa.

"We attempted today to build a shantytown and show our repugnance for what's going on in South Africa," said Christina Davis, 19, a spokeswoman for the task force.

"We're Boston University students and we feel we have a right to express our opinions," said Davis, a freshman from Bedford.

The protesters had assembled a few boards in the symbolic shanty outside the student union building on Commonwealth Avenue when they were told by an official of the student union that they had to dismantle it.

When they refused, the dean of student life, Ronald L. Carter, arrived and told the group to remove the shanty.

At the same time, seven members of the campus police arrived. When two members of the university's building and grounds crew attempted to remove the shanty, the students formed a human chain around the structure, and police moved in, Carter said.

"I came down when I heard they were unloading lumber. Our plan was, if they interfered with the removal, that arrest was the only option," campus police Capt. Steven Devlin said.

Season on the line for Gazelles this weekend

By JOHN NOLAN
Collegian Staff

The smooth road to the playoffs has become bumpy and may close this weekend as the fifth-ranked University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team must win both of its remaining games, playing at Temple University on Saturday and at Rutgers University on Sunday.

Scoring with no time remaining Wednesday, eighth-ranked Dartmouth College's heartbreaking 11-10 victory over the fifth-ranked University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team placed the Gazelles' NCAA tournament hopes in jeopardy.

'Our only chance for the NCAA tournament is to upset Temple," UMass head coach Pam Hixon said.

As the playoff picture stands, four teams will be selected to the ECAC tournament with the winner expected to advance to the NCAA tournament (there are no automatic NCAA tournament bids).

Hixon said that fourth-ranked University of New Hampshire, eigth-ranked Dartmouth and Loyola University (tied for fifth with the Gazelles) appear headed for the ECAC's with either UMass or tenth-ranked Harvard University getting the final spot. She said that as things stand, win or lose against Temple, the final selection will probably be contingent on how well Harvard does in its final weekend.

"Harvard is the key to the puzzle," she said. "We need Dartmouth to beat Harvard and Loyola to beat Harvard for us to have a good chance to get in to the ECAC's. But if you look at the polls we're right there so we'll just see what happens."

On Saturday, the Gazelles run up against third-ranked Temple. The 13-2 Owls boast two high-scoring attackmen in senior Kathleen Barrett (54 goals, 17 assists) and sophomore Gail Cummings (53, 17). With losses to top-ranked Penn State (13-6) and University of Virginia (11-10 in four overtimes), Temple should be very tough to beat.

Still, Hixon thinks her team has as good a shot as anyone.

"We've been playing very well- its not like we've been getting our doors blown off," Hixon said of her team's recent consecutive losses. "Now we can go into Temple with no pressure."

★ baseball wins

The Minutemen scored their final three runs in the seventh as the Chiefs made two more big errors and a Chris Mayhew wild pitch.

"We got some solid defense," Bergquist said. "I was very pleased with (Gary) DiSarcina's play at shortstop and O'Conner made some nice plays at third, too.

Now, the Minutemen hit the road this weekend with a chance to make their record a winning one. "We put it all together today," Bergquist said. "It's a shame we had to do it against Springfield, but I'd rather win."

Minuteman Mutterings: Pitcher Chris Slattery has been kicked off the team for "academic negligence," according to Bergquist. The freshman lefthander had a 1-2 record and a 2.73 earned run average. . .Sheran's homer extended his hitting streak to 16 games. . .Steve Kern ran his to 12 with a first inning single and Cimini's triple brought his to eight. . .Excluding pitchers, more than half of the Minutemen (nine of 15) are batting .299 or over. . .Despite an 0-for-2 performance, Zerner remains the team leader at .418. . .The Minutemen turned a rare pitcher-shortstop-catcher double play in the fourth inning to halt a would-be Springfield rally. . .The UMass record at Lorden Field is now 11-4.

UMass split with both Rutgers and Temple, and will face URI in a home doubleheader on Tuesday. Because an earlier meeting between the Minutewomen and URI was rained out, both games will count toward the conference standings, meaning a sweep on Tuesday would be beneficial as well.

The Adelphi doubleheader has regional implications for the Minutewomen. Adelphi (16-15-1) is ranked third in the Northeast behind the University of Connecticut (22-13-1) and UMass. Since the A-10 no longer has an automatic bid to the NCAA national tournament, the only real chance the Minutewomen have of making the national tourney is to finish the season in the top spot.

The Minutewomen swept Adelphi earlier this season at Garden City, Long Island, 1-0 in 12 innings, and 3-0 in the nightcap. The pitching was sparkling in that doubleheader, as senior Lynn Stockley threw a three-hitter and sophomore Lisa Rever tossed a five-hitter.

On defense, Army will quite simply try and kick UMass' butts. They'll check hard, play a man-to-man pressure defense and a few zones thrown in for variety, but basically Army will just be hardnosed and make UMass fight for every goal.

On attack, junior All-American Tom Carmean continued to scale the UMass career lists. This season, he has 29-15-44 numbers and is UMass' most consistent threat. He joins junior Greg Cannella (17-14-31) and sophomore Kelley Carr (16-8-24) as one of the most potent attacks in the nation, when they're shooting well.

In the last few games, that trio has tended to disappear when the going's got tough. UMass has gone into its "two-pass, one shot," offense in key situations and that has resulted in missed chances.

"We've got to be patient," stressed Garber. "In the first half against Harvard (when UMass led 8-3), we did eveything right. Then we slowed down and let them catch us. We can't afford to do that against the next few teams we face."

After Army, UMass will face Dartmouth on the road (a sure win) before facing seventh-ranked Rutgers in New Jersey and at second-ranked Syracuse.

Beat Army and the win at hapless Dartmouth will make UMass 10-1. All they would need is decent showings at Rutgers and Syracuse to make the playoffs. Lose to Army and UMass needs wins on the road to make it, a tough task.

"We're going to be flying," said Aldrich. "We're as ready as we'll ever be. There's no reason not to be. This is the game of our lives so far, hopefully this will lead to something bigger."

Gorilla Grumblings: NESN will cover the game on a tape-delayed basis. . .Garber said that Greg Fisk's illegal stick, which drew him a potentially-costly penalty in the last minute of the Harvard game, will be at the legal width. . .Fans have been wearing red at the games lately, most with lacrosse t-shirts that say "Kick Ass UMass" on the back, which will be sold at the game. . .Garber is still suffering from bronchial pneumionia, but said with a wheeze that it would take more than that to make him miss the game, the 386th he will coach at UMass. . .Army beat UMass 11-9 last year, scoring five final period goals.

senior) you'll have a chance to experience something like this. Don't take a chance and miss the game, thinking you'll get another chance next season, for nothing is a sure bet in sports.

Win or lose, 30 players and coaches will have given the game their best shot. This game means a lot to them. Lacrosse isn't like baseball, football or basketball where you can hope for a professional career. These players are in school to study and are playing lacrosse for fun, that's right, fun. There isn't a lot of fun left in sports anymore with all the drug testing, cheating and high-salaried players moaning for even more money. This game will be fun and played for, as hokey as it sounds, the chance to compete and see who's best.

In the grand scheme of things, lacrosse isn't that important. Sports isn't the end of the world by any means. Watching ten guys run around a field trying to put a while plastic ball into a six-by-six net isn't going to get any of us anywhere, but we'll have a good time doing it.

So go to Boyden Field. The Big Game is here. UMass vs. the Army. I can't guarantee a good game, just that you could sometime wish you can gone.

UMass Schedule:

Gorillas engage Army tomorrow

Playoffs at state against the Cadets

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

The lacrosse season comes down to tomorrow.

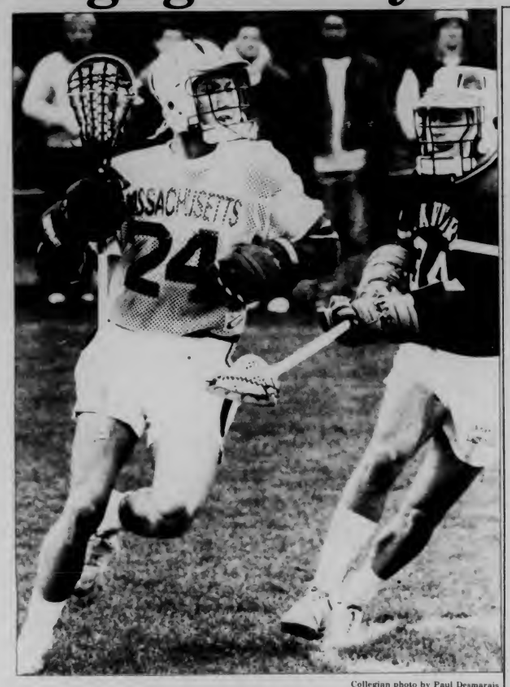
With a win over the Army, it will be tough to keep the University of Masschusetts lacrosse team out of the Division 1 NCAA playoffs. Lose to the Cadets, and it's a tough road back to the Top 10.

Tomorrow afternoon at 1 p.m., upwards to 10,000 people will jam Boyden Field to see seveth-ranked UMass tangle with 10th ranked Army. The Gorillas have won six straight and are 8-1 on the season. Army is 5-4, but stands on the verge of a higher ranking after crushing Yale (15-4) and defeating then fifth-ranked Rutgers (11-8).

The Cadets need this game as much as UMass does. Losing to UMass will cripple any chance the Academy has at making its 10th playoff appearence.

Traditionally, in the eight games the two teams have played, UMass-Army games have been, to be cliche, wars. Army, in the words of UMass coach Dick Garber, is a "knock-you-down, step-on-you type of team that is as aggressive as any in the nation."

But the Cadets aren't cheap. They play hard. They're not fancy by any means. Just, to be cliche once again, well-drilled and good at fundamental lacrosse.



"This is a huge game, we need to win this as much as any game we've been in for quite a while," said Garber. "We've always played pretty well against them, and I don't expect this game will be any different."

The problem for the Gorillas are that they haven't played well in the last three games. Despite beating St. Johns (9-6), Yale (10-6) and Harvard (10-9), UMass hasn't played a good 60 minutes of lacrosse.

"I don't know what's wrong with us," said Garber. "We've played well on defense and got some great shots, we just haven't converted them. I wasn't worried about it so much before, but I am now. We need to straighten things out mentally more than physically. I believe we'll come out good for Army, there's no reason we shouldn't because this is a good group of kids."

The Cadets are coached by Jack Emmer. In 16 years, he has coached a losing team only once. In the three years he has been at Army, the Cadets are 26-11 with two NCAA tournament berths. They finished fifth in the nation last year, sixth the year before.

This season, the Cadets have lost to two teams (Johns Hopkins and Syracuse) that we're ranked first at the time. They've also fallen to rival Navy and St. John's. The Hopkins score was 8-6 in a real battle. Syracuse (13-7), Navy (12-4) and St. John's (13-6) had easier times of it.

Leading the Cadets is senior midfielder Pat Daly with 20 goals and 16 assists for 36 points. Robert Betchley is at 14-7-21 as a sophomore attackman while junior attackman Doug Shaver adds 14-6-20 numbers. Chris Garvey, a sophomore middie, is next at 6-7-13.

The Army won't fool you with their offense. A player will take the ball and try to go one-on-one. If he's stopped, he'll pass off and someone else will try the same thing.

That means that close defensemen Tom Aldrich, Gerry Byrne and Adam Rodell will have their hands full. John Jordan, Matt Woods and the rest of the defensive reserves will also need to play strong games.

In goal, nothing but a strong game has come to be expected from freshman Sal LoCascio. The Long Island native is tops in the nation in save percentage and allows just over six goals-per-game. Against Harvard, the second-most goals he has allowed all season, LoCascio was victimized by three man-down goals, one breakaway and a stolen pass in front of the net that became a goal.

This is what we've waited for

The Big Game. It's here, finally.

For the better part of four years, or how however long you've attended the University of Massachusetts, you've watched other schools pack fields for big games, you've seen other schools qualify for NCAA playoffs or make a name for themselves nationally.

I'm talking about the major spectator sports. Granted, women's soccer, field hockey, women's lacrosse and softball have distinguished themselves as among the nation's elite, but our society is such that those sports don't draw much attention.

Football has been decent at times, but's it's still Division 1-AA. Basketball, well, let's forget about basketball. Even lacrosse, since being ranked 11th (and missing the playoffs) in 1982, they haven't been anything to brag about.

But tomorrow on Boyden Field at 1 p.m., there's a chance for the sports fans at this school to go out and be a part of a big event. The United States Military Academy lacrosse team, ranked tenth in the nation, will take on the UMass lacrosse team, ranked seventh in the nation. The winner will probably be on its way to a playoff berth, the loser can only hope.

A sunny day could mean 8,000-10,000 people will pack Boyden Field. They will hang from Tobin Hall, they'll pack the area around the Cage, people will line the field and look for any vantage point. There will be t-shirts for sale along with painters caps and at least a few fans will dress in gorilla suits. A couple of thousand beers cans will litter the place when the game's over. This, if you think like me, is what college is all about.

UMass, for good or bad, is full of people who really don't give a damn what happens Saturday. But thankfully there's a group of people who don't get into just campus politics or some obscure national isssue, who feel they can take an afternoon off from writing a term paper, and who appreciate the inherent drama of an athletic contest. They will be there, in force.

Chances are, you don't understand lacrosse. You might just yell when we score, boo when the Cadets score and jeer the officials when they make a call, against UMass. Fine. The point is that for the last time in your life (if you're a

Baseball, yawn, stomps Springfield, 15-2

Flint leads UM to 8th straight

By MATT GERKE
Collegian Staff

It's no longer a matter of if the University of Massachusetts baseball team will win, it's by how much.

Local rival Springfield College found out how far the Minutemen have come since a 1-14 start yesterday, as UMass drubbed the Chiefs, 15-2 at Lorden Field.

UMass has won 12-of-its-last-13 games, including nine straight, and is now only two games under .500 at 13-15.

"We looked good today," said UMass manager Dick Bergquist. "We had good defense, good pitching, and we continued hitting."

The Minutemen wasted no time showing the Chiefs what they had, jumping all over starter and loser Steve Smith, 4-3, for five runs in the first inning. Darrin O'Conner led off with a walk and scored moments later when Matt Sheran ripped a 2-1 pitch over the rightfield fence to give the Minutemen a 2-0 advantage.

UMass scored an identical pair of runs one out later when a Sean Flint homer to right drove in Jay Zerner, who had walked. Steve Allen later scored on the front end of a double steal to make it 5-0.

"The first inning was a good one for us," said Bergquist. "Those five runs gave us a big boost."

The Chiefs, 14-16-2, scored their only runs in the second inning when Gary Ley singled and Doug Hajjar homered one out later.

"We played lousy," was Springfield manager Charlie Roys' only comment after the game.

Mike Owens started for UMass and went two innings before being replaced with Ken Greer. Bergquist had decided before the game to give a lot of pitchers work in the game.

Greer pitched the third inning before Jon Martin, the eventual winner, entered in the fourth. The senior righthander threw two complete innings, giving up no runs on three hits.

"This was a good game, pitching-wise," Bergquist said. "Because we were able to accomplish what we set out to. A lot of pitchers saw action and they'll be fresh for the weekend series with Rutgers. It worked out well."

The Minutemen travel to to New Brunswick, NJ for a doubleheader with Rutgers on Saturday and single game on Sunday. UMass, at 3-5 in the Atlantic 10 Conference, needs a good series against the Knights to keep any playoff hopes flickering.

UMass exploded for six runs in the fourth inning yesterday with the help of four hits and a key Springfield error. Flint picked up the third and fourth of his five runs batted in on the day as the Minutemen expanded their lead to 11-2.

Jeff Cimini led off the sixth with a triple to right and pinch runner Mike Chambers scored on Flint's sacrifice fly to make it 12-2.

A crucial 4 for softball

By ROGER CHAPMAN
Collegian Staff

"This is definitely a big weekend for us. This will tell us exactly where we are."

Those are the words of University of Massachusetts softball head coach Elaine Sortino, and for the Minutewomen (ranked 19th in the nation and first in the Northeast), nobody could have said it better.

UMass, 28-6 overall and 4-2 in the Atlantic 10, will put its entire season on the line this weekend, as the Minutewomen host back-to-back doubleheaders at Totman (NOPE) Field. UMass will host conference rival St. Josephs University on Saturday and regional power Adelphi University on Sunday.

Both twinbills are scheduled for 1 p.m. starts. It is crucial that the Minutewomen sweep both Adelphi and St. Joe's. UMass is currently second in the A-10 behind the University of Rhode Island, and anything short of a sweep may place the destiny of the Minutewomen in somebody else's hands. In addition to St. Joe's, URI, Rutgers University, and Temple University are all bidding for the four available

Democrats will talk up issues

By BOB KIEVRA
Collegian Staff

Six US Congressmen, including Rep. Richard Gephardt, D-Mo., will be visiting the five-college area today as part of a daylong discussion on current issues and a "Forum for the Future."

Representatives Chester Atkins, D-Ma., Bart Gordon, D-Tenn., Richard Durbin, D-Ill., Sander Levin, D-Mich., and Barbara Kennelly, D-Conn. will be discussing issues in political science classes at Smith, Mount Holyoke, Amherst colleges and the University of Massachusetts.

Gephardt will join his colleagues for the forum at 7:30 p.m. at the UMass School of Education auditorium in Furcolo Hall.

The event is being sponsored by Democratic student groups in the five-college area as part of a nationwide Democratic party effort to discuss pertinent issues with college students said Michael Jackman, co-public affairs director of the University Democrats.

"This forum will demonstrate to college students that the Democratic party cares a great deal about what college students think. It's a unique chance for students to let their elected officials know what's on their minds," Jackman said.

Kevin Sweeney, adviser to the University Democrats, said the House Democratic Caucus is working with student organizations throughout the country in an effort to court young voters.

"Traditionally students have been at the core of the Democratic party," Sweeney said, "but over the last few years the Republicans have been more effective in recruiting voters in the 18-24 range."

Sandinista envoy says contra aid blocks peace

By IAN POLUMBAUM
Collegian Staff

The Nicaraguan ambassador to the United States said Friday night at the University of Massachusetts that his country is willing to sign a broad Central American peace treaty, but only after the US stops funding the anti-Sandinista "contra" war.

The ambassador, Carlos Tunnermann, told about 300 people in Mahar Auditorium that Nicaragua supports the Contadora peace process initiated by four Latin American nations, but that "aid to the contras does not lead to negotiation ... It is the major obstacle to peace."

Tunnermann was the keynote speaker for "Stop the Lies, Stop the Killing," a weekend conference sponsored by Faculty and Staff for Peace in Central America, a five-college group opposed to US policy in the region.

His speech echoed remarks made Thursday in Managua by Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega, who said any peace overtures by US envoy Philip Habib would be insincere and again urged the Reagan administration to negotiate directly with the Sandinistas.

Tunnerman, noting that in five years of war the guerrillas have never controlled any town inside Nicaragua, said, "No amount of aid—direct or indirect, military or humanitarian—will help the contras achieve their stated objective, the overthrow of the Nicaraguan government."

He said that if US support for the contras ended, Nicaragua would sign the Contadora treaty, under which:

- No Central American state would support foreign guerrillas or permit them to operate on its soil.
- Countries in the region would be barred from maintaining foreign military bases or advisers and from acquiring offensive weapons.
- No state signing the treaty "will attempt to export its political or economic system," he said.

But he added, "Under these conditions it is neither rational nor prudent to sign (the treaty) ... unless the (US) policy of aggression against Nicaragua is altered."

Tunnermann rejected US accusations that Nicaragua is arming leftist Salvadoran guerrillas and seeks to spread revolution throughout the Americas. "The US administration has yet to produce one weapon or one round of ammunition" to prove the charge, he said. "There is no such flow of arms ... the Sandinista revolution stops at Nicaragua's frontiers."

Earlier Friday, he told reporters in the Campus Center that a recent letter from Habib to several Democratic congressmen expressing hopes for a negotiated settlement "has to be seen in the context of other statements. There is a contradiction ... the president (Reagan) is requesting more funds for the contras."

He urged an end not only to US government contra aid, but to rebel funding from the American private sector. He said the anti-Sandinista army "doesn't have the capacity to fight by its own means; one must remember, the contras are a creation of the CIA.

"We consider the contras to be strategically defeated. The US is committing itself to a lost cause."

Nicaraguan ambassador Carlos Tunnerman, left, and his interpreter speak to a crowd of about 300 Friday night.

Other speakers who criticized US policy toward Central America were Mary Ellsberg, a health worker in Bluefields, Nicaragua; and retired Army Col. Edward King, who said the contras cannot win their war due to lack of popular support. Page 3.

UMass student killed in crash

Funeral services will be held at 11 a.m. today in Randolph for Elysa R. Kates, 18, a University of Massachusetts student who was killed in an automobile accident Friday in Amherst.

Two people were also injured in the accident, which is still under investigation. Amherst police said they could not say whether alcohol was involved.

Paul Gilman 2nd, 19, was listed in stable condition at the Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton. His Ford coupe, in which Kates was a passenger, collided with a Coca-Cola truck on West Street at the intersection of Shays Street, Amherst police said.

Gilman was driving north on West Street and collided with the truck, which was going in the opposite direction. The accident occured in the northbound lane, police said.

The driver of the truck, William Swinington, 22, was treated and released at the hospital.

Ms. Kates, a 1985 graduate of Brockton High School, was a first-year student at UMass, where she was studying animal science. She was planning to transfer next year to Oregon State University, said her father, Alan Kates.

"We had a lot of strife and aggravation between us," her father said. "She was a changed woman; when she came back for spring break it was the difference between night and day, and she owed it all to campus life. It was not all a bed of roses—there were a few thorns ... a few classes and professors she didn't like—but for the most part she loved it.

Besides her father, she is survived by her mother, Brenda Kates; her grandparents, Matilda Richstein and Phillip Kates of Peabody; and a brother, Michael Kates. Calling hours will be held today through Thursday at the family home in Brockton.

Home-taught teenager to attend Harvard

BOONVILLE, Calif. (AP)—An 18-year-old who built his own telescope but never attended a formal school said yesterday he has accepted a Harvard University scholarship, rejecting offers from Yale, Princeton and Amherst.

Drew Colfax decided to join his 21-year-old brother, Grant, at the Ivy League school.

David and Micki Colfax, unhappy with the quality of public education, have educated their four sons at their remote mountaintop ranch about 120 miles north of San Francisco.

"I and my wife decided years ago we weren'y about to have our kids sit through a mind-numbing experience," said Colfax, a former sociology professor.

"We buy the books and point them in the right direction."

Grant Colfax is a premedical student at Harvard. Reed, 16, is "mathematically precocious," and 10-year-old Garth has a deep interest in ceramics and painting, their father said.

The boys "are ordinary, bright kids that work hard," Colfax said.

"Drew was one of our most extraordinary applicants," said Laura Clark of Princeton, where only one in six applicants was accepted this year. "He is truly a thinker."

When he was 16, Drew installed a solar-powered electrical system that provided power to the ranch for the first time in more than 10 years. It would have cost $80,000 to connect to Pacific Gas & Electric lines.

Rumors of inn's reopening draw picketers

By PHIL SERAFINO
Collegian Staff

Former employees of the Lord Jeffery Inn and their supporters picketed the closed building Saturday amidst rumors that Amherst College, which owns 75 percent of the inn, plans to reopen the facility for either graduation in May or Parent's Weekend next fall.

About 45 people—former inn workers, Amherst College students and a faculty member, union organizers and others—circled in front of the inn for an hour, carrying signs, chanting, and singing.

"We realized when they closed down that we would have to hunker down for the long haul. This is our sort of kickoff, to revitalize things," said Bill BuSteed, who worked at the inn as a busboy for nine years. The inn closed Jan. 1 after contract negotiations collapsed with the workers' union, Local 217 of the Hotel and Restaurant Employees and Bartenders Union.

Employees picketed the inn when their contract expired Oct. 25, claiming that the college was trying to break the union with a two-tier compensation proposal for the new contract.

The union has been pressuring the college to reopen the inn and rehire the former employees, but the college has said little other than that they are looking for a hotel/restaurant operator to run the inn, which lost $500,000 over the last five years.

"They have made some rumblings to the effect that they want to sign a new operator. If they think they can act like the ten years the union was here were nothing, well then they got another thing coming," BuSteed said, as he led cheers of "Hey, hey what do you say, 217 is here to stay" through a megaphone in front of the inn.

Rob Traber, organizer for Local 217, said the college has not been in contact with the union since the inn closed in January. "We've tried, but they refuse to talk," Traber said, adding that the workers were demonstrating so they would be ready should the inn reopen. "We just want them to know that their 'runaway shop' routine isn't going to work," Traber said.

Amherst College officials were not available for comment, but Kent Faerber, president of the Amherst Inn Company, which runs the inn, has confirmed in the past that the college may reopen the inn if it can find an operator.

Contra war leads to poorer health care in Nicaragua

Mary Ellsberg

The health care gains made by the Nicaraguan revolution are being harmed, but not destroyed, by the "contra" war, a health care worker from Nicaragua said at the "Stop the Lies" conference Saturday.

Mary Ellsberg, the daughter of antiwar activist Daniel Ellsberg, has spent the last six years working in health and literacy campaigns in Nicaragua.

Ellsberg said the Sandinista health care program has dramatically improved the infant mortality rate by providing free health care to both rural and urban citizens.

The new health care program has provided curative care and a major education program to promote the control of major diseases such as malaria, measles and polio, she said.

"Brigadistas," health workers elected by their local communities, were taught how to organize vaccination programs, resulting in the abolition of polio in Nicaragua, she said.

In their effort to modernize, the Sandinistas have been made and effort to promote the role of midwives and not to discredit the indigenous methods, such as the local healers, she said.

"What's been done in Nicaraguan health care has not been done anywhere else in the world. They are providing a model for many third-world countries," Ellsberg said.

During a speech and slide show which had the audience sighing in horror and astonishment, Ellsberg described the effects of the contra war on the Atlantic coast of Nicaragua.

She told the story of a little boy who was psychologically traumatized after spending the night in a room with the remains of his mother splattered on the wall after a contra attack on his house.

"We wanted to cry when we saw him. He can't walk by himself anymore ... he can't talk," she said.

The contras, the US-backed rebels fighting the government of Nicaragua, attack health care projects, Ellsberg said, to terrify people from supporting the revolution.

The contras have had a devastating effect on the emerging health care system and have "not been successful in getting people to think that they are an alternative to the government," Ellsberg said.

Speaker pushes political solution

By KEVIN LINDER
Collegian Correspondent

A political solution to the turmoil in Central America can be achieved, but the opportunity must be seized quickly, said a retired US Army colonel at a conference Saturday at the University of Massachusetts.

Edward King spoke on "A Political or Miltary Solution in Central America?" and warned that if diplomatic and political options are not more seriously explored, "we're slipping down a slope toward a military involvement which, at some point, is going to take American presence."

King, now a consultant on military and political issues in Central America to members of the US Congress, called the US-backed "contra" military operation in Nicaragua "a failed operation" which has yielded "very meager" results.

"A political solution is overdue," King said, "though emphasis continues to be on military solution. We came to a point about three and a half years ago at which military solutions were no longer viable, if they ever were."

The effort to overthrow, or at least influence, the Sandinista government cannot succeed, King said, in part because the contras lack a political dimension within Nicaragua.

"There has never been a successful counter-insurgency that didn't have a political component operating to some degree within the country where the insurgency was taking place," he said.

The contras have been unable to focus the political discontent that exists in Nicaragua, King said.

"A lot of people don't like the Sandinistas; they'd like to have somebody else," King said. "But that 'somebody else' is not the contras."

King said bilateral US-Nicaraguan negotiation is the only way to mitigate US and Nicaraguan security concerns—concerns which he said constitute the major stumbling block of the Central American Contadora process.

Reverend Philip Wheaton, who spoke on "Masks of U.S. Militarization of the Region" at the conference, agreed with King that a political solution must be found in Central America, but rejected King's assessment of the U.S. role in helping to resolve the region's problems.

"The problem in Central America is the United States," Wheaton said, "not those countries down in Central America."

Wheaton, the Director of the Ecumenical Program for the Interamerican Communication and Action, likened what he called the "propaganda techniques" of the Reagan administration to those of Nazi Germany, the intent of the U.S. government being to "deceive, misinform and disinform the American public."

Wednesday last day to file suit for IUD damages

By SHERYL JEAN
Collegian Staff

Wednesday is the last day to file lawsuits against the A.H. Robins Company for damages caused by the company's Dalkon Shield, an intrauterine birth control device linked to pelvic inflammatory disease.

The IUD was recalled from the market in the early 1970s when it was proven to cause the disease, according to Pam Gonyer of University Health Services.

In the past there have been many types of IUDs available to women, but now there is only one brand on the market due to the high litigation rate associated with the devices, Gonyer said.

Many pharmaceutical firms have stopped marketing IUDs because of the expenses of lawsuits, Gonyer said.

"The companies say it has nothing to do with the safety of the medicine, but the escalating costs of defending the IUD in litigations is too expensive to keep up with," Gonyer said.

According to Joe Pellis, director of the health center's pharmacy, the only IUD now available is Progestasert, since the Copper-7 IUD, manufactured by G.D. Searle & Company, was withdrawn from the market in January.

Gonyer said the extensive advertising done to educate women on this controversy has led to a "'slop-over effect' of this very warranted situation onto other types of IUDs that do not have the same problems."

According to Gonyer, many women still think the IUD is one of the best forms of contraception.

The IUD is an attractive form of contraception for women over 35 due to evidence of cardiovascular problems associated with age and use of the pill, said Gonyer.

The IUD is not as attractive to younger women because of the risk of complicated infections which are increased due to the high rate of sexually transmitted diseases in college-age women, said Gonyer.

In college-age people, "the pill" seems to be the most popular and effective form of contraception, Gonyer said. The diaphragm is also popular, but not as convenient as the pill.

The 1986 edition of Contraceptive Technology lists the birth control pill as 98 percent effective; both the IUD and condoms with spermicide as 95 percent; condoms alone as 90 percent; a diaphragm with spermicide as 81 percent and the new sponge as 80 to 90 percent.

Livestock Classic draws lively crowd of animal lovers

By KATHLEEN MOYNIHAN
Collegian Correspondent

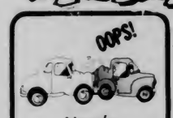
Scores of animal lovers, from seasoned farmers to toddlers, gathered under cloudy skies Saturday for a day of fun and sportsmanship at the 51st Annual Baystate Livestock Classic, held at Grinnell Arena, University of Massachusetts.

The scene was reminiscent of a New England farm: a gang of children eagerly rushed onto a sledge pulled by a team of oxen while nearby, a small black and white dog rounded up a herd of sheep and chased them into a round white-fenced pen.

The event, which began Friday night, featured showmanship competitions of Morgan mares, beef and dairy cows, goats and pigs. The competitions were open to anyone interested in training an animal, and drew a diverse crowd.

Lisa Belden, a junior Family and Community Studies major from Laramie, Wyo., took first place in the beef cow semi-finals with Felice, a feisty two-year-old Heifer, and prepared to enter the finals. Belden said she had five weeks to work with Felice prior to the event, "getting her use to her halter and used to me," as well as grooming her for show.

Essential to the training, she explained, is "letting your cow know that you're the boss." Belden's expertise in controlling not only her own cow's antics, but those of a more untoward cow, won her the competition.



Belden said that although "everyone in my family are ranchers, I had never worked with cows before." The event is sponsored by the Animal Science Club and the Stockbridge School of Agriculture, but one need not belong to either of these to be a formidable contender, as Belden proved.

Many ducked the issue

Timothy Kress

I am pleased to see that the media and the University community have become aware of the dismissal of professor Debra Gross. She is by far one of the best faculty members in the political science department. Her record of accomplishments speaks for itself. It is clear to anyone who looks into her case that her dismissal took place in a questionable manner.

The thing that really bothers me is the resistance of the press, the faculty, and the administration to the mere airing of the issue itself. I started speaking publicly about Gross' dismissal on March 13 with a letter to Lewis Mainzer, Chair of the Department of Political Science. Letters to Chancellor Duffey, Dean Glen Gordon of the College of Arts and Sciences, and Provost Richard O'Brien soon followed. I even posted the infamous "Screwed" posters, which explained the problem, in the political science offices in Thompson Hall. A petition was distributed which garnered over 350 signatures in the first two days. During these outreach efforts, Gross chose to avoid speaking publicly on her situation which was a source of heated controversy and a sensitive departmental minefield. Gross is now an issue, but she is still a person first and foremost, with a career future to protect. I respect her greatly as an honest and straightforward person.

I made many trips down to the Collegian, hounding the News Editor and various reporters to do a story on the issue. They stalled, ducking my requests. They said that because Gross was at the time unable to comment on the record that it would be difficult for the Collegian to write the story. What they chose to ignore was that she was willing to talk to anyone about the situation—including the Collegian. She did not want to be quoted at the time for the same reason that litigants in court cases sometimes do not wish to be quoted: she did not want to jeopardize the appellate process prematurely. She had nothing to hide however, and was straight with everybody who cared to approach her. In the weeks that followed the first letter of protest, I spoke with many students about the dismissal. Most were outraged when they learned the story. They constantly asked me, "Why haven't we heard about this in the Collegian?" Last year when Bob Cooley of the math department was let go, the Collegian ran a feature-length story complete with picture. Gross' dismissal, a great loss to the whole University community, for some reason lacked the relevance to be included in the paper.

We students have faced an unmoving faculty and administration on this subject. We have worked against incredible odds to save an outstanding faculty member.

The last thing I expected was resistance from the student newspaper on campus. This is a public issue. The reasoning of the Collegian for stalling on informing the public on this is unsound. Just because a person does not wish to be quoted does not mean that the issue somehow does not exist. At the beginning of this semester I faced a legal problem with the University. A Collegian reporter did a story about it on February 19 of this year. At the time I chose to avoid being quoted in the press on the advice of my attorney. I was not hiding anything, and I even talked to certain members of the press off the record, to keep them informed on the progress of the case. The Collegian went ahead with the story (without quotes). Somehow the newsworthiness of the issue was not lessened by a lack of juicy quotes from the subject of the article.

The same holds true for the Gross case. Finally, when the issue became popularly known, it was somehow "safe." The Collegian got the scoop sometime after the word was out, and has since redeemed itself by prompting a reporter to do a story, publishing an editorial opinion, and accommodating Gross herself to write her side of the story. Why did it take five weeks for the Collegian to publish a basic news story on this important public issue?

I don't have the answer to this question. I can only express the opinion that sometimes the reasoning of "journalistic integrity" can be misused to become irresponsible journalism. Hiding behind sacred journalistic principles to avoid stirring up controversy goes against everything that the free press in this country stands for. I am disgusted by the faculty and administration's attitude that this issue lacks the credibility to be discussed in a public forum. I am almost as equally disappointed in the Collegian's apparent lack of interest in this subject. Concerned students are constantly getting the brush-off from the administration when they choose to question decisions and policies that affect their lives. I am used to fighting this condescending and patronizing attitude, but when the main journal on campus ignores an important issue, it really hurts. I hope that the Collegian will avoid making this mistake in the future and realize that its responsibility to the community transcends fear and irresponsibility.

Timothy J. Kress is a UMass student.

Examine the word of the Bible

I am responding to Frank Flanagan's letter about Rusty Denton's column on the subject of abortion. Often in Congress, politicians will attempt to push an unpopular bill through the voting process by tacking it on to a more popular bill. When the popular bill is enacted, so is the unrelated piece of legislation. Flanagan has attempted a very similar thing in his brief attack upon the Bible at the beginning of an otherwise very acceptable critique of abortion opponents. It concerns me that he feels free to attack a book as important as the Bible with weak arguments and dubious presuppositions. I write this letter in an attempt to examine his statements in the light of critical reason.

He wrote: "Denton seems to think the Bible has a name, and an answer, for all twentieth century ills and issues. Obviously, it does not, not in America, at least. Otherwise, we'd all be going to church instead of to the bar, library, theatre and ball park." Now, I have no quarrel with Flanagan himself, and had his comments occurred within a vacuum, I would be able to overlook them. However, I hear many statements like his in the Pioneer Valley.

In each of Flanagan's three sentences above, I detect a faulty presupposition. The first sentence assumes that the Bible is no longer relevant to the issues of this century. This is chronological snobbery. Sure, we are more technologically advanced than our biblical predecessors, but that does not mean that we have in any way outgrown the biblical message. Whether we agree with the Scriptures or not, we can all agree that the people of biblical times were dealing with the same issues with which we now struggle upon: morality, purpose, loneliness, love, etc. His second sentence betrays a form of cultural preferentialism, that American culture is superior to the cultures of the Bible. I fail to see how this is necessarily the assumption that the masses decide what is (and is not) right. This is simply not true. Hitler led a majority that was in the wrong. Also, need I remind Flanagan that the only American president to resign in disgrace was elected by a "landslide" mandate? Majority opinion is not always wrong, but neither is it necessarily right.

We cannot reject a message simply because it is not fashionable to believe it. The Bible claims to be God's written revelation to man. This claim is either true or it is false. It is not true simply because I (or anyone else for that matter) find truth in it. It is either inherently true or inherently false. The Bible claims something about itself that we have the liberty to disagree with, but we owe it to ourselves to examine it with integrity.

Allow me to conclude by affirming Flanagan's primary message. Those who would, for whatever reason, deny others the opportunity to murder someone else must be willing to take responsibility for the life they wish to save. This will force people to dig into their time and pockets. There is no room for apathy. Each person who protests against abortion ought to be willing to help provide for the needs of the women who wish to deliver their babies alive, but need (financial and emotional) support in order to see their pregnancies through to the end. Despite a rather weak attack upon the Bible at the beginning of his letter, Flanagan asks a good question: are we ready to commit ourselves?

Try to bridge the age gap

Everyone has seen them on campus. They are the older students at the University—those individuals above the age of 22. You probably have noticed them yourself: the person in line at the coffee shop with a few good streaks of grey, or a lab partner with a wedding band, or that person sitting near you in the lecture who somehow looks a little older than most of your friends.

Older students can be either people who didn't proceed directly to college from high school and are now returning to seek a degree, or graduate students extending their education beyond the bachelor's degree. The motivations of the graduate student are more familiar and understandable while the purposes of older people who do not yet have a bachelor's degree are for the most part completely unclear to the undergraduate in the 18 to 22 age group. People in this latter category are coming to the University as a result of life experiences which lead them to seek a degree which they earlier did not want or could not get.

The relationship between the graduate and older students and the younger students is an uncomfortable one. Younger students tend to look at the older ones as misfits. Older students think of the younger ones as kids who often act unbearably immature. Underlying both of these perceptions is the assumption that both groups have nothing in common and little to gain from the other.

Both groups however hold their desires for higher education in common and can benefit from some informal social interaction. Indeed, such interaction can add an enlightening dimension to the University education of the other group. To the younger students, older students provide a window on the world somewhere between that of their parents and their peers. Older students come to the campus with backgrounds ranging from communes to the military. Older student perspectives on such areas as marriage, divorce, children, sex, racial discrimination and especially career goals can provide the younger undergraduate with an extra edge to help avoid the pitfalls, and also enjoy the pleasures, of his future life beyond the campus.

On the other hand, the youthful exuberance of the "kids" should not be lost on the older students. Sitting outside for an hour during one of these first few days of really nice weather (even when that paper you have not started is due tomorrow) can add a little color to a face of a person carrying weighty concerns.

To their mutual benefit, older and younger students can bridge the age gap between them. Saying hello casually and asking "Have you finished the paper yet?" or inviting one for coffee will do to start.

Softball climbs to 31-9, winning three-of-four

By ROGER CHAPMAN
Collegian Staff

If there could be one word that could describe this past weekend for the University of Massachusetts softball team, it would have to be "satisfactory".

The Minutewomen took three-out-of-four games over the weekend, sweeping St. Joseph's University in an Atlantic 10 twinbill on Saturday, 7-0 and 3-1. UMass split a doubleheader with Adelphi University, yesterday, dropping game one, 2-1, and taking the nightcap 1-0. UMass raised its overall record to 31-9, and 6-2 in the A-10.

Senior pitcher Lynn Stockley won the 7-0 decision over St. Joe's, as she and freshman stopper Chris Wanner combined on a three-hitter. Sophomore pitcher Lisa Rever was the victor in game two, and recieved some relief help from senior Cathy Reed. Reed gained her first save of the year.

After sweepieng St. Joe's and securing a spot in the A-10 playoffs, the Minutewomen needed a sweep against Adelphi to better keep their national tournament hopes, although a split doesn't hurt.

"I guess we have to be satisfied with a split, but we really felt that we should have won both games," UMass head coach Elaine Sortino said. "Adelphi had absolutely nothing to lose while we had everything to lose."

Stockley took the 2-1 loss in game one, tossing a three-hitter and going the distance in only her second setback of the season. She also struck out six batters while walking only two. Stockley's record now stands at 16-2.

Adelphi scored both runs in the third inning by loading the bases on a Stockley throwing error, a fielder's choice and a walk. Adelphi first baseman Grace Gazzara lined a shot to right field, but was thrown out by right fielder Chris Ciepiela. A run scored on the play, however, and was followed by Ellen Spruce's sacrifice fly.

The Minutewomen mounted a rally in their half of the seventh when senior center-fielder Sally Maher launched a leadoff triple to right. Sophomore catcher Ilene Freeman then hit a grounder to third and was apparantly safe at first by at least a step. But Freeman was called out on a questionable call, killing a potential game-winning situation for UMass.

In game two, Rever improved her season mark to 12-5, throwing a two-hitter for a 1-0 win. Rever struck out three and walked none while going the distance and was assisted by the tremendous play of the Minutewoman defense, the same defense that had chalked up three errors in the opener.

"I was very surprised at our defense in the first game, especially in covering bunt situations," Sortino said. "Our lack of defense in the first game was very uncharacteristic of us, because we are probably the best defensive team in the region."

The real UMass defense showed up for the nightcap, led by junior third-baseman Debbie Cole, who enjoyed a banner day in the field. Cole robbed Adelphi left-fielder Kris Peterson of a sure base hit in the third inning with a nifty diving stab in the hole.

In the fourth, Cole fielded a Julie Bolduc ground ball and successfully picked off Spruce at second base after Spruce had nailed a double to right center. The play killed an Adelphi rally, and preserved a one-run lead for the Minutewomen.

Sophomore shortstop Paige Kopcza also shined in the field, making two nice plays in the hole to third, and Mahar made a pretty diving catch in shallow center field in the sixth inning.

"These were two very tough games. Adelphi is better than UConn and I think it's to our credit that we have beaten them three-out-of-four times this season," Sortino said. "I think we are in pretty good shape. We are where we want to be at the time we want to be there."

Baseball splits two with Scarlet Knights

The University of Massachusetts baseball team, 14-16, split a doubleheader with Rutgers on Saturday, taking the first game, 4-3, then dropping the second, 15-1.

The Minutemen played yesterday afternoon as well, but results were not available at press time.

In the opener, UMass rallied for three runs in the top of the seventh to defeat the Scarlet Knights. Freshman Gary DiSarcina hit a solo home run and sophomore Darrin O'Connor had a two-run blast following a single by junior second baseman Rob Holiday to power the UMass comeback. In the nightcap, Paul Johnson's grand slam homer led Rutgers to its victory which snapped the Minutemen's nine-game winning streak.

UMass hosts the University of Connecticut tommorrow at 3 p.m. at Lorden Field. UMass lost to the Huskies, 10-9, on April 1, blowing a big lead in the ninth inning at UConn. The Minutemen were 1-11 at the time and seemed incapable of producing a solid performance. Since then, UMass has been 13-5 including 13 of its last 15.

After Connecticut, the Minutemen host Amherst College for a single game on Wednesday and then travel to Northeastern for a doubleheader on May 1. UMass will then play a pair at Dartmouth College on May 6, play at Harvard the following day and then take on Providence College for a twinbill at Providence on May 13. Should UMass qualify for the A-10 Championships, the team would travel to the announced site for its games on May 9.

The fifth-ranked University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team (6-2) also saw action during the weekend, playing at third-ranked Temple University on Saturday and at Rutgers University yesterday. Results were unavailable however, because UMass head coach Pam Hixon was unable to contact the sports desk by press time.

shot past Portuese's left to draw UMass to within one, 7-6, with 3:39 to go.

As the crowd exploded, Army coach Jack Emmer went for the time out. McGovern won the face-off, but Carmean was stripped by Williams with 2:20 to go. Army recovered the loose ball, but senior defenseman Tom Aldrich got tough, knocking Betchley down and taking the ball from him with 1:30 left.

Army was caught offside with 1:15 left and the Gorillas made their move. Carmean went one-on-one with Williams again. Moving in from the goalie's right, he ripped a shot off Portuese's foot that ricocheted up and into the goal with one minute left. It was like a mass-Megabucks win on the hill, as the crowd went bananas.

Army takes overtime battle, 8-7

7,500 at Boyden see comeback bid get snuffed out

In a battle of All-Americans, UMass Tom Carmean, left, takes on Army defenseman Dan Williams, Saturday before 7,500 fans at Boyden Field. The Gorillas fell in overtime, 8-7.

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

You could not have asked for a better game, just a better result.

The 7,500 people jammed into Boyden Field on Saturday were stunned into silence, just 33 seconds into overtime, as Army's Joe Gillis slid a shot past Sal LoCascio to defeat the University of Massachusetts lacrosse team, 8-7, in one of the finest athletic contests this school has witnessed in some years.

The Gorillas fell to 8-2 after mounting a dramatic comeback that saw them score two goals in the game's final 3:39 to force OT. With little doubt, UMass will fall from its current seventh spot in the national rankings, probably to eighth or ninth.

With an expected win this Wednesday at Dartmouth, the Gorillas then need a win at Rutgers and at least a good showing at Syracuse to finish in the top ten and grab a playoff berth.

"This was one hell of a lacrosse game, we just couldn't pull it out," said UMass coach Dick Garber. "Army is a fine team, don't get me wrong, but we could've won. . .we had them."

UM had its six-game winning streak snapped by Army, but gave the pumped-up home fans their best effort out of the last four.

The Cadets, now 6-4, opened the scoring when midfielder Pat Daly flew past fallen defenseman Mike Tomasello and scored unassisted with 10:00 left in the first period.

Army ran off the next two. Just seconds after a UMass penalty ran out, Chris Garvey was left unattened to at the pipe, on LoCascio's right, and Daly found him for the easy score with 6:12 left in the quarter. With 31 seconds left in the period, again right after the penalty, Bob Betchley scored on a similiar play, with Daly assisting again. Army led 3-1 at the end of the period.

UMass then ripped off three straight to grab a 4-3 advantage. Seamus McGovern won the face-off (he was 15-of-19 in a great day) and the Cadets were then whistled for a slash with 13:02 left. In the man-up, senior middie Greg Fisk deftly picked up a rebound directly in front of Portuese, jumped up, then beat the Cadet keeper with 12:25 left.

Williams was called for slashing Carmean, who didn't waste any time, taking Greg Cannella's feed to make it 4-3, with 8:09 left.

With the UMass defense playing well, the Army was content to work the ball around the outside of the box (the area in front of the goal) while looking to go one-one-one. UMass forced several turnovers, but didn't come up with any offense. Army finally went to the cage, scoring with 2:48 left in the half as Doug Shaver ripped a shot past LoCascio, assisted by Daly.

The half ended tied at four, but just 53 seconds into the third period, the rangy (6-4, 195 pounds) Williams made a steal at midfield, fed Shaver who in turn passed to Betchley. Army's attackman whipped the ball past LoCascio and it was 5-4, Army.

Both teams sputtered for the next 10 minutes, until UMass did what they do best: Score on the break.

Middie Doug Musco took a pass at midfield on the run. He passed over to Greg Fisk, breaking into the box on the fly. Fisk spotted Carmean to Portuese's right. As the Cadet defense scrambled, Carmean fed Carr on the left. Carr dunked into the empty net and it was tied again, 5-5, with four minutes left.

Stalling the ball is illegal in lacrosse, but Army's time-killing offense went unnoticed by the three officials for much of the game, until the fourth period when the call was made. The UMass defense, in the meantime, withstood the patient attack as LoCascio (seven saves) came up big several times.

Finally, with 3:39 left in the game, UMass caught a break. Fisk won a face-off in the Army end and flipped the ball over his shoulder to Carmean on the left sideline. Going one-on-one with Williams, Carmean rifled a low

Gorillas still in playoff hunt

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

The Gorillas are down, but by no means out of playoff contention.

Currently tied for seventh in the Division 1 poll, UMass will drop following its 8-7 overtime loss to 10th-ranked Army on Saturday. How far depends on how the voters view Rutgers's 13-7 loss to Syracuse on Saturday in Jersey. Rutgers was tied with UMass for seventh, along with C.W. Post. Post played Adelphi yesterday after a Saturday rainout.

At very worst, UMass will go to 10th, but probably ninth or even eighth. The top 10 teams make the playoffs (with seven hosting 10 and eight hosting nine in the first round) and with a win at hapless Dartmouth Wednesday and another at Rutgers on Friday night, UMass should get a bid. Lose at Rutgers, and UMass would need to accomplish almost a lacrosse impossibility, beating Syracuse at home, to make it.

"We're still very much in it, said UMass coach Dick Garber. "We just don't have as much control any more."

The crowd (estimated from 6,000-7,500) was among the best seen at UMass in a long time, and was almost all students. A few dinks ruined what had been a good day by throwing beer bottles and cans into the crowds during the fourth quarter. Tobin Hall balcony was closed to fans by police, but drinking was generally allowed. The fence at the top of the field was 10-12 fans deep at times.

UMass lacrosse coach Dick Garber believes his team still has a shot at the playoffs.

Statistically, Tom Carmean was four (goals) and one (assist) for UMass. Kelley Carr was one and one, but no other player had more than one point. Army was led by Pat Daly (one and four). Joe Gillis and Bob Betchley had two goals each.

UMass outshot Army 31-21 and had an on-goal advantage of 18-14. UMass was three-of-nine on man-ups, Army was scoreless in seven tries, not even getting a shot. The Cadets did score three times seconds after penalties expired. . .UMass was 19-of-22 on clears, Army was 21-of-26. . .the Gorillas had a 36-30 groundball advantage.

Gorilla Grumblings: Junior defenseman John Jordan missed the game with a bone bruise in his leg, suffered against Harvard. He won't play at Dartmouth, but hopes to see time at Rutgers. He normally would've played Daly, Army's top scorer. Mike Tomasello, a senior defender, did a nice job in Jordan's absence. . .a plane towing a sign reading "We Salute Coach Garber And His Gorillas - Beat Army!" circled the field in the first quarter. . .UMass assistant coach Eric Kemp was an assistant at Washington and Lee under current Army coach Jack Emmer during the 1982-83 seasons. . .Army leads the season series 6-3. . .Gillis also beat UMass last season, with two goals in the last quarter as Army won 11-9 at West Point. .Army is 3-1 on the road this season. . .UMass finsished the season 4-1 at Boyden.

Democrats discuss party issues at forum

Congressmen cite party differences

By BOB KIEVRA
Collegian Staff

A Missouri congressman told a University of Massachusetts audience last night that the distinction between Republicans and Democrats is the difference between a party that cares about people's welfare and a party that does not.

"Ronald Reagan Republicans believe that the government should wither away and die and only provide the national defense," said Rep. Richard Gephardt, D-Mo., to a crowd of 70 last night at the School of Education.

"Democrats believe that by helping and caring for people the country does well, because the country is people and if the people are strong, the country is strong and it works," Gephardt said.

Gephardt, and four other congressmen were speaking as part of a nationwide series of discussions on college campuses examining the critical issues that confront the Democratic Party's future.

The forum capped a series of classroom visits by the legislators during the day. The evening event was originally scheduled for the School of Education's large auditorium, but was moved to a smaller room because of "poor location," according to Ken Burke, University Democrats president, the forum's co-sponsor.

Students who are worried about nuclear warfare should support the principles of the Democrats, Gephardt said.

"I'm sure that there are Republicans who are interested in peace and arms controls and have supported it, but frankly the great majority of support has come out of the Democratic party," he said. "But it's the Democrats who have been on the cutting edge of issues like supporting the nuclear test ban treaty, the nuclear freeze and urging the president to stick with the SALT II limits," Gephardt said.

Rep. Bart Gordon, D-Tenn., said Democratic members of the House of Representatives were shocked by the voting habits of college students in the 1984 presidential election.

"We were rudely awakened when we looked at the demographics from last year's election and found that for the first time since 18-year-olds gained the right to vote, they overwhelmingly voted Republican," he said.

Gordon said he could not explain this trend because further examination of poll data revealed that these same students supported many of the Democratic Party's policies.

Rep. Sander Levin, D-Mich, said there is a gap between people's views toward the president and their stand on issues.

"I'm not sure why this is, but I do know that if the issues of the future are apartheid, aid to education, the contras in Nicaragua, and human rights, then the Democratic Party should be in their future."

Rep. says students back party principles

State Democratic Party Chairman Rep. Chester Atkins yesterday admitted his party made some serious mistakes in the 1984 election but said he still believes the majority of college students support the principles espoused by Democrats.

"We made the mistake in 1984 of just not getting our message out to the students," Atkins said in an afternoon interview before speaking at last night's "Forum for the Future" with four other Democratic congressmen. "But I believe that our party, while retaining a healthy skepticism, is one that is willing to take risks and empower people ... and create economic opportunities for all."

Atkins was at the University of Massachusetts yesterday as part of a nationwide effort by the House Democratic Caucus to "reclaim one of the party's traditional bases," college students. He said his UMass appearance was just the beginning of the party's efforts to reach out to college campuses.

"This will be a long process, one of dialogue, understanding, and realization," he said. "If you look at the major institutions of society, whether it's the church, businesses, or whatever, they all look to campuses for trends, new ideas, and as places where they need to make connections for future leadership.

"It's a funny kind of thing that both political parties have probably done less to have a presence on campus than any other major societal institution," he said. "Our party is trying to change this."

Atkins said his vote in favor of the Gramm-Rudman deficit-reduction law should not be seen as lack of support for student financial aid, calling the bill "simply a way of dealing with the terrible deficit problems at the federal level that we're going to have to face up to somehow."

Atkins also said he supports the bid of state Sen. John Olver, D-Amherst, to become the new chancellor of the Board of Regents of Higher Education.

"I've always had good relations with Jim Collins [Amherst's state representative, also a candidate for the regents seat], but I was one of the people who nominated ... Olver for the position.

He's a close friend of mine who's always supported higher education."

Committee will oversee relations with UPC

Concert group asks to extend payments

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS
Collegian Staff

A Student Government Association committee will be formed this summer to improve relations between the SGA and the Union Program Council, the association's treasurer said yesterday.

Treasurer Katherine Strickland said she conceived the committee after UPC, the student organization that runs rock concerts on campus, asked her office for an extension on its most recent deficit payment of $7,517.

UPC also requested permission to incur a further deficit of about $15,000, which it said is needed to help fund the spring concert, May 11, at the campus pond, according to Strickland.

UPC expects to lose an estimated $14,000 from the May 11 show, said Brad Ferris, UPC business manager.

Ferris said the other deficits are a result of the council's substantial losses between 1980 and 1981.

A memorandum outlining the committee's objectives, released by Strickland yesterday, said her concerns include UPC's accountability to the SGA, the number of concerts produced each year, any significant losses incurred from low ticket sales and ticket pricing for non-students.

Strickland said the committee, which will consist of three SGA officers, two UPC officers and the Student Activities Office business manager, will benefit both the SGA and UPC.

"There is a need in the Student Government Association to see what UPC goes through," she said. "It only makes sense when two organizations are working closely or have the potential to."

Strickland said she supports UPC and its requests for an extension of its deficit payment, but that more communication between the two groups is necessary.

"The best thing to do is to sit down and try to work for what is best for all," she said.

Ferris said the committee idea is "fantastic."

"If we educate the SGA on what it really takes to put on a concert then people will understand why we ask for money and get the talent that we get," he said. "It will be really good to educate the powers of the SGA."

He added that UPC had a "very good" year except for two concerts that lost a combined $23,000.

Strickland said UPC is not expected to turn a profit, but neither should it incur large losses. "They [UPC] do good work and we just want it to continue and make it tighter."

FYI

Seat Belt Awareness day will be held today and tomorrow at the University of Massachusetts. Information about seat belts and state law will be available in the Campus Center Concourse. "The Convincer," a machine that simulates a collision at 6 m.p.h., will be located near the campus pond. The event is sponsored by the Student Health Advisory Board.

Students Advocating Financial Aid will hold elections at 5 p.m. today in Campus Center room 903. SAFA members will vote for president, vice president, treasurer and members of the executive council.

Students who received a census from the Amherst town clerk's office may return it by campus mail, addressed to that office.

Ihab Hassan, professor of English and comparative literature at the University of Wisconsin, will speak about "Making Sense: The Crisis of Post-Modern Discourse" at 8:15 p.m. today in Bartlett Auditorium. His visit is sponsored by the dean of humanities and fine arts.

Soviet reactor damaged in nuclear accident

MOSCOW (AP) - The Soviet Union yesterday reported a nuclear accident that damaged an atomic reactor at the Chernobyl power plant and said that people affected were being given aid.

Announcement by the official news agency Tass followed reports from Sweden that increased radiation levels were detected north of Stockholm, more than 750 miles northwest of the Ukranian town of Chernobyl. Finland also reported increased radiation, but both countries said the levels were not dangerous.

The Soviets reported it was the first nuclear accident in the Soviet Union and that a government commission was set up, an indication that the accident was serious.

The first, brief Tass announcement did not say when the accident occured or give details beyond saying, "Measures are being undertaken to eliminate the consequences of the accident. Aid is being given to those affected."

A subsequent Tass report said it was the first such accident in the Soviet Union, "although in other countries similar incidents have occured more than once." But the reports did not say if any deaths resulted and it was not immediately known if the reference to those "affected" implied that some people were injured.

Swedish officials would not name the source of the radiation detected at the Forsmark nuclear power plant north of Stockholm, but said Sweden had received no warning.

Bo Holmquist, a senior regional government official responsible for the Forsmark plant, told The Associated Press in Sweden, "The source of the leak is somewhere to the east of us and to the east of Finland, if you know what I mean."

Energy Minister Birgitta Dahl also declined to identify the source of the radiation but said it was "unacceptable that the Swedish authorities had been given no notification."

In New York, Eugene Ganthorn, an analyst at the office of the Atomic Industrial Forum, a US industry group of utilities and suppliers, said the Chernobyl plant is located at a new town called Pripyat near Chernobyl.

The plant consists of four 1,000-megawatt reactors of identical design constructed in 1977, 1978, 1981 and 1983. He said it is a light-water cooled, graphite-moderated design not used in the United States.

Remains of Challenger crew to be flown to Del.

Exam of shuttle complete

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) - Three months after the explosion of space shuttle Challenger, pathologists completed examination of the remains of the seven crew members and the bodies will be transported today to Delaware to be prepared for burial.

A C-141 aircraft carrying seven flag-draped coffins will depart from the shuttle land strip this morning for Dover Air Force Base.

Although there will be a military honor guard and escorts from the astronaut corps, no formal ceremony is planned here, and no family members were expected.

"At Dover, the remains will be prepared in accordance with the wishes of the individual families," NASA said last week in announcing that the bodies will be moved.

The Dover facility is the east coast receiving and embalming site for remains of government employees, military personnel or their relatives. In most cases, autopsies are performed at the site of death and the embalming or cremation takes place a Dover.

Among those treated there were the 237 Marines killed in the Beirut, Lebanon terrorist bombing in 1983, the 256 servicemen killed in a jetliner crash in December in Newfoundland and the 913 members of the People's Temple who committed suicide at Jonestown, Guyana, in 1978.

Killed in the Jan. 28 Challenger accident were Francis R. Dick Scobee, 46, the spacecraft commander; Navy Cmdr. Michael J. Smith, 40, the pilot; Judith A. Resnik, 36, mission specialist; Ronald E. McNair, 35, mission specialist; Air Force Lt. Col. Ellison S. Onizuka, mission specialist; Gregory B. Jarvis, 42, a Hughes Aircraft engineer; and S. Christa McAuliffe, 37, a New Hampshire schoolteacher selected as NASA's first private citizen in space.

Town unites for hunger fund

By STUART GAMBLE
Collegian Correspondent

2,000 people are expected to join hands Saturday through the town of Amherst to fight hunger.

"Hands Across the Valley," sponsored by the five area colleges and the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group, will begin at 12:30 p.m. and stretch from the University of Massachusetts Fine Arts Center to Amherst Common.

The event is similar to "Hands Across America," a human chain that will span the United States May 25 to raise money for the hungry and the homeless.

"It would be special to have our own 'Hands Across America,'" said Karen Schiller, the secretary of the Hunger Task Force and spokeswoman for the project at UMass.

Money raised from the event will be divided and sent to the Western Massachusetts Food Bank, "Hands Across America" for use across the US and Oxfam America.

"The order of the day will be the chain, a band and speakers on the Amherst Common," she said. Speakers will include Rep. Silvio Conte, R-Mass., and representatives from the food bank and Hands Across America.

"This is a way students can make a difference and at the same time have fun," Schiller said.

Intensive training brings drill team a first place finish

By PAUL KARPAWICH
Collegian Correspondent

For the first time in 22 years, the University of Massachusetts Air Force ROTC drill team finished first in a drill competition held this month at Renselauer Polytechnic Institute in Troy, N.Y.

The UMass Flying Redmen competed against seven other college drill teams from the Northeast. They placed second overall in the three categories, invocation, drill and inspection.

Twelve UMass students were in detachment 370, which competed under the direction of Flight Cmdr. Steve Jankelson. The unit excuted 54 standard drill movements in front of a panel of judges, said Capt. Stephen Re.

Jankelson said that before the event he put his charges through two weeks of intensive training to pull them together. "The team was very rusty at first, but the motivation factor pulled us through," he said.

Dawn Wood, a first-year student and team member, said that one-half of the team had little prior marching experience.

Tim Fournier, a drill team member, said, "We practiced until marching became second nature. The training took a lot of concentration and hard work." Some nights the team practiced in the Campus Center parking garage, he said.

Students receive fellowships

Three University of Massachusetts graduate students have been awarded graduate fellowships from the US Department of Education.

Blythe Roveland, Elizabeth Fones-Wolf and Molly Diesing received the awards from the National Graduate Fellows Program, which assists students of the arts, humanities and social sciences. The fellowships cover tuition and fees and provide stipends based on financial need.

Eighty-five awards were given from a nationwide applicant pool of 1,700.

Roveland, now studying anthropology at UMass, said the award will help her study the theoretical aspects of anthropology.

"Just looking at artifacts won't tell anything about human behavior unless you have theory behind it," she said.

Roveland studied Paleolithic archeology at the University of Cologne, West Germany, under a federal Fulbright-Hays grant in 1984. She entered the anthropology program at UMass last year.

Fones-Wolf, a history student, has written extensively on unions and the labor movement. One of her articles, "Industrial Recreation and the Revival of Welfare Capitalism, 1934-1969," has been chosen for publication by Business History Review.

Fones-Wolf received bachelor's and master's degrees in history from the University of Maryland and began doctoral work at UMass in 1984. She hopes to become a history professor, she said.

Diesing, who studies linguistics, also said she hopes to teach at the college level. She is in her second semester in the UMass doctoral program.

Young Zaccaro pleads innocent to drug charges

MIDDLEBURY, Vt.—John Zaccaro Jr. pleaded innocent to a charge of sale regulated drugs in Vermont District Court yesterday.

The 22-year-old son of former vice presidential candidate Geraldine Ferraro and John Zaccaro Sr. appeared at the status hearing, where prosecutors added the charge. Zaccaro was originally arraigned in February on charges of possession of cocaine with intent to sell.

Zaccaro's lawyers have filed a motion asking that the case be dropped, alleging that Zaccaro was singled out for arrest and prosecution.

Judge Francis McCaffrey heard no motions yesterday, but said all motions must be filed by May 12. Another status hearing is scheduled for Friday.

"The state has carefully selected John Zaccaro Jr. out of a callege campus by what appears to be a member of the Middlebury College campus security," Thomas Sherer, a member of the Burlington law firm representing Zaccaro, wrote in court papers. "One of the issues the defense is raising in this case is the issue of 'selective prosecution.'"

The statements came in a defense motion asking the judge to order police to divulge "the name of the individual who allegedly gave them information that the defendent was involved in drugs."

The motion also asked that the case be dropped on the grounds of "selective prosecution."

Addison County State's Attorney John Quinn responded that the defense was "trying to create an issue which doesn't exist."

"This prosecution is based on the fact that an undercover police officer went to his house and allegedly purchased regulated drugs," Quinn said.

Zaccaro, a senior at the college, was arrested outside a local bar where he worked the night of Feb. 20 and charged with possession of cocaine with intent to sell, according to police. Police said the arrest came hours after a state police officer purchased a quarter gram of cocaine from Zaccaro.

Police said a subsequent search of Zaccaro's home and car turned up drugs and other materials associated with drug dealing.

An Open Letter to UMass Professionals

Dear Colleagues:

We, the OPEIU Organizing Committee, feel compelled to respond one last time to the inaccurate statements and information about our union being distributed by the MTA.

We deeply regret that so much energy has had to be spent on responding to MTA's distortion tactics. We had hoped that this organizing campaign would be focused upon the issues of UMass professionals' need for a union, and the reasons why we believe that OPEIU, Local 1863, AFL-CIO is the best union to represent us (local autonomy, lower dues, AFL-CIO affiliation, etc.)

Instead, most of MTA's campaign, which has been orchestrated from their central office in Boston, has been an attack upon our union. They have used inaccurate, distorted and patently false information about OPEIU, in an apparently desperate effort to energize MTA's campaign, which never really got off the ground. We believe that such tactics are not only counterproductive, but irresponsible for an organization which claims to champion the rights of professional employees to organize and bargain collectively with their employees.

We, the Organizing Committee, have attempted to run a rank-and-file, campus-based campaign that deals with the REAL issues important to UMass Professionals: salaries, job security, grievance and arbitration, the Olney study, etc. We call upon all professional colleagues, including those who in the past and recently have supported MTA, to vote for us on May 1. With your help, we can achieve a first-ballot victory, and start on the real work of improving the working lives of all of us.

On behalf of the OPEIU Organizing Committee

Native Americans ignored at UMass

Did you know the University of Massachusetts only offers two courses on American Indians? Both of them, one offered by the Anthropology Department, the other by Legal Studies, are available only during the spring! Furthermore, neither of these classes are taught by a native. American Indian students in need of someone who is sensitive to their problems have only one part-time native teaching assistant to turn to for counseling.

I learned these facts when interviewing a native student who rightfully expressed the need for the University to hire Native American instructors and counselors. So far, she said, the University has argued that not enough native students attend UMass. The History Department offers a Russian History course. How many Russian students attend UMass?

Donna Goodleaf is a Mohawk graduate student from Canada. I met her at the International Fair on April 12 while I was covering the event for the Collegian. Goodleaf, from behind the Native American table, was urging passers-by to sign a petition. My curiosity, having been drawn to the American Indian table, guided me to her. I asked what the petition was about.

Unlike women, Jewish and black students, American Indians do not have an academic/counselling program, Goodleaf informed me. Indeed, as she pointed out this unfortunate fact, I realized I had never heard of anything that even sounded like Native American or American Indian Studies! The petition, therefore, addressed the need for courses focusing on American Indians taught by American Indians, who have better understanding of the culture, to the adminstration. Despite my usual reluctance to sign petitions, especially when reporting, I did not hesitate to sign this one.

Later, I contacted Goodleaf to learn more information on her initiative. She told me several other native students are also involved. They have met with a couple of administrators, but little or nothing has been done to help these students with a true cause. And, thanks to good old bureaucratic procedures (wouldn't you know it?), it will take a while before these administrators do anything, if they ever do.

Creating a program for Native Americans not only would attract more native students to campus, but would also enrich the diversified culture for which UMass is known. It would benefit all students, including natives who have been raised in urban areas, interested in learning more about Native American culture. Native students on this campus have remained too passive with their initiative. Goodleaf says it best: Native students at UMass are "invisible" for they are not heard.

While actively concerned with funding or supporting debates between contras and Sandinistas, and protests against apartheid and the bombing of Libya, the campus community is overlooking an issue to which it ought to give priority. I'll bet you had never even heard of these native students' initiative. Certainly you remember that four centuries ago we stormed into this land, massacred the Indians and seized their territory. Isn't time to give them a chance? Isn't it time to do them justice?

'Role models' fall far short

Barbara DeLollis

I am grateful to the Christian Science Monitor for opening my eyes as to the type of journalist I could become.

On Saturday, April 26, 12 of my classmates and I, accompanied by Professor David DuBois, went to Boston to witness the "International Videoconference on World Issues & Media Responsibility" as a part of our Afro-American and Journalism class. For weeks prior to the conference, the question was raised as to why the Monitor was doing this. According to the Monitor, it was intended to be for the benefit of future journalists, but could this really be?

I don't think so!

Although the conference was, for unknown reasons, not advertised on this campus, a poster was seen bearing this message: "Exchange ideas with journalists all over the world without leaving your seat." I must say that we, the representatives of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst, had three questions addressed to the international video panelists. However, they were never quite answered.

The journalists who we "exchanged ideas with" were downright evasive when issues concerning the third world were brought up.

It seems to me that our class, as well as the other college participants, were used as tools in a big publicity stunt by the Monitor. We barely had the chance to exchange our views with the so-called experts of the journalism field, because they basically exchanged their views with each other.

The treatment of the third world was even more unfortunate. Representation was nil, and knowledge next to nothing. Yes, the third world was mentioned, but only surface issues were addressed.

If one was to dwell on the subject of representation, I am sure the comments would never cease. There was but one woman overseas on each panel of five men, one woman on the Boston panel, and one black man on the Boston panel.

The Monitor obviously underestimated us as students. Many of the statements made by panelists were ludicrous. I would not want to call any panel participant a role model for the future journalist, but what else is out there?

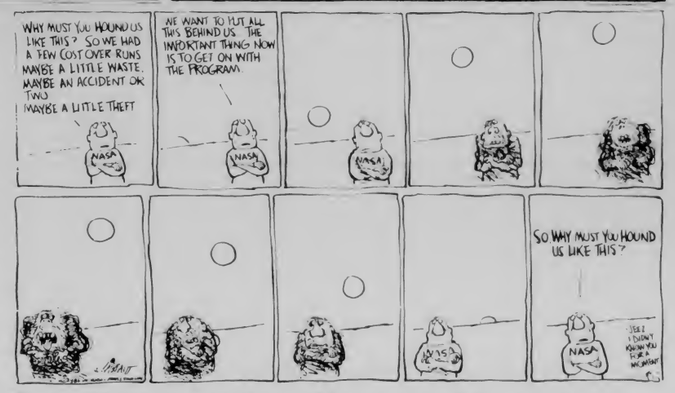
Opinion columnists in this paper are responsible for many things but generally, we don't get to write titles for our pieces, we aren't allowed to read the mail we generate, and we aren't responsible for typographical errors. I often wish that major typos carried notices such as "typo," "bleep" or at the very least "oops." However, no typo worthy of the name has yet volunteered to carry one of these little labels.

Last week, such a typo made a guest appearance in my column (as they do on a regular basis) when a significant phrase was lost in "paste-up." I'm not sure whether the phrase appeared in someone else's piece or not, but if not, I'm sure it's running around here somewhere. My original said that (note the phrase in italics) the government uses social engineering to serve an economic idol, the "quality of life." It plays Robin Hood between rich and poor, and plays John Brown in trying to protect the beleaguered women by murdering their unwanted masters, the unborn babies. The babies, unlike the rich, cannot defend themselves against social engineering.

Now that I've addressed some misunderstandings and alienated a few people twice in repetition, I'll make some other comments. Very often, the anti-abortion camp recognizes only one victim, the baby, and only as long as it is unborn. Likewise, the pro-abortion camp also recognizes only one living victim, the woman, and also gives only lip-service to her post-pregnant life. The truth is that an unplanned pregnancy involves two victims—mother and baby — and abortion or no abortion, they may be victims for the rest of their lives unless someone else cares enough to lend a hand.

Advocates of the sexual revolution are partly responsible for this since they lobby for men to plant their sperms anywhere they can, without regard to the result. Poverty for mother and child would be less of an issue if the government insisted that fathers pay child-support and mother-support. Certainly, more men would take an interest in birth control.



In a few rare instances, the child is conceived by rape or incest. While it is understandable that nobody wants to memorialize such circumstances in flesh and blood, the child is not the villian. And like it or not, the child is already flesh and blood — and mind and spirit, too, as demonstrated by the sensitivity of children in the womb. Let's recognize that with federal assistance. And let's work on eliminating rape and incest instead of children.

Abortion proponents have been far too quick to search for such exceptional cases which somehow "deserve" abortion. They don't realize that rape, incest, and vanishing boyfriends won't be taken seriously enough as long as abortion is supposed to solve everything. They don't realize that abortion doesn't make either mother or baby less of victim. And they don't realize that the unborn are not sexual typos or economic malignancies.

At this point, someone is going to say (as someone invariably does) that my white, middle-class, male values are a luxury which poor, struggling people can't afford. That's very interesting. Perhaps I should have considered that when I was working 80 hours every week at a physically demanding job while taking a full schedule of courses and handling family responsibilities. Maybe I should have thought of that earlier in my involuntary poverty when I gave what little I had to an unwed mother.

Or maybe, just maybe, the local pro-life community I'm part of knows more about reality and caring than some people give us credit for. We think a mother and her unborn baby each deserve a chance. We're trying to give it to them.

Roasting marshmallows and terrorism

Mark Caldeira

We are a nation of marshmallows — toasted marshmallows with tough skins. We live in small plastic bags, neatly packed. We all look the same, and we all toast the same way.

Stuck on individualistic sticks, we are shishkebabed over the flame of freedom until our insides become protected wih a rough outer shell (the coals of capitalism keep the fire fierce). Yet, what are we really? We are mooshy, gooshy marshmallows.

We are stuck on the stick; we are taught to be individuals, to compete and work hard, to look out for number one, to make it or break it in a dog eat dog world with no obligation in society, to defy the magical "free market," and to rapture in the American Dream. Now we are prepared, ready to be toasted.

FLASH! Moammar Khadafy leads revolutionary coup to power, nationalizes foreign banks and American oil holdings, evacuates British and American military bases, raises the Libyan standard of living, stands up to Western economic and military pressures, joins in support of Palestine in its struggle with Israel, and exists as a threat to US big business policy. The fire is lit.

FLASH! Unable to effectively fight the West in conventional terms, Khadafy resorts to encouraging terrorism, to the slaughter of "innocent" Westerners, especially Americans. Arab terrorists begin to carry out their mission quite commendably; they have learned the skills of the trade from terrorist training camps in Florida, Alabama, and Texas, as well as in parts of the Middle East. Besides, they have the CIA and the contras as examples of flawless terrorism. Americans are killed. Marshmallows are toasted.

Reagan requests retaliatory revenge. Mulroney, Peres, and Thatcher, on their knees, say "go ahead." The rest of the world, including our friends, say "no way." Five Libyan "military targets" are hit. Scores of innocent Libyan civilians are blown apart. Republicans, Democrats, The Globe, The New York Times, and 80% of the US population celebrate in sadistic, macho fervor. America is back on its feet again! "You *–$ with us, we $– with you!" Marshmallow America is toasted fine.

When the US wants to eat, marshmallows roast. On the fires of Shultz, Weinberger, Kirkpatrick, and Reagan speeches, we marshmallows toast. As quick as gasoline goes up when a match is dropped, we mooshy marshmallows roast right up when the head honchos speak tough. We roasted up for Grenada, for the contras, for the biggest "peacetime" military build-up in our history, for the El Salvadoran elections, for the Sullivan Principles, for 'Star Wars", and now for Libya. How much longer will we allow our gooshy selves to be toasted?

When Reagan decides to act against Libya again, will we roast? When Reagan gets out his red kindergarten map and tries to woo Congress into passing the contra aid bill, will we roast? When Reagan continues with his mad urges to ignore and reject the Soviet Union's proposal for concrete nuclear arms reductions, will we roast?

It is time for Marshmallow America to stop its pretentious concern for humanity. It is about time we take a firm stand for human rights, and make a firm commitment to question this government's actions—and to rightly condemn actions that are bellicose. It is about time we stop being mooshy, gooshy marshmallows and stop this administration from roasting up the world.

Mark Caldeira is a Collegian columnist.

GREETINGS!

From today onward (or at least until May 1987), the ED/OP page will be put together by a couple of new people. Rob Skelton and William Spain, after a pitched electoral battle in which the Collegian Staff split down the middle, decided to join forces and take the job together.

Not to worry, Larry Bouchie is alive and well. His early abdication will in no way effect the balanced editorial stance he worked hard to maintain. We are grateful to him for his unceasing efforts and wish him the best of luck in the world outside.

The ED/OP page will remain at the eye of the hurricane when it comes to subjective analysis of local, national, and international events. Our devotion to an evenhanded presentation of diverse points of view will continue unchecked. In the future, look for graphic innovation, an increased emphasis on investigative reporting and even more ruffled feathers than usual.

Be sure to let us know how we are doing, folks.

Letters

God counts

This is in response to Frank Flanagan's letter of April 23 entitled "Bible not the Answer." As a woman, I have agonized over the question of abortion. Should it be legal or not? What would I do if faced with such a decision? What am I doing now to help other women faced with it? I look at these questions in light of my Christian faith. I have made an effort to understand both sides, and I am far from believing that I know all the answers. It hurts and sometimes angers me to hear someone argue "pro-life" without stopping to consider the myriad of feelings, people, and circumstances involved. They take this stand in a judgmental and unloving way which does not go beyond the surface — the "safe" sides of the issue. Yes, there are people or institutions who seem to "want to 'save'...babies, but don't want to pay for it," who are "'handsomely' rich" and "can afford such self-delusion."

However, just as hearing these people disturbs me, it hurts and saddens me to see someone write off the Bible and/or God because of human failings. I do not personally know Rusty Denton "and his ilk," but I do know something of the Bible. To say that "obviously, it does not" have the answers to the issues that we face in today's world and in America, to trivialize it to the notion of "a Dairy Queen promised land" reflects an attitude similar to that which I mentioned above — one which does not take "the time to know" that which is criticized. People often view, and even judge, God and the Bible on the basis of human actions, human opinions, and human mistakes. But I hope and pray that my mistakes, blunders and failings don't get attributed to God. There are a lot of people, like me, who profess a belief in God and in the Bible and who, nevertheless, make mistakes. Please don't judge God solely by what you see from Rusty Denton "and his ilk," nor from me, nor from any other human source. I have often found in the Bible the answers for "ills and issues" in my own life, and I know of others who feel the same way and for whom the Bible and God and religious faith are very important, special, and beautiful. Please don't write them off, whatever your politics.

No surprise

The current outrage over our reprisal against Libya by our "allies" and by campus radicals comes as no surprise to me. I firmly believe that our president acted in America's best interest, in order to protect each and every one of us from becoming a helpless victim of terrorism.

Terrorism is not just a mere word or a worn-out cliche. It translates directly into cold-blooded and wanton slaughter, specifically targeting innocent civilians, for some senseless and obscure "reason."

Where were our friends when American babies were being blown out of airplanes? To criticize Reagan for protecting us can only be described as misguided dementia.

Fanon to speak at Dubois lecture

By C. RON ALLEN
Collegian Staff

Tomorrow, at 8 p.m. Josie Fanon, widow of activist and social theorist Frantz Fanon will speak on "Frantz Fanon and The Third World: Interpretations and Activities at this year's W.E.B. DuBois lecture at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst.

The speech will be in Campus Center room 163.

"Though many people have heard of Fanon's classic work, The Wretched of the earth, not as many appreciate the amazing number of accomplishments he achieved within his brief life span of 36 years," Chancellor Joseph Duffey said. "It is this remarkable record of dedication to humanity that links Fanon to DuBois and prompted the University to invite Madame Fanon to give this year's DuBois lecture."

Fanon is a writer and journalist who, like her husband, specializes in the international politics of the third world. From 1962 to 1977, she lived in Algiers where she wrote for the Algerian national newspaper, El Moujahid, and the leading government journal, Revolution Africane. In recognition of her husband's dedication to Algeria's national liberation struggle, she and her family were given Algerian citizenship while maintaining their French citizenship.

In 1977, Fanon returned to Paris to help launch a new Pan-African magazine, Demain L'Afrique. For the past few years she has worked for two French publishing houses and recently finished translating Joseph Lelyveld's book on South Africa, Move your shadow.

The W.E.B. DuBois lecture is sponsored by the Office of the Chancellor, Five Colleges Inc., Five College Black Studies and the University's Institute of Humanities, Afro-American Studies and department of French and Italian.

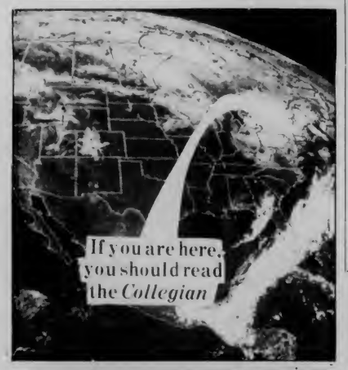
Marcos tells followers he's legal

MANILA, PHILIPPINES (AP) - Ousted President Ferdinand D. Marcos told 12,000 followers Sunday he was the legitimate president of the Philippines and urged them to keep demonstrating against the government of Corazon Aquino.

He urged that they keep their protests peaceful and avoid violence. "I am healthy . . . I am ready to fight," Marcos, speaking by telephone from Hawaii, told a cheering crowd that gathered for a rally at Manila's Rizal Park.

His wife, Imelda, referred to herself as "your first lady" and sounded in tears as she told the crowd she and her husband "will do everything" to return to their homeland.

Earlier Saturday, Marcos talked by phone with President Reagan, who stopped in Honolulu on his way to Bali, Indonesia, where he will meet leaders of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations this week.



A source in Manila called Marcos later and quoted him as saying the talk with Reagan was "friendly, congenial, productive and fruitful."

Marcos said he and Reagan discussed Marcos's situation "realistically," but Marcos did not elaborate, according to the source, who spoke to The Associated Press on condition of not being identified.

Reagan had called Aquino last week. It was their first conversation since she assumed the presidency shortly after Marcos fled the presidential palace on Feb. 25 during a popularly backed military rebellion. Marcos has been in exile in Hawaii since then.

THANK YOU NOTES!!

"Just a word to thank you for the care and attention you lavished on installation of the Pioneer unit in my Honda Accord, and on the advice you were willing to give me earlier about the purchase."
C.R. Northampton

(from a letter to a manufacturer) "I would like to comment on the "up-town," professional manner in which Sound & Music in Northampton dealt with me . . . and for the helpful, "non-pushy," understanding attitude that I clearly perceived in the transaction. You definitely have a "WINNER" in selecting these folks to represent your products."
R.M., Chelmsford

"Your firm's straightforward, factual approach to service is excellent. Your charges for this excellent service are reasonable. One gets the feeling that the entire staff likes (enjoys) what they are doing."
D.L., Greenfield

"I'm glad you're there to service and repair all these quirky (?) creatures in your careful, efficient fashion—I recommend you whenever I can."
M.S., Charlemont

"The total investment was around $270. I know that to you that's probably a relatively small purchase but your salesman (Jack) treated me as if I were the most important customer you would ever have. Not only was he extremely patient and helpful in picking out the speakers, he also did a "tune-up" on my turntable after installing the new cartridge. For me that was hard-earned money and a major expenditure. I appreciate being treated like a major customer."
M.W., Northampton

"One year after the major purchase (and the novelty has worn off), I am still quite pleased."

Perceptions of humans on view at UMass Gallery

By BETTY ANN MURPHY
Collegian Staff

The human being is an interesting animal. The artist's fascination with the human figure and its psyche is the theme of the current exhibition at the University Gallery, "Figure Drawings from the Permanent Collection." Though we all belong to the same species, physical traits and mental quirks vary greatly from one human to another. The fifty works selected for this show not only illustrate actual differences between individual humans but also looks at the distinctively different perceptions various 20th Century artists have of the human animal and being.

Atomic Blast Imprint of The End of Curiosity and/or Manipulation is the mysterious title of Francesc Torres' 1982 work. With softly shaded grey charcoal and pastel Torres creates a haunting image — a lonely shadow silhouetted against a mehalithic stone block. It is hard to tell if this is simply a cast shadow, or if there is really a person trapped inside the rock. The puzzling image, like the sketch's title, is curiously depressing and pessimistic.

On the opposite wall, Nicholas Marsicano's 1964 Nude Study #1 offers a much more optimistic view of the human condition. With his bright splashes of red and squiggles of black, Marsicano treats his figure more like a vegetable than like an animal.

One of my favorites, also one of the biggest and brightest, is Luccio Pozzi's Double Swim. Abstract bits and pieces of human anatomy twist, swim, float and jump in a living sea. These figures do, however, smile and the artist's light touch hints at the joy he had in painting them. The show's oldest selection also depicts bathers. The figures in Andre L'Hote's 1920 Beach Scene the colors are less vivid than Pozzi's but the figures are much more realistic and recognizable.

One of the most popular is Dottie Attie's Revenge of the Scoutmasters. Here, the artist presents the female figure as an art object. In his nine sequential pencil drawings, Attie systematically recreates Jean-Auguste Ingres' 1905 Portrait of Madame Riviere, and then destroys his copied masterpiece slowly, by burning it around the edges, until only a scrap of paper is left in the last frame.

Figure Drawings was organized by students in the Art History Department's Museum Studies seminar. These students have done an excellent job in the presentation of these works, which can only hint at the extensive permanent collection of the gallery. The paintings will be on display in the University Gallery, in the Fine Arts Center, until June 8.

A taste of cajun music was brought to Amherst this weekend as Dave Morrish, Bobby Michaud, Darrin Wallace and Donald Fontenot play in front the Unitarian meeting house.

Cajun invasion hits Amherst despite cancellation of event

This past weekend saw a Cajun invasion in Amherst, in the form of Donald Fontenot and his Louisiana Cajun Band, who played at the Jones Library, in the streets of town, at Butterfield dormitory, and adjacent to the radio station WMUA for a special live presentation.

The mini-tour was organized by "Rockin" Dave Morrish, the local "Zydeco Duke" as part of his on-going campaign to spread the gospel of Louisiana cajun music and culture.

"Although they're not used to playing in front of people who just watch (as opposed to dance), they eventually transformed their shows into a real French dancing scene," he said.

The band is comprised of Donald Fontenot on accordian, Bobby Michaud on guitar, and Darrin Wallace on the fiddle. They are based in southwestern Louisiana, where they play local dancehouses in and around the town of Lafayette.

"The music's got soul," Morrish says when asked why he brought the band to Amherst on his own expense. "The dialect and the history behind the music makes it unique. It means nothing but a good time."

Originally the band was to be one of three playing at the Butterfield Cajun Fest, organized by Morrish and due to receive offsetting funding from an on-campus cultural enrichment endowment, but effective publicity in town and in the media made local administrators jitterish about security and the like.

"It's too bad they had to cancel the official show," Morrish said. "This bureaucratic pettiness is typical of institutions and I guess I should have covered myself better. At least they were able to play for some audiences in Amherst."

"We had a big barbeque planned," said Butterfield kitchen manager Paul Scarpino, "and it got cancelled almost out of the blue."

Academy's third try offers only insult to audience

By JOE SHARTRAND
Collegian Staff

In the first Police Academy, there were a few funny sight gags; in Police Academy II, there were one or two; in Police Academy III, there are none. Dull direction, dreary dialogue and uninspired clowning should put this series ten feet under.

The city threatens to close the Police Academy if it loses a competition, so the commander calls in Steve Guttenberg, Bubba Smith, and David Graf, among others, to save the school. The director, Jerry Paris, tries to stuff a series of one-liners, sight gags, and crazy characters into this very thin outline. What is vomited back is garbage. The one-liners are incredibly insipid; the sight gags are asinine and the crazy characters are cliches.

For example, the commander, as he is driving by the new recruits, in his golf-cart, crashes off a small cliff. This gag, besides being used in the first two Academies, is a staple of slapstick that has seen better days, especially when Laurel and Hardy were around. While Laurel and Hardy were experts at slapstick, Paris is not. He just inserts old gags and hope they work. There is no originality, or spontaneity and so the gag flops.

The dialogue, besides being unfunny, is offensive, sexist, bigoted and idiotic. The writer, Gene Quintao, has no ear for comic dialogue and resorts to the standard stereotypical responses. There is the traditional wimp, weirdo, jock, and romantic interest, that Quintao employs to spout his worthless lines. For example, Steve Guttenberg (the hero) banters with the romantic interest: "On a cuteness scale from one to ten, I'd be an eight. No, you're right, five." She didn't say a word to Guttenberg's gibberish, because her only purpose was to wiggle her butt for the camera. Another awful example, "See this ear. It's a finely tuned crap detector." My "finely tuned crap detector" was, by this time, begging for mercy.

There was no mercy to be found in the performances either. Everyone acted as if their role was a cameo with nothing to be done but smile for the close-ups. Steve Guttenberg and a few others, who are fairly well-known, walked through their parts like somnambulists, while the unknown performers, created the traditional stereotypes. The wimp is small, bespectacled, and weak; the Oriental knows karate from birth. Only the weirdo, as played by Bobcat Goldthwait, is interesting. His frenzied spasms in speech make him the most energetic character in the film, though not too funny.

This film is just a typical sequel. It's only purpose is to make a quick buck. Whether the film entertains the audiences isn't the point, it's the box office receipts. Hopefully this film will flop and bring about the end of the Police Academy series.

The Tax Collectors will perform their "sick, original rock 'n roll" at 4 p.m. tomorrow on the pyramids in the Southwest Residential area. The three band members are (from left to right) Russell Leach, Adam Leach, and Tim May.

Marie Hart and Joshua Perlstein are shown here in the UMass Department of Theater's production of Talley's Folly , by Lanford Wilson. The show can be seen at 8 p.m. on May 1-3, 7-10 and at 2 p.m. on the 3rd in the Rand Theater of the UMass Fine Arts Center. Tickets are $4 for the general public and $3 for students and senior citizens and can be picked up at the UMass Fine Arts Center Box Office.

Jay Zerner: A consistent threat

By MATT GERKE
Collegian Staff

There were no trumpets blaring when Jay Zerner came to the University of Massachussetts as a freshman two-and-a-half years ago. Nor did he find a red carpet rolled out to meet him.

He was not a big name out of high school, not a highly-touted recruit, just a player trying to make the baseball team as a walk-on.

But Zerner is living proof that you don't have to make a lot of noise to get noticed. You can do it with a lot of effort and a good attitude.

He made the team as a walk-on. And he made the soccer team as a walk-on. Although he no longer plays soccer, he is turning a few heads on the baseball diamond.

As the starting rightfielder for the Minutemen, Zerner leads the team in hitting. After last weekend's series with Rutgers, Zerner was hitting .410 and leading the team in extra-base hits (15, including 10 doubles) and slugging percentage (.640). He also is among the Atlantic 10 leaders in these categories and has an on-base percentage of .531. Zerner has walked 27 times and is eight of 10 in stolen bases.

Defensively, he was very consistent, with only one error in the first 28 games.

"Zerner is a good hitter," said UMass manager Dick Bergquist. "He goes to the opposite field well and hits the ball hard. And he's learning to take the pitches that he doesn't feel comfortable with. He's a hitter that others should not overlook."

But Zerner is used to being overlooked. Not because of a lack of ability; just because he's not a loud personality.

He played baseball for three years at Deering High School in Portland, ME, and was captain of the state-championship team in his senior year. He was also named to the second-team All-League team his junior and senior years.

But still, no scouts got in touch with him. Looking "to play Division 1 baseball and get out of Maine," he narrowed his college choices down to Boston College or UMass before choosing the latter, he played soccer and jv baseball as a freshman.

"We questioned how good of a hitter he was going to be when he was a freshman," Bergquist said. "But he's really worked hard and he's got a good attitude. He's one of the good things that can happen in college baseball."

Last season, Zerner established himself as a starter and ended the season with a .349 average. This season, one of his personal goals is to improve on "as many of my stats as possible and possibly, as a pinnacle, to make the All-New England team".

"After the start (1-14) we had," Zerner said, "it was almost as if the players had to look out for themselves. The veterans were pressing and their performances went downhill."

"But it's been a total turnaround," he added. "We've won some games now (UMass is 14-17) and we have our confidence back."

UMass is led by Jay Zerner with a .410 batting average. Matt Sheran comes into the game with a 19 game hitting streak and Steve Allen leads the squad with seven homers. Jeff Cimini is the RBI leader with 28.

"This is one of the great rivalries," said Bergquist. "The loss earlier in the season has to be in the players' minds. We blew it and we know it. We'd really like to beat them."

Gorillas fall to 10th; playoff hopes high

UM in good position to move up in poll

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

As expected, Saturday's 8-7 overtime loss to Army caused the University of Massachusetts lacrosse team to fall in the weekly Division 1 poll.

The Gorillas, 8-2, fell from a tie for seventh to tenth. Johns Hopkins (8-1) led the poll with nine of ten first-place votes and 149 points. Army climbed from tenth to eighth.

However, the space between seventh-place C.W. Post (8-2) and UMass isn't great. Post has 80 points, Army has 76, Rutgers, the ninth-place team, has 72, and UMass has 64.

The Gorillas will face Rutgers on Saturday night in New Jersey, and a win should get them a playoff berth. C.W. Post played 14th-ranked Adelphi yesterday and the Army must still play at Post and New Hampshire before finishing up, so UMass still is in decent position to grab a berth.

"Beating Army would've almost clinched it for us, we would probably be in seventh by ourselves, but now we have some work to do," said UMass coach Dick Garber. "I'm still optimitsic, if we beat Rutgers, we're back in business."

Don't forget Dartmouth however. UMass must play in Hanover Wednesday against the Big Green. Dartmouth is 2-9 on the season, but has played well against some tough Ivy League competition. The Gorillas need an impressive win before heading to New Brunswick and the key game with Rutgers.

Rutgers lost to Syracuse 13-5 at home on Saturday, but the Orange clung to a slim 6-5 lead going into the final period before blowing the game open. In fact, Syracuse was shut out in the third period after holding a 6-3 halftime edge.

The Poll: 1. Johns Hopkins 8-1, 149 points; 2. Syracuse 11-2, 137 points; 3. Virginia 9-2, 129; 4. Maryland 7-2, 125; 5. North Carolina 8-3, 106; 6. Navy 8-3, 101; 7. C.W. Post 8-2, 80; 8. Army 6-4, 76; 9. Rutgers 9-3, 72; 10. UMass 8-2, 64; 11. Loyola 6-3, 49; 12. Delaware 7-5, 28; 13. Duke 11-4, 24; 14. Adelphi 5-3, 19; 14. Towson State 8-4, 19 (tie).

Gorilla Grumblings: In other national action over the weekend, Virginia took the ACC title with an 11-9 win at North Carolina. . .Hobart, the Division 3 powerhouse that upset Syracuse 16-13 last week, continued to rip Division 1 competition, downing Cornell 22-11. The Statesmen play Division 1 Hofstra next week and should roll through the Division 3 tourney with ease. . .Garber and administration officials began interviews for a full-time assistant coach yesterday. Current graduate assistant Guy Van Arsdale is an applicant. . .UMass' game at Syracuse on May 9 will be televised on NESN.

In the team scoring, junior attackman Tom Carmean has 33 goals and 16 assists for 49 points. Junior attackman Greg Cannella is second with 17-15-32. Senior midfielder Greg Fisk is at 16-11-27. Sophomore attackman Kelley Carr has 17-9-26 numbers.

In goal, freshman Sal LoCascio has a 6.4 goals-against average, among the lowest in the nation. His save percentage is .672, also one of the nation's best. . .UMass had its six-game winning streak snapped against Rutgers. . .the Gorillas have outscored opponents 116-70 this season. Delaware is 7-1 since losing to UMass, 16-6 back on March 29. . .the game-film showed that the illegal hit called on Carmean in the fourth period that took away a UMass man-up situation, was a terrible call as was the non-call when Seamus McGovern (who had a great day with 15 of 19 face-offs won) was whacked in the head after winning the opening face-off in overtime.

Baseball seeks revenge on UConn today

By MATT GERKE
Collegian Staff

As the University of Massachusetts baseball team goes into today's battle with a perennial rival, the University of Connecticut, (Lorden Field, 3 p.m.) the last game between these two teams has to be in the back of everyone's minds.

On April Fool's Day, at UConn, the Huskies played a cruel joke on the Minutemen, scoring six unearned runs in the bottom of the ninth to post a 10-9 victory. There was no laughter, though, as the loss dragged put UMass at 1-11 and continued the truly dismal start (1-14) the Minutemen were off to.

Since that time, UMass has won 13 of its last 16 and gained a tremendous amount of respectability. Although the playoffs are now officially out of the question for the 14-17 Minutemen, a .500 record is still within reach.

Rutgers posted a victory over UMass on Sunday (to take two-of-three in the series) and the Knights have now won the Atlantic 10 championship. UMass finishes it A-10 season at 4-7.

"We're out of the playoffs," said UMass manager Dick Bergquist. "But we're still going to win everything we can and shoot for a .500 record."

Bergquist will go with Jon Martin. The senior right-hander is 3-4 with an 8.38 earned run average.

"These two teams have a good relationship," UConn manager Andy Baylock said. "Dick is one of my best friends and the athletes know each other, also. We always play exciting games."

The big offensive man for the Huskies (14-19 overall, 8-7 in the Big East) is Jerry LaPenta, who is hitting .370 with 12 homers and 36 runs batted in.

A-10 softball title on line

UMass hosting URI

By ROGER CHAPMAN
Collegian Staff

With key wins over St. Joseph's University and Adelphi University safely tucked away, the University of Massachusetts softball team will be looking to wrap-up the Atlantic 10 regular season title, as the University of Rhode Island invades NOPE Field for a doubleheader with the Minutewomen.

UMass, 31-7 on the season and 6-2 in the A-10, guaranteed themselves of a conference tournament bid by sweeping St. Joe's on Saturday, but still needs a sweep of the Rams to claim the A-10 title outright. URI is tied with the Minutewomen for first place with a 6-2 mark and are ranked fourth in the bi-weekly NCAA Northeast poll with a 26-19-1 overall record.

UMass and URI were scheduled to play in a doubleheader at Kingston on April 8, but were rained out. The first game from each twinbill would have counted toward the conference standings, but because of the rainout at URI, both of today's games will count instead.

The Minutewomen split a doubleheader with URI last season, winning game one, 1-0 on a Lynn Stockley shutout, and dropping the nightcap, 7-1.

The Rams are led by freshman third baseman Kim Menkavitch, who is hitting at a .274 clip. Menkavitch also leads the team in hits (34) and runs scored (17, tied with two others).

URI is also paced by senior co-captain Kathy Bade and sophomore pitcher Chris Ashburn. Bade is 15-8 on the year with an earned run average of 1.36. She has struck out 67 while walking 14 and has 11 shutouts to her credit, including a 2-0 no-hitter against Temple last week.

Ashburn has started 24 games this season and sports an 11-11 record and a 1.34 ERA. She has eight shutouts and also tossed a no-hitter in a 8-0 decision over Holy Cross. Ashburn has registered 68 K's and has issued 38 free passes.

If the Minutewomen sweep, they will also be the number one seed in the A-10 tournament that starts on Thursday, in addition to being regula- season champs. A split would result in a three-way tie for first between UMass, URI, and Rutgers, forcing a seeding of the three teams.

If UMass is swept by URI, the Rams claim the regular season title and will be seeded first, thus placing the Minutewomen in a three-way tie for second with Rutgers and Temple. Again, this would force a seeding of the last three teams in the four-team tourney.

Quite simply, a sweep would place the destiny of the Minutewomen in their own hands.

"It really doesn't matter where we end up in the seedings, but we want to sweep URI anyway," head coach Elaine Sortino said. "We know they are going to be tough, but we also know what we have to do."

Pop Flies: The 31 wins are the most for a Sortino-coached UMass team. The Minutewomen were 28-10 in 1983. . .With 116 strikeouts this season, senior pitcher Lynn Stockley needs three K's to break her own single-season strikeout record of 118. . .Today's twinbill will serve as the last two home appearances for seniors Stockley, Beth Talbott, Cathy Reed, and Sally Maher.

Gazelles' season over

The University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team, at one time ranked fifth in the nation this season, ended its season on a down note over the weekend, losing two games to extend its losing streak to four games.

The Gazelles finish up at 6-4 with a lot of questions. After a 6-0 start, UMass lost to defending national champion New Hampshire, followed by Dartmouth and then Temple and Rutgers over the weekend.

Temple handed UMass a 14-6 beating, the Gazelles' worst beating of the year. Rutgers then took a close 12-11 decision.

UMass had entered the weekend hoping to gain an ECAC playoff berth and possibly work its way into the NCAA playoff picture, but had those hopes dashed with the two losses.

The team's coaching staff, apparently seeking to keep the losses a secret, elected not to call area media (as is the custom when a UMass team is on the road) and the results were not available until yesterday.

UMass returns the bulk of their players, meaning next season's chances appear to be good. All-American Lisa Griswold, the team's leading scorer, is among those coming back along with the goaltenders and much of the defense.

OPEIU, MTA keep election sparks flying

By CRAIG SANDLER
Collegian Staff

As about 1,100 University of Massachusetts professional employees prepared to choose tomorrow between two competing unions, or no union at all, a UMass-Boston administrator accused one of the unions of falsely using his name on state documents.

Alan Clarke, executive director of special educational support services at the Boston campus, said the Office and Professional Employees International Union, an AFL/CIO affiliate, listed him as an officer of its proposed UMass local "without my knowledge or consent." He added that he may sue the union.

Organizers for the rival group, the Union of Professional Employees of the Massachusetts Teachers Association, said Clarke had earlier made it clear he wanted to be a part of their union and was doing an about-face out of professional disgruntlement.

An OPEIU organizer called UPE/MTA's charges "slick union-busting and distortion."

Meanwhile, a full-page advertisement in the Collegian yesterday, paid for by the OPEIU, accused UPE/MTA of using "distortion tactics" in what OPEIU said was a "desperate effort to energize MTA's campaign."

UPE/MTA organizers say their union's strength is that it already represents faculty, library and clerical workers at UMass-Amherst. OPEIU is an affiliate of the AFL-CIO, and its leaders say their legislative resources are superior to MTA's.

UPE/MTA charged in a letter sent earlier this month to the steering committee of the OPEIU that OPEIU was misrepresenting the size and makeup of its membership and the amount it would charge for dues.

The charges are documented in a packet of material prepared by UPE/MTA and supplied anonymously to the Collegian.

While OPEIU literature says the group "represents 3,500 professionals in the state trial court system and the Metropolitan Boston Transit Authority," documents filed by OPEIU with the state Labor Relations Commission put the number at 2,747 and describe the workers represented as "clerical."

Also included in the packet is a letter to the labor commission from Clarke, who was listed in a report filed with the labor commission by OPEIU as the recording secretary of the union's proposed UMass local.

Clarke said yesterday that while he initially supported OPEIU's drive to organize professionals, "I seriously question any union that would use my name and misrepresent me on a legal document."

The documents also indicate that while OPEIU literature promises dues of $10 a month, the union reported to the state that it would charge $10.50.

The head of OPEIU's drive, John Connolly, yesterday called the charges "some very slick union-busting and distortion" and suggested Clarke had changed his mind about his OPEIU affiliation because the bargaining unit created

What is at stake

Tomorrow's professional employees union election will determine whether the last non-unionized group of workers at UMass-Amherst will join a union.

The 866 workers, to be joined by about 300 of their Boston campus peers, are a diverse lot. They include research engineers, psychological counselors and 22 other job titles.

They will be choosing between an AFL/CIO affiliate, the Office and Professional Employees International Union, and the Union of Professional Employees of the Massachusetts Teacher's Association. They could also vote not to unionize.

In 1978 and 1982, MTA tried to organize UMass professionals, but both times they voted the union down. OPEIU is a new player that has been quietly campaigning since last April. MTA joined this campaign late, qualifying for the ballot in September.

Issues in the campaign have included the Olney plan, adopted by the administration last summer, which proposed changes in job classifications and wage schedules; and the desirability itself of joining the unions.

Compromise reached on concerts

By PATRICK JOHNSON
Collegian Staff

Southwest Week started on schedule today after the Southwest Area Government and two area coordinators reached a compromise, allowing bands to perform at the pyramids.

Yesterday's and today's performances on the pyramids in front of Washington Tower were originally cancelled Monday night by two area coordinators, Russell Keck, from Kennedy Tower, and Vicki Lindsay from Washington.

An estimated 300 people gathered around the pyramids yesterday afternoon for the first show as four bands performed. Bands are scheduled at the pyramids today through Friday.

The shows were rescheduled after Scott Protentis, a member of SWAG, met with Joseph Zannini and Charles Durant of Housing Services, and then with Lindsay and Keck, which brought about the agreement, Bill Collins, SWAG president said.

Keck and Lindsay, who were in meetings yesterday afternoon and unavailable for comment, informed Collins, in a memo dated April 16, that the shows "would be unduly disruptive to the communities in the adjoining residence halls" and "unacceptable to us."

The memo also expressed concern about "the adequacy of health and safety planning," clean-up procedures and enforcement of the alcohol policy by SWAG volunteers.

Members of SWAG refused to sign a statement which would give the "ultimate personal and financial responsibility [to] the sponsoring organization and its officers."

Protentis said SWAG agreed "to provide student security forces, and to discourage people from bringing large amounts of alcohol ... but we did not sign the personal liability [form] for damages."

Collins said Keck and Lindsay "overstepped their authority" by trying to place restraints on the events.

"This year, Keck and Lindsay are new Southwest area coordinators. They were not here last year. On April 16, they stated they were in charge of the event. There is nothing in their job descriptions which would allow them to do this. All it says [in their job descriptions] is that they shall be supportive of the area governments," Collins said.

He provided job descriptions for Keck's and Lindsay's positions.

Collins said the compromise was reached because members of SWAG were prepared to organize a demonstration on the pyramids if the concert remained cancelled.

"While [Keck and Lindsay] felt the bands would be disruptive, it would be many times more disruptive if there were no show," Collins said.

Baseball a sideline for two professors

Jerome Mileur

By CAROL TANNENBAUM
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts professor Jerome Mileur has a better excuse than most people for being distracted by baseball in the spring.

Mileur, who teaches political science, and George Como, who works in the computing center in the Whitmore Administration Building, are principal owners of the Pittburgh Pirates' AA minor league team, New Hampshire's Nashua Pirates.

In 1981, Mileur said, Como heard that the team, then playing in Holyoke, was for sale. The two of them and another partner submitted a bid, offering $85,000.

"We were surprised, to put it mildly, that we won," Mileur said. "I think we each secretly wished one of the other two would say, 'let's not do it.' " He added that now, he is glad he went ahead with the purchase.

"Owning a minor league team is a lot like owning a McDonald's franchise," Mileur said, because the owners have little say over the managers and players the Pittsburgh team assigns. "We can beg a lot, tease a lot, and cajole, but that's about it."

The team has a working agreement with the major league Pirates, who supply bats and baseballs while Mileur and his partners pay for transportation and hotels.

STRICKEN PLANT – The February issues of Soviet Life magazine showed this view of the machinery room at the Chernobyl Nuclear Power Plant.

US sources say reactor still threatens region

WASHINGTON (AP) - US intelligence sources reported that the Chernobyl nuclear reactor complex in the Soviet Ukraine which experienced a meltdown Saturday, was still billowing smoke yesterday and threatened another reactor at the same site.

Arms control administrator Kenneth Adelman, meanwhile, told Congress that Soviet claims of only two deaths were "frankly preposterous" and called the incident "the most catastrophic nuclear disaster in history."

He said temperatures reached as high as 4,000 degrees Centigrade, or 7,232 degrees Fahrenheit at the graphite-cooled reactor and added, "The graphite is burning and will continue to burn for a good number of days."

A ranking administration official, speaking on condition of anonymity, told the Associated Press that officials evaluating recent intelligence "don't believe there was a nuclear explosion per se," at Chernobyl. "But there was clearly a meltdown."

As of early yesterday morning EDT, "smoke was still billowing from the site. The roof had been blown off and large portions of the walls of the reactor building had caved in," the source said. "And it seemed at the time that another nuclear unit just above it might still be in some danger."

The source said the US government was convinced there had been a huge release of radiation, but that the most serious radioactive fallout on the ground occurred within an area stretching out about 10 miles out from the plant.

This official also said the intelligence analysts were now convinced the accident occurred sometime Saturday.

Reports reaching the State Department said Soviet authorities were hampered in their efforts to put out the fire because of the intense heat. They were also concerned that dousing the fire could create more radioactivity than simply letting the reactor burn, according to a source who insisted on anonymity.

Adelman said those in the greatest risk are apparently the inhabitants of a village of 2,000 persons built to house workers at the nuclear facility and their families.

The Soviet reactor was not protected by the type of steel and concrete containment building required at American commercial reactors, authorities said.

N.H. officials: Soviet nuclear safety attitude is 'cavalier'

SEABROOK, N.H. (AP) - Nuclear industry representatives and New Hampshire's governor yesterday blamed a cavalier attitude toward safety for the Soviet nuclear plant accident.

Both insisted that safety features would make such an accident impossible at the nearly completed Seabrook nuclear power plant, and plant officials said they doubt the Soviet accident will delay the New Hampshire project's licensing.

But Seabrook critics said the accident demonstrates the folly of letting Seabrook operate. They scheduled at news conference for Wednesday outside the plant to announce plans for demonstrations intended to prevent Seabrook from operating.

"Public Service Company of New Hampshire and Gov. John Sununu should take the Chernobyl accident as a clear warning of the consequences to our lives and homes by playing Russian roulette with nuclear power," said Paul Gunter of the Clamshell Alliance. The alliance made Seabrook, long delayed and 10 times over budget, a focus for the nation's anti-nuclear movement during the 1970s.

Construction moratorium exceptions considered

By DANIEL MILLER
Collegian Staff

The Amherst Selectboard Monday agreed to consider exceptions to a moratorium on construction in Amherst which was conceived by the town Board of Health to allow time to study water supply problems.

The board decided to:

•Propose the moratorium April 17 as a zoning bylaw, for discussion at a special session of Amherst Town Meeting May 5.

•Recommend that the Amherst Planning Board draft the proposed bylaw with exceptions for accessory structures such as garages and fences; repairs to existing structures; renovations which do not add dwelling units; replacing septic tanks; public utility structures; and all building permits issued prior to 5 p.m. April 17.

•Exempt from the moratorium buildable lots given final approval by the town before April 17. Parts of Amherst Housing Authority and Amherst Redevelopment Authority projects in the planning phase should also be exempted, the board agreed.

The moratorium was first considered in response to studies which indicate that the Lawrence Swamp aquifer and the Atkins reservoir, both in Amherst, may be subject to contamination if development of housing units is not slowed.

Barry Del Castilho, the town manager, cited the water quality studies in a memo dated April 15. He said septic tank leaks "dumps, spills, leaks or surface applications of hazardous materials" might penetrate the "highly permeable sandy soils" over the aquifer, a water-bearing zone, if the area is developed.

The proportion of coliform bacteria in the Atkins reservoir is increasing, which has led to two clean-water law violations, Del Castilho wrote. Chlorination, which stifles the spread of bacteria, leads to formation of trihalomethanes, or THM, a carcinogen. An alternate method of killing bacteria, adding ammonia and chlorine to the water, forms less THM but is relatively untested and only a short-term solution, the memo said.

Del Castilho urged that a new water treatment plant be built in town. "A Town Meeting appropriation and a successful state grant application are required, and at least two or three years will pass before the plant is in operation," his memo stated.

The moratorium was originally planned to last two years, but Monday night the Selectboard recommended a June 30, 1987, cut-off date which could be extended at that time.

However, the board's decision would limit the Amherst Housing Authority project to 20 units. Last Friday the authority had told Del Castilho it plans to build about 68 subsidized units.

Kenneth Mosakowski, housing authority board chairman, said, "It would be delinquent of the town of Amherst if it did not exempt these low-income units."

Events focus on disabled

In an attempt to inform students about the disabled and support disabled people, a series of events sponsored by Abilities Unlimited will take place today at the University of Massachusetts.

"We hope to bring a hidden awareness to issues concerning the disabled people on campus and the community," said Lisa Riskin, president of the organization. "Abilities Unlimited is open to disabled and non-disabled people."

An information table will be set up outside the Student Union Building from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. where free buttons will be given away. The UMass transit authority will demonstrate the University's accessible transportation every half hour. Also, the Architecture Barriers Board will ask students to identify the least accessible places on campus for disabled people.

There are two workshops being offered in the Campus Center, room 804. "Disabled Women, a Feminist Perspective" from 10:30 a.m. until noon, and "Beyond Iron Side, Beyond Stereotypes" from 1:30 p.m. until 3 p.m.

A panel discussion titled "Disability Movement, Past, Present and Future" will be held at 7 p.m. tonight, also in room 804. The three panelists are Chris Palanes, from the State Office of Handicapped Affairs, Susan Patch, from the Mass Commission for the Blind and Christen Johnson, a UMass undergraduate and Miss Deaf Massachusetts. A reception will follow the panel discussion.

Making sense of the humanities

By JOE SHARTRAND
Collegian Staff

The difficulties in making sense of the knowledge in history, literature, philosophy, psychology and literary theory were addressed last night in a lecture by a University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee professor.

Ihab Hassan, Vilas Research Professor of English and Comparative Literature, spoke in Bartlett Hall before 20 people on the subject of "The Crisis of Modern Discourse."

"Literature is an inquiry into what it means to be human and the trials of knowledge," Hassan said. "There is a crisis of sense in our age. Our culture is all in pieces."

Hassan explained how people try to understand the world through biology, psychology, history, philosophy, literary theory and pragmatism.

Through psychoanalysis human beings must continually attempt to make sense of reality, he said. Hassan quoted Freud as saying that knowledge is a kind of love. Psychoanalysis is mankind's urgent need to continually make sense of reality, he said.

"Human beings began to make sense on their own when God lost his communal sense," he said. He added that in history, when Nietzche brought forth his theories, there was a whole change in how people made sense. This was the beginning of the death of God and the advent of nihilism, Hassan explained.

"With the beginning of nihilism, God, king, reason, and man had come and gone as the authority on making sense of life," he said. "Ultimately, man finds nothing but what he himself has put in them."

Nietzche explodes all ideas of truth and said that nothing has intrinsic sense but a strong sense must be made of everything, he said.

FYI

Elise Boulding, a professor at Dartmouth College, will speak on "The New International Security Order" at 8 p.m. tonight in the Campus Center. The lecture is sponsored by the Five College Program in Peace and World Security Studies.

A panel discussion about political activists who have been subpoenaed to testify in court will be held at 7:30 p.m. tonight in room 168 of the Campus Center. Speakers will be three people who are or have been supoenaed to testify in court – Cameron Bishop, Dorie Clay, Barry Wilson – and Ron Kuby, an attorney with the Center for Constitutional Rights in New York. The discussion is sponsored by UMass Legal Services and the Pioneer Valley chapter of the National Lawyers Guild.

$7,340 in equipment missing

Mechanical engineering equipment valued at $7,340 was reported stolen at 11 a.m. Monday from the first floor of Gunness Engineering Building, University of Massachusetts police said.

In other police reports:

•A gold bracelet, a portable cassette player and other items valued at about $275 were reported stolen at 5 p.m. Monday from a room on the the second floor of Van Meter House, police said.

•A car driven by a 22-year-old South Hadley man received $1,000 in damages at 2:28 p.m. Monday when he was trying to drive into the Shumway Paint parking lot on College Street and was hit by a car driven by a 78-year-old Amherst man who was backing up in the lot, Amherst police said.

•A 23-year-old Winchester woman was cited for failing to use care in stopping after she drove into the rear of a car driven by a 31-year-old Belchertown woman she was following, at 4:47 p.m. Monday on West Street. Both cars received about $500 in damages, police said.

Connolly also said the number and type of workers represented by OPEIU were not shown on state documents because of shortcomings in the forms and the vagueness of state job classification descriptions. He admitted that three-fifths of OPEIU's membership is clerical, but said hundreds of OPEIU professionals are not reported to the state because they work in the private sector.

★ baseball

Professional baseball in North America includes the majors, followed by AAA, AA and A teams. The Nashua Pirates are in the Eastern League, one of three AA leagues in the US.

Mileur said the team, which operates on $4,000 to $5,000 annually, lost money for the partnership last year, but there are still many shareholders throughout the University, including administrators and other professors.

He said most of the time he and his partners spend with the team is at season's end, when they plan the team's time off.

The team attracts about 2,000 fans per year and attendance increases as the weather get warmer, Mileur said.

Owning the team has its moments of frustration, he said, but "on the balance, it's been a good time."

Poll finds 82% are pro-choice

BOSTON (AP) - While the Massachusetts Legislature appears ready to approve a constitutional amendment that would allow lawmakers to limit abortions, a coalition of pro-choice groups said yesterday that its statewide poll showed most Bay State voters oppose any new restrictions.

The survey of 400 state residents, conducted in February, showed 82 percent of those questioned felt state government should "stay out" of the decision of whether to allow or prohibit abortion, according to Nicki Nicholas Gamble, chairwoman of the Coalition for Choice.

Ms. Gamble, executive director of the Planned Parenthood League, and other pro-choice leaders conceded the Legislature was likely to endorse the amendment, as it did in 1984, when the House and Senate meet as a constitutional convention today.

But they said they were confident the state's voters would defeat the proposal in November.

Abortion foes questioned the validity of the survey and said their opponents shouldn't mind putting the question before the voters if they were sure it would be rejected.

The proposed amendment would remove any restriction in the state constitution that limits the Legislature in regulating abortions. A US Supreme Court decision upholding a woman's right to abortion would take precedence over any state law, but the Legislature could move to ban the use of Medicaid funds to pay for the procedure for poor women.

Last about Libya

(Editor's note: We received a great many letters about the U.S. raid on Libya that we were unable to print. The following paragraphs are culled from some of them)

Libya was bombed because they were believed to have sponsored terrorism in Europe. President Reagan wanted to punish Libya for their state supported terrorism. At the same time, he is asking Congress for $100 million in aid to the contras in Nicaragua. The contras are terrorists. They terrorize the Nicaraguan people. Mr. Reagan supports these terrorists, and is therefore guilty of the same state supported terrorism for which he condemns Libya.

Today Khadafy kills indiscriminately with terrorist bombs, tomorrow he will kill with his missiles, unless he is deterred now. You and your generation will pay the price if we fail. Libya is the testing zone for terrorism.

You should thank God for President Reagan, for because of his action now you are less likely to be drafted into the service or be killed or maimed from an unexpected blast.

Pyramid politics

Something absurd has gone on in the Southwest Residential Area, where this week two low-level Housing Services officials took it upon themselves to cancel some of the "Southwest Rocks the Pyramids" events scheduled for yesterday through Friday.

Russell Keck and Vicki Lindsay, area coordinators from Kennedy and Washington towers, Monday night told the Southwest Area Government that since it failed to fill out forms detailing security and cleanup plans, today's and tomorrow's shows in front of Washington could not take place.

Fortunately, Keck and Lindsay met with vocal student opposition and were overruled by higher administrators who met with SWAG officers yesterday, bringing to an end their Southwest Week power grab.

The two coordinators, who are said to be new to Southwest — they could not be reached for comment — had appointed themselves two weeks ago as guardians of the residence halls against concerts they felt "would be unduly disruptive." In a memo to SWAG president Bill Collins, they wrote: "Four straight days of concerts at the pyramids would not equitably impact our residents and staff; the idea is therefore unacceptable to us."

The memo disregarded the popularity of the shows, which feature UMass rock bands. Some 300 students attended yesterday's event. In the past the concerts' main problem has been an abundance of beer-related rubbish — hardly a reason to cancel them. Collins erred in neglecting the paperwork characteristic of the Bureaucratic Republic of UMass, but Housing Services director Joseph Zannini evidently did not consider this a crime.

The concerts are on, but one hopes that all administrators, from Keck and Lindsay on up, recognize that rowdy but controlled events should not be quashed.

To leer or not to leer

William Spain

leer, v. To look askance or obliquely; to look with a suggestive expression, as of hatred, contempt, lust, etc.;to cast a sidelong lustful or malign look.

leer, n. A gaze askance; a look or cast of the eye conveying a sly, sinister, or immodest suggestion.

To leer or not to leer, that is the question I find myself struggling with on these wonderfully warm spring days. Acres of flesh, trapped inside winter garb for months, are being exposed to bright sunshine, fresh air, and my admiring gaze.

I suffer from the temptation to cut my classes and blow off my responsibilities for the pleasure of sitting by the Pond to watch the procession of beautiful young women walk past. It is a pasttime that I have enjoyed over the last few years and one, I confess, I have been indulging in recently.

In my carefree days as an underclassman, this is something I would do with no second thoughts. After all, what is more normal for an 18-year-old male than visually devouring every female body that happens to pass by? Ah, those were the days. No guilt feelings, no questioning whether it was right or wrong — just the consideration of whether it was fun. It was.

Alas, that was before I paid any attention to the painfully aware folk so prevalent on our beloved campus. They have by no means won me over, nor have they completely destroyed my fun. However, I do occasionally give them the credit of thinking about the legion of "isms" so stridently decried in this and other area publications.

Is leering in itself a sexist act or does it have to be accompanied by crude or degrading thoughts and words? The definition of the word is rather disturbing All that emphasis on hatred, contempt, slyness, etc. gives me pause. My leers are not driven by these things. Rather, I concentrate on the lustful and suggestive aspects.

Does giving in to an urge to leer show a lack of respect for women in general? This worries me a bit. If it is, I am sacrificing many of my principles and rejecting the way I was raised. The mild gratification I get from the sight of a "well-turned leg" would hardly be worth it.

How do the objects of my glances feel about this? Do they consider it harassment or objectification? I hope not. That would take a great deal of the enjoyment out of it.

Is there a line between friendly appreciation and obnoxiousness in this case? If so, where is it? Because I like to think of it as the former, does that translate into a mutual reality? I have never made any vulgar verbal or physical advances but is it alright to take in the scenery?

I am left with still more questions. If anyone out there can help me find some answers, you can find me quietly drooling under the willow tree by the Pond.

Whose side now?

Jeffry Bartash

Did you know our wonderful University is a microcosm of the world at large? It's true. We too have a nice, hostile political climate in which accusations fly and demonstrations abound. Why, we also have utter chaos and brutishness.

In recent years, many UMass students have shown their insensibility and childness during controversial University events. If it wasn't hanging effigees at anti-gay rallies, it was heckling at Geraldine Ferraro's presidential campaign speech. If it wasn't driving the CIA off campus, it was disrupting speeches by visiting contra leaders.

The easiest way to become an irrational person, and become a popular politician some day, is to master the art of calling opponents leftists, rightists, conservatives, liberals, fascists, communists, or madmen; anything you think you're not.

Fortunately, our University is full of aspiring politicians and they help us to achieve insanity.

However, there are some of us who do not belong in an asylum. We are reasonable and negotiable. We detest labels, political labels. In our opinion, persons who label others are idiots incapable of rationally defending their political positions that have been attacked. If a person described as a "liberal" votes against aid to rebels fighting a communist government, supporters of the aid will call the liberal a "communist" and say he's dangerous to our country. The supporters,of course, are called "conservatives." The "liberals"counteract with name-calling of their own and lunacy prevails.

We are neither "conservatives" nor "liberals."

My dictionary (Webster's New World) defines the Right as a conservative or reactionary party. Conservative is defined as tending to preserve established institutions and being opposed to change. Now if there's one thing our country needs, it's change. We have too many institutions (political, economic, social) that are rotten and exploitive and preserving the status quo will eventually cause the growth of our country to stagnate.

My dictionary defines the Left as a radical or liberal party. Liberal is defined as favoring reform or progress. Our country needs change in some, but not all, institutions. We must remember that every country is built on a conservative foundation because its peoples need basic bonds to preserve the society. Major disruptions could destroy the society. So when our country proceeds with change, the change should be slow. Recent years have been tough on Democrats because they tried to force too many quick changes. Opposition was strong and our country suffered.

We are neither "leftists" nor "rightists."

The domestic birds of peace and war have been flapping their wings over the recent bombing of Libya by the United States. War is stupid. Yet war occurs because of different religious, economic and political forces present in all countries; each country wants to push its own forces on others.So countries have a right to defend themselves, such as the US did by attacking Libya, but countries do not have the right to force their ways on others, such as the US is trying to do to Nicaraqua.

We are neither "doves" nor "hawks."

The theory of natural law, developed by philosophers such as John Locke and others, influenced the founding fathers who wrote our Constitution. The phrase "All men have certain unalienable rights..." is a basis of the theory, regardless whether it be religious, political or economic rights. We believe a country has not the right to force its own lifestyle on others countries; and we believe a people has not the right to force its own lifestyle on other peoples.

We are independent thinkers.

We believe in right or wrong.

INTERVIEW

Filmmaker creates a horror-lovestory

By DON LIPPER
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON— Andrew Silver, the award winning film director, will attend the western Massachusetts premiere of his film Return tonight at the Pleasant St. Theater.

Return premiered at Filmex in Los Angles to positive reviews. It has won a slew of awards at film festivals all over the world including: Best Actor in Spain, Best Film in Philadelphia, Best Use of Music in Belgium, The Gold Award in the Virgin Islands and a Silver Award in Houston.

Portions of Return were filmed using area locations such as the Quabbin reservoir. Silver scouted all over New England to find a suitable location to set his film. "I came out here a lot because I lived in Boston. And I would look and look. And finally I came to look at the Quabbin I knew it when I saw it that it was exactly right. At that was the end of it." said Silver.

Many directors would have been hesitant to shoot a film completely on locations because of the many problems that can arise from such an uncontrolled environment. Silver said that location shooting was part of the film's appeal. "For me the fun of it is the surprise and the dealing with the moment. I wouldn't want to shoot on a soundstage because it's not interactive enough. I like more of an interplay between the weather and you. It's more alive." Silver said.

Silver describes Return as a love story and a paranormal mystery. He adapted it from the 1973 novel by Donald Harington, Some Other Place, The Right Place. "When I read Some Other Place, The Right Place I knew it was exactly what I was looking for in a genre, which was a love story of the paranormal. Many first independent films are horror films and I wanted to do the opposite of a horror film. A horror film is at night, so we did it in the day. A horror film is in one place, so we did it on the road. A horror film is one person alone all the time, worrying about what's coming around the corner, here the characters are very seldom alone. The content also, is the opposite of a horror film. Because a horror film is a story of the paranormal based on fear. The opposite of fear is love, so this is a story of the paranormal based on love."

Remarkably, Silver said that his first feature film only took 25 days to shoot and 5 months to edit. "We could always have spent more," said Silver, "but it wasn't necessary. It took exactly the right amount of time."

Silver attributes the speed and ease of production of his first feature to his graduate work in organizational psychology.

"Most of that extra month is spent in indecision or bad process. There's no reason for a film to take that long. But if you think about how much indecision there is, how much bickering, how much ego, how much pulling in opposite directions. If you cancel all that out and have great process, everything goes quickly. We had no fights, no conflicts that weren't creative...you have to have some conflict to work. Part of directing is your craft, the camera and the cast and so on, part of it is nurturing the people around you. Part of it is the leadership of the system and taking care of the problems when they're very small before they blow up. And then everything works beautifully." Silver said.

MOVIE REVIEW

By DON LIPPER
Collegian Staff

Return (★★★★)
Starring Karlene Crockett, John Walcutt, Lisa Richards, Frederic Forrest and Anne Lloyd Francis
Written and Directed by Andrew Silver

Return, now playing at the Pleasant St. Theater is a wonderful love story/ murder mystery/ supernatural thriller by Andrew Silver.

The film shows the quest of a young woman named Diana (beautifully played by Karlene Crockett) and a confused young man named Day (John Walcutt) who, under hypnosis, assumes the personality of her long dead grandfather. The couple journey across the country to discover why the grandfather is possessing Day. As the couple soon begin to suspect that the grandfather was murdered, their search becomes pursuit.

As contrived as this plot may sound, you don't really notice it. The film has many excellent performances. John Walcutt plays the earthy psychic with an innocence and vulnerability that make him instantly endearing. He effortlessly creates several characters, the confused psychic and under hypnosis, the grandfather at different stages of life. Karlene Crockett gives a performance with sensitivity and depth. Her caring and concerned eyes communicate more than any scripted dialogue. Frederic Forrest plays Diana's oppressive father with an intense and explosive quality that hails back to his performance of Chef in Apocalypse Now.

Return's cinematography captures the natural slendor of New England (the Quabbin Reservoir has a cameo appearance) and the Arkansas mountains. The eerie synthesizer music by Ragnar Grippe (Royal Opera and Ballet) and Michael Shrieve (Santana) pervades the film with character and suspense.

WOMEN IN PRINT

Lesbian-feminist love-struggle novel

On Strike Against God
Joanna Russ
The Crossing Press Feminist Series, 107 pp. $6.95

By BECKY LOCKWOOD
Collegian Correspondent

Joanna Russ, author of On Strike Against God, is a woman who is proud of her identity. She is a spirited woman who is able to criticize the partiarchal system that entraps her with a refreshing sense of humor and sarcasm.

Her novel is identified on the cover as a "Lesbian Love Story," and is a description of the main character Esther's process of "coming out." Esther is despondent of male company and submissive women. She seeks comfort from her best friend, Jeanne, and eventually falls in love with her. After the initial admission of love, both women go through periods of denial, and part.

Despite lost friends and time, Esther and Jeanne again become lovers and with each other's support, openly challenge their male-dominiated world. On Strike Against God is a funny and perceptive novel. It is enjoyable reading even though the chronology of her story is difficult to follow at times. The novel is written in a first person stream-of-consciousness style that has both advantages and disadvantages.

In terms of movement, this is not a novel for action-oriented readers. Most of the "action" takes place in Esther's head. This is a novel of changing ideas and philosophy and these changes often do not involve the physical environment or location of the characters. What is important in On Strike Against God are the conversations in which Esther and her lover learn to empower themselves in a world where they are not, as women, supposed to have any power.

In some ways, Esther is a perfect feminist; she always has an answer; always defends her views (even before multitudes of sex-starved chauvinists); always has a literary quote or metaphor that perfectly illustrates her point. Because she is so strong and "politically correct" however, her arguments sometimes lack the sincerity and spontaneity that makes a character seem real. On Strike Against God gives the reader insight into a different perspective. Esther and Jeanne's funny and warped methods of attacking patriarchy are worthwhile reading and may even give someone a few good ideas for their own struggle.

ARTS

The Asian American Dance Theatre and The Royal Cambodian Ballet performed Sunday, April 27 at Buckley Recital Hall at Amherst College. Kuang-uyu Fong performed with the Asian American Dance Theatre, which featured dance styles from China, India, Japan, Korea, Indonesia, Phillipines, and the Pacific Islands.

The Now's the Time arts festival is making a final call for artistic exhibitors, according to event organizer Larry Berger, who says that the program should go off quite well.

"Everything's strong, but we need more artists to display their work," said the music major with a concentration in arts administration.

"I encourage interested artists to contact me as soon as possible at 256-1602, in order to reserve space," he said.

The event will take place in and around the Student Union Building on Friday, May 9.

"UMass was really hitting today," Baylock said. "They looked good offensively."

Martin also shined in the second half of the game, holding the Huskies hitless over the final four innings.

"Martin was very strong," Bergquist said. "He didn't start as well as he could have, but we made the right guess to stick with him. He pitched really well over the last four innings."

Flint's homer in the eighth made it 9-4 and a Sheran's groundout in the ninth scored Rob Holiday for the final run.

"We really hit the ball today," Bergquist said. "Cimini's homer was a good one, but Flint's and Sheran's were tremendous. This was a good win. We have one of the better rivalries in New England, though. The Universities and even the teams are alike."

This afternoon in New Hampshire, Dick Garber will take his University of Massachusetts lacrosse team out for a test drive against Dartmouth College, looking to make sure all the cylinders are clicking before the Gorillas' run for the playoffs.

The Big Green, at 2-10 this season, isn't expected to throw much of a scare into the 10th-ranked Gorillas. UMass will win, but the Gorillas need an decisive win to impress the pollsters before facing ninth-ranked Rutgers on Saturday night in New Jersey.

"I'm not going to say we have to go out and bomb them, I would be happy with a good showing by the team and let the score end up at whatever it ends up at," said Garber. "I'm not going to run it up on a team, but I'm not going to tell the younger players not to score when they're in the game either,"

After Saturday's 8-7 overtime loss to Army at Boyden, UMass will be looking to regain the form that saw them win six straight prior to playing the Cadets. A win will also set-up Friday's match with Rutgers. The winner of that game will, in all probability, wrap-up an NCAA playoff berth.

Dartmouth has had a good tradition, but the Green have struggled this season against a tough schedule. Dartmouth gave seventh-ranked C.W. Post a battle before losing, 14-10. They have also dropped games against Brown (15-6), Cornell (17-5) and Yale (19-6), all UMass opponents this season. The worst loss came to Division 3 Williams College. The Green did beat Boston College, 11-9 in a battle of lacrosse have-nots. UMass, you will remember, was a 17-2 winner over the Eagles.

Last year, Dartmouth hung tough against UMass. Trailing only 3-2 after one quarter and 9-5 at halftime, the Green eventually folded like a cheap tent and lost, 17-11.

This season, only two players are any type of scoring threat for Dartmouth. Sophomore attackman Rob Cote has scored 17 goals and dished out 23 assists for 40 points. Senior attackman John Van Slyke is at 25-12-37.

The Green suffers on defense, allowing opposing goals in bunches. Goalie Rob Hollister has allowed 12.6 goals-per-game with a save percentage of .543. This, against the mostly slow-down tyepe of lacrosse the Ivy League plays. Against the run-and-gun attack of UMass, the results have the potential to be frightening.

UMass' strength, it's attackman, should feast on the Dartmouth defense and Hollister. Junior All-American Tom Carmean has played well all season (33-16-49) and could pad his stats today. Junior Greg Cannella (17-15-32) and sophomore Kelley Carr (17-9-26) have had good overall seasons, but have struggled as of late. They will be looking to regain their scoring touch and some confidence against Dartmouth. Senior midfielder Greg Fisk (16-11-27) will be looking to do some of that as well.

"The offense hasn't played poorly," said Garber. "They know they can play better, especially in pressure situations. I want to see better work on our transition game. The fast break is our bread and butter and we haven't worked it as well as I'd like. Against Rutgers and Syracuse (May 9), we'll need everything working and Dartmouth will give us a chance to fine tune our game a little but."

Garber said the team isn't going to overlook Dartmouth. "Just the opposite," said the veteran coach. "After losing to Army, we're pretty hungry. We realize what's ahead of us, and we want to start this streak off on a good note. Don't worry about us being flat, this team's is ready to play."

Softball takes Atlantic 10 title

Minutewomen sweep URI

Atlantic 10 champions. No questions asked.

The 19th-ranked University of Massachusetts softball team claimed its third A-10 regular season title in four years as the Minutewomen swept the University of Rhode Island at Totman (NOPE) field yesterday, 8-0 in the opener, and 2-1 in the nightcap. The wins raise the Minutewomen's overall record to 33-7 and 8-2 in the conference.

As a result, UMass will be the top seed in the A-10 tournament, which gets underway on Thursday at Rutgers University. URI fell to 26-21-1 on the season and 6-4 in the conference.

Yesterday's twinbill represented the final home appearances for seniors Beth Talbott, Cathy Reed, Sally Maher, and Lynn Stockley, and the Minutewomen made sure they went out with a bang. Talbott went three-for-four with two doubles, three runs batted in, and two runs scored in game one. Mahar was one-for-three in game one with one RBI.

The star of the senior show was Stockley, as the left hander picked up her 17th victory against two losses with a one-hit, 8-0 shutout performance in the opener. Stockley (nine strikeouts and one walk) also helped herself out at the plate, as she went two-for-three with a triple and a run scored.

Sophomore catcher Ilene Freeman and junior left fielder also enjoyed a good day at the plate as Freeman went two-for-four with two RBI's and Bietsch was two-for-three with a stolen base and a run scored. Freeman was also credited with the game winning hit, rapping a two-run double to left center in a three-run first inning.

The Minutewomen also got three runs in the second and two runs in the fourth as UMass pounded URI pitcher Chris Ashburn for 11 hits in six innings.

The Minutewomen had to scratch and claw to come out on top in game two. Sophomore pitcher Lisa Rever upped her season record to 14-5, going five innings. Rever was forced to leave in the sixth due to soreness in her left knee. Stockley relieved Rever, who had given up a leadoff single to URI shortstop Kim Menkavitch, and shut the door on the Rams, giving up a meaningless hit in the seventh.

Fittingly enough, Stockley struckout URI right fielder Sue Gordee to secure a 2-1 victory. Stockley gained her second save of the year, striking out three in her two inning stint of relief.

The Minutewomen scored first in the second inning, when Rever crushed a double that hit the bottom of the fence in center. Rever's double scored sophomore right fielder Chris Ciepiela, who had reached on a leadoff single to right. URI tied matters at 1-1 on Menkavitch's RBI-double to left center in the third.

It remained that way until the fifth, when Maher grounded out to third and Talbott scored on the throw the first. URI made a play for Talbott at home, but Talbott safely slid past the tag of URI catcher Maureen McCabe.

Baseball humbles UConn, 10-4

By MATT GERKE
Collegian Staff

This time, it went smoothly. A ground out to shortstop, a pop fly to shortstop and a routine fly to right. Three up, three down.

The University of Massachusetts baseball team handled the last three plays to put the finishing touches on another victory, as it whipped the University of Connecticut, 10-4, at Lorden Field yesterday.

UMass got a strong complete-game outing from Jon Martin, and home runs from Jeff Cimini, Matt Sheran and Sean Flint as they improved to 15-17. Sheran's homer gave him a hit in 20 consecutive games, which is believed to be a UMass record.

The last time these teams met, it was a different story. UMass was one out away from a 9-4 victory when the Huskies scored six unearned runs to post a 10-9 decision.

"We were thinking about the last UConn game," UMass manager Dick Bergquist said. "Especially when the score was 9-4 in the eighth inning. But, luckily, we added a run in the bottom of the eighth."

UMass, currently ranked fourth in New England, will play host to local rival Amherst College today at 3 p.m.

The Minutemen found themselves down, 1-0 in the first inning, when Dave Lanese walked and then scored on a two-base error by Matt Sheran.

In the second inning, Scott Cormier blasted a homer over the scoreboard in left field to give the Huskies a 2-0 lead.

"Martin hung in there well," UConn manager Andy Baylock said. "We scored a couple of runs early and he could have given up but he didn't. He showed guts."

The Minutemen scored two unearned runs in the third with the help of three UConn errors to tie the score, 2-2.

Jerry LaPenta hit his 13th home run in the fourth to tie the UConn season home run record and give the Huskies a 3-2 lead, but the Minutemen pushed across a run to tie it in the bottom of the inning.

The Huskies went ahead for the last time in the fifth on an unearned run and from that point on, it was all UMass.

UMass scored three times in the fifth, sparked by Cimini's two-run homer to right-center and a Sean Flint triple. In the sixth, Sheran's two-run blast to right made it 8-4.

LEADERSHIP CONFERENCE

by Marion Tinsley
Nummo Staff

Speaker Dr. Henrick Clarke lectured on the nineteenth century origins of Black Nationalism and the contradiction that African people were not brought here to become citizens.

Clarke, a professor of Puerto Rican Studies at Hunter College, New York City, told the audience that "we are the one national group who were not invited here. But the nature of our invitaion and what we did once we got here I do not think that we should forget it or let any one else forget."

Clarke pointed out that people react differently in the western part of the world. "They have toreact and still remain whole," said Clarke. He also pointed out that if you put all the African people together, it is a question why Blacks have to answer to the question of minority.

"It was in the fifteenth and sixteenth century where the decisions were made when the Europeans not only colonized the nation, but decisions about the world," said Clarke. "All of the world became their servant."

Clarke said that the African-Americans in the U.S. considered themselves visitors destined to return to Africa. He also reiterated the point of not letting anyone take control of your life and that without land and culture, you're lost. "There is no such word as "negro," and once we began to use the word we become conditioned. A name of people must always relate to land, history and culture."

Clarke spoke of the images of the Italians with their great cooks and the French with their fne wines and lovers, and how the word "negro" is not related to any great images.

"It is wrong: Once we stoppped accepting the word "African," we did ourselves wrong."

Clarke said that the Europeans have not recognized those who are a part of nationalism. Those who took part in the Haitian Revolution and the Carribean Revolution that helped to shape the nation.

Clarke spoke of the fight for nationalism, Africanness and constant continuity; something he says Blacks no longer have. He said that the loyalty system is broken and might take more than a generation to cure. "there might be personality problems and being Black is not enough. It has to do with more than personality, it has to do with chemistry, it has to do with culture," Clarke said.

"The finest minds are driven away from home," said Clarke. "My point is Africa one way or another has been revolt for over 500 years. One way or another, all over the world the African-American is in revolt."

Dr. Henrick Clarke was the keynote speaker at the Third World Leadership Conference.

FIVE-COLLEGE CHOIR GOSPEL JUBILEE

Members of the Five College Community Singers invited everyone to come out and share their spirits by "rejoicing through singing the Lords name."

Sunday night in Buckley Recital Hall at Amherst College, under the directorship of Amherst College student Lucien P. Gochett, the Amherst College Gospel Choir in conjuction with the Black Student Union of Amherst College gathered "to rejoice in the Lord and to share the good news and song," said Aisha Fox, a member of the choir and a student here at the University.

When explaining the purpose of the program Fox said "whenever there is a big gospel event the objective is to share the message of the Lord so that those people who don't know him can get to know him."

With an audience of approximately 250 people from the Five College Community the choir began the program by marching in to the tune "when the saints go marching in", followed by an invitational prayer by Amherst College student Brian Alston telling the audience that they need to "thank God".

Singing a total of nine songs including "Call him up", "Victory", "Changed" and"Tomorrow" the audience participated from one extreme to the other by rejuvenating in clapping their hands and playing the tambourine to shaking their heads and waving their hands in sorrowful appreciation.

Responding to an encore performance the choir ended the program with "Have mercy on me".

This was the Five College Community Singers final appearance for the semester, however, new membership of singers and musicians are encouraged.

Jazz Greats Jazz Greats

by Giselle Andrade
Nummo Staff

For generations jazz music has been listened to, yet not necessarily heard. The true meaning and appreciation of jazz music is just getting the recognition it deserves. Too often when one speaks of jazz we picture long-gone eras with the sound of a saxophone and the toot of a trumpet playing as our grandparents danced the evening away.

Jazz music has overflowed and flourished. It has not only found a place in today's music, but is the foundation of much of it.

Past, present and future, the music is in the hands of jazz greats, and its faithful listeners. Neither commercial neglect nor critical naysayers can kill jazz as long as the pull of its innovative rhythms and the magic of its improvisation keeps seducing new recruits to defend its honor. Today it has splintered into various sub-groups, but it is still JAZZ: the first American Music. And let's not forget it!

DIZZY GILLESPIE

During his career spanning over fifty years, irrepressible trumpeter with the upturned bell, has managed to mix impeccable musicianship and mirthful showmanship. Gillespie has always been known to incorporate such new ideas as mixing Latin American rhythms with his own bop conceptions. He continues to challenge himself by playing with young musicians in a variety of unexpected settings. Yet one thing will always remain constant, he can still cut with the best of them.

WAYNE SHORTER

Shorter cemented his reputation as a player and budding composer after joining Art Blakey's Jazz Messengers. His knack for combining technical virtuosity with spontaneous emotional energy spoke for itself. Even before the dissolution of fusion at the end of the decade, Shorter retreated from the limelight.

He seemed to turn inward and forget his audience. Now, to unanimous acclaim, Shorter's creative silence has been broken with the release of "Atlantis," his first studio recording in eleven years.

MILES DAVIS

"You can't join the strong until you write your own song."

Miles Davis had done that, and more. No one, neither layman, nor musicologist, can deny the impact of his musical ideas over the past forty years.

Though music is his life, a balanced life is equally important to Davis who is happily married to Cecily Tyson. In arts, it is very difficult to go into it as an individual, yet Davis made sure he developed as an individual. He is very serious about everything. To him, nothing lacks a sense of importance.

Over the past forty years, his contributions and ideas have added a priceless quality to modern day jazz.

DAVID MURRAY

Murray is known as one of the most powerful young saxophone soloists to have emerged in the past decade. His most important contributions are his restoration of the big band to a prominent position in the jazz community and his collaboration with the innovative conductor, Butch Morriss. He credits his individuality in music to the fact that when he was growing up, the focus was on creating your own music.

SONNY ROLLINS

He is often called the greatest living saxophonist. When Rollins plays, he's volcanic, errupting with ideas that spin off in fumes, only to be called back and mulled over once again.

But at the peak of his powers, and while being perhaps the most sought after saxophonist in the world, he disappeared. When he did come back after two years of practice and getting himself together, he jumped right in.

Today, he stills performs, but doesn't want to push himself. He just wants to keep up his strength for quality and longevity.

All these jazz greats have in their own way added a certain style and character to jazz music. They have helped mold jazz into what it is today; not just a music, but also an interpretation of music.

A personal profile: Newby, a man and his music

By Marion Tinsley

Stephen M. Newby, one of UMass's flourishing Black musicians said that he feels that one of the reasons his music is able to make an impact on people is because of its spiritual origin.

A native of Detroit, Newby attended Madonna College where he graduated with a double-major in vocal music education and flute performance.

As a child playing the organ at his father's church. Newby established a strong church background which he says is why he wanted to do graduate work in gospel music.

"I came to UMass in January of 1985 to work with Dr. Horace Boyer and Dr. Fred Tillis in the music department."

"People have the inclination that if you're really into music that you should go to a conservatory, but actually the facilities here at UMass have allowed me to do different things," said Newby. "I have been able to do things that I know at a conservatory I would not have been able to do."

Newby said that he would feel more restricted at a conservatory, that he is more free here at UMass and is able to write the kinds of music he likes to write. "As an artist that's what I want to do, I want to be able to express what I want."

A graduate student in the music department, Newby directs his own group, is the musical director for UMass Vocal Jazz Afro-American Music Ensemble and a teaching assistant in the theory department. He is also co-owner of Young Artist Development Incorporated (YADI), a Boston-based, non-profit organization geared for young artists ages 15-26 years old.

Newby said that part of his whole purpose as a musician and composer is to express his music in a style that would help others.

"I've had people encourage me; my mother and my father encouraged me to perform music that helps others and not to hinder anyone with my music. My parents instructed me to be sincere in producing music that builds character and integrity. However, I feel that God is my influence, I feel that through God I am a vessel.

Newby said that he believes that his work has been worked through in a spiritual sense and that his belief in the church is what makes his music impressive.

"There are people who say that they don't believe in what I do; that's their business. My belief is very important to me and it is quite evident in my music," said Newby.

His first semester at UMass was "strange," said Newby. "After I started teaching undergraduates I got to know them and my reception went well. I feel that you've got to know what you have to do and they respect me as I respect them." "My music speaks for itself. I don't have to say anything. I have a clear focus and I get that respect from the musicians in the department. I don't push my belief on them and they respect me for that."

Newby said that he feels that part of his job as a musician is to take music and to make it whole and create it in a way that will help people by leaving a positive influence.

"That is why I'm in music to try to effect people. I feel that is my function in life, I feel blessed and very fortunate. There is a spiritual called "I don't feel no ways tired; I don't believe he brought me this far to leave me." I know I didn't come to UMass by accident and I didn't have my strong training in the church by accident."

Newby said that he is taking it one step at a time and that whatever he feels he has to do to get the point across that is what he has to do.

"Whatever God has planned for me to do I can't see it, I just take it one day at a time. A lot of doors have been opened for me and it is not because I have this talent it's because I have this call."

For his thesis project Newby is working on an ensemble of members within the Five-College Community. The ensemble will have a 50-member dual choir including instrumentalist and soloist.

"What I'm trying to say in this piece is more than just a musical statement it is a political statement, it's a spiritual statement; 'Be still and know that God is God; let him work.' There are a lot of things going on which we do not understand and it's because we are not being still and listening to what is going on."

Blacks in Communications

by Marion Tinsley
Nummo Staff

At a seminar on Blacks and other minorities in communications guest speakers told the audience that they can maintain their Blackness and be professional, but it takes commitment and dedication.

Guest speakers Michael Hill, broadcast journalist from WFSB TV 3 in Hartford, Conn. and Obrie Smith, director of corporate communications at Miller Brewing Co., explained that when working in a field where you are the minority, commitment, discipline and personal experiences are often the roots needed to keep you on level ground.

Smith, who prior to joining Miller was a manager at General Motors Corporation, received a science degree in mathematics and in secondary education for principals. Smiths told students that he was lucky to get the position that he now has, but it did not come easily.

"The one thing that got me this job and why I still have it is because I'm committed and I have discipline," said Smith. "If you are not committed and without discipline you will regret it for the rest of your life."

Smith related some of his personal experiences in choosing to get ahead and making that decision in the face of family, prejudice and peer pressure.

"I worked at a job where all I did was monitor the copier machine for six years, but I was committed and I stayed there until a better opportunity came," said Smith. "Today you have to have the skills to get the job. I did not have a degree in journalism, but I am committed and dedicated, I burn the midnight oil," Smith said.

Hill, a broadcast journalist on Channel 3 Hartford, said that he got into the communications field because he wanted to be in a position where he could handle information presented to the public.

"During the 60's people understood the struggle of people of color, they knew that there was an uphill battle. People should take their personal experiences and use them in the work force when dealing with racial situations," Hill said.

When asked if he ever had to deny his Blackness in the face of racism, Hill said that he never forgot where he came from and that he still maintains his Blackness.

"My job is to uphold morality, integrity and the dignity of my profession. I am Black and a professional, you cannot sepatate the two," Hill said.

Caucus Rebuttle

As a representative of the Third World Caucus, I have been requested to make the following statement:

The Third World Caucus denounces the actions of the United States in use of military force against the North African nation, Libya. The Third World Caucus decries the use of lethal force before exhausting all political, social and economic means available.

The Third World Caucus sees the actions of the United States, in entering the sovereign territory of another country, with the intent of commiting an act of war, without congressional declaration of war, as repugnant to the principles of democracy and self-determination, which are the cornerstone of both the United States Constitution and the charter of the United Nations.

The Third World Caucus, as representatives of the Third World community of the University of Massachusetts, and as members of the numerical majority of this planet, disavows support of any act of violence against those Asian, African, Native American, Pacific Islander, Hispanic, and/or other people who are referred to with the term "Third World."

We call upon the students, faculty, and staff of the University to act responsibly toward eliminating the organized and institutionalized forms of racism and terrorism ocurring daily in our own country, before attempting to obliterate lives and property without condemning or supporting any act of violence either in our homes or across the seas, we, in the spirit of freedom and self-determination, acknowledge the actions of those people across the world who attempt to attain (and in many cases, re-claim) their right to human dignity and freedom by, as Malcolm X once said "any means necessary."

At the same time, the Third World Caucus rejects as ignorant the assertion made by individuals that to take a stance that is not consistent with the present Administration is to be "un-American." ... For those of you who would dare assert that we don't know history or have no argument to make, we wish to remind you of the 350 million Black Americans who fought for America, built America, and with little recognition, died for America.

Blacks and One-dimensionalism

by Chris Williams

Herbert Marcuse's One Dimensional Man is a lucid study of contemporary man in the highly industrial nations. He argues that the 'Good Life' of advanced industrialism has obliterated criticism to such a point that the society cannot perceive its own irrationalities. The State, its bureaucracy, the media, and monopoly and corporate capitalism are so dominant that the majority of the population does not challenge the superficial views and values that they promote, instead they submit to them.

However, Marcuse is slightly optimistic because he believes that some segments of society, Blacks and other oppressed groups that have not been totally absorbed psychologically and materially by society, possess the greatest potential in confronting the onslaught of 'one dimensionalism.'

This book was published in 1964, the year that the Civil Rights Act was passed, and one year before the series of riots in America's urban centers. In 1964, Marcuse's flicker of hope transformed into a furnace of political activity that produced America's second revolution. What has happened to this revolutionary spirit?

The power structure made sure that there would not be another authentic American Revolution like the one that occurred in the 1960's and 70's. The government, the mafia, and the police pumped drugs into the Black community to destroy the seeds of the next generation; this became the domestic opium war.

The Vietnam War caused many young Black men to be drafted to fight for democracy in South West Asia, while at 'home' their existence as human beigns was being debated. As domestic trouble increased, more blacks were drafted. Domestically, a full scale attack was made on all Black political organizations. Police raids, infiltration, destabilization, fragmentation, and in many cases, betrayal were all contributing factors in the destruction of America's Black radical organizations.

In spite of this war against the Black community, social change in the form of 'radical reforms' occurred. America was fighting two wars, one in Asia and the other at home. The Vietnam War became the nucleus of opposition to American domestic and foreign policy.

Young and old, Black and White, intellectual and layman, rich and poor, united against the government's domestic and foreign policy. Simultaneously, rejected elements of white society promoted their own special interests which included homosexual freedom, protecting the environment, and sexual egalitarianism. With all of this social protest, the government implemented various social programs to rectify past discrimination.

However, these reforms did not mean that the system changed. One-dimensionalism is more pervasive now than it was during this period of social transformation. What occurred is that Blacks and other groups that were historically discriminated against were invited into the system.

Liberal recruitment campaigns were carried out by the government and private industry to hire these groups. Colleges and universities also began to recruit. Ethnic, racial, and sexual pluralism became the new motto for America in the early 70's. The majority of these employment opportunities were at the State and governmental departments.

In addition, most Blacks have not benefitted from these government programs, and a significant amount of them have filled up the jails. Blacks who have benefited most from these programs are the educated elite (elite does not designate superiority but privilege.) These increased opportunities were created to appease Blacks, while hypnotizing them into the trance of the one-dimensional American dream.

This would have been more successful if the subjects were not Black. Blacks can never be totally absorbed into the advanced industrial state because of racism. Racism is just as much a factor today as it was a hundred years ago. What has happened is that it has changed inpractice but the intent remains the same -control and subordination by any means necessary. Lynchings are less frequent, but police brutality is rampant.

Furthermore, largely due to the saturation of narcotics in the Black community, Blacks increasingly end up destroying themselves had their own communities. Marcuse's theory does apply to Blacks because of one fundamental fact - one-dimensionalism includes racism as a part of its philosophy. All of the institutions responsible for one-dimensional thought are racist. Blacks either resist this onslaught or accept it, while being degraded and classified as inferior.

Blacks will always be the revolutionary group in society, as long as racism exists. Some may argue that Blacks in America are not as revolutionary as they were during the 60's and 70's, but that is not totally true. Methods have changed and matured, and so have some of the people. What is missing though is the radical youth that existed two decades ago.

As stated earlier, drugs had a disastrous affect on the Black community, especially Black youth. If they were not destroyed by drugs directly or indirectly, they lost their racial identity; they became Americans, incidentally Black. The late 70's and 80's marked the beginning when 'Blackness' was on the out. Increasingly, Black youth moved away from their culture, as they went on their odyssey for integration. These Blacks misunderstood the concept of integration. They believed that they acquired social opportunities at the expense of throwing away their cultural and racial identity.

This mentality is part of the 'Buppie' syndrome, (Black Yuppies) which is now epidemic at both white and so-called 'Black' colleges. Today, intellectual inquiry has been replaced by pre-professionalism and the pursuit of material wealth; us has been replaced with me; and agitation has been replaced with pacification. This shift in thought is not unique to Black students , it is also shared by their white peers.

However, not all Black youth fit this description; there is some hope. Some Blacks are still politically active. They are, however, in the minority. Even though they are in the minority they are still more progressive politically than the majority of white students. White campus politics has now become conservative and is supportive of the current 'Rambo' mentality now sweeping the nation. The progressive elements of white students are hanging in there, but their numbers are small and so is their effect.

The Buppie generation believes that racism ceases to exist. Superficial acceptance and tolerance by white society has convinced them of this. Meanwhile, more Blacks are in poverty in 1986 than in 1964. Black unemployment has steadily increased, Black males have the highest suicide rate, and 70 per cent of the births are by unmarried teenage mothers.

This is just a slice of the problems that Blacks face. Buppies don't want to see this side of the American dream; they are wearing rose rimmed glasses as the writer James Baldwin would say.

This generation is the best equipped segment of the Black community. They have the least to lose, have access to information and resources, and are not financially vulnerable. Skills that they acquire in college could be easily used to help the condtion of Blacks. This does not necessarily mean that they become leaders, but it does mean that they are responsible first to themselves and then to their community.

I am convinced that as the racial situation contracts with the economy, more privileged Blacks will be forced to turn to themselves and their communities. White America no longer needs 'the spook who sat by the door.' The Reagan Administration's blatant attack on Affirmative Action illustrates this. Throughout the nation white sentiment is turning against token opportunities for Blacks and cries of 'reverse discrimination' have become catch phrases.

What Whites seem to overlook is that Blacks control no institutions in America, so they are unable to make their personal beliefs public and foreign policy.

This discussion would not be complete without mentioning the role of Blacks within the advanced industrial state. The liberal economist, John Kenneth Galbraith states in The New Industrial State, "But the poor, by any applicable tests, are outside of the industrial system. They are those who have not been drawn into its service or who cannot qualify." He is incorrect. Blacks and other oppressed groups within American society have a vital role within the advanced industrial state, they provide a significant amount of the cheap, unskilled labor and low level service jobs vital to the American economy.

This is evident when one considers the large amount of illegal aliens coming from the Caribbean, and South America. These people do not work within the bureaucracy of the industrial state, they are employed in the lowest paid jobs within society. Increasingly, a significant amount of the labor vital to maintaining high profits for American corporations is done by illegal aliens who are women. These workers are invisible, yet their role is significant.

Finally, we have seen that Marcuse's hypothesis has come true. Blacks did challenge the system. Has the system changed and is one-dimensionalism more pervasive today than it was when Marcuse wrote his book? The system's goals have remained the same, its tactics have jsut been altered.

One-dimensionalism is more pervasive, but it has not affected everyone, certainly not the majority of Blacks. The large support of the Rev. Jesse Jackson and the Minister Louis Farrakhan by Blacks proves that Blacks are not totally one-dimensional in their thinking.

Besides, Blacks have to much to lose if they become one-dimensional. Identifying totally with white America will keep them in a subordinate position as well as complete the final stage of cultural and mental genocide.

Both unions see victory in vote today

By CRAIG SANDLER
Collegian Staff

Leaders of both unions vying to represent 1,100 University of Massachusetts professionals yesterday said their organizations will do well in today's election, but an organizer for one predicted the "no union" option would come out ahead.

The predictions came as workers for both factions sought to get out the vote, calling workers they have identified as supporters and urging them to go to the polls.

A vote of more than 50 percent would make either union the representative of the professionals. If OPEIU, UPE/MTA and "no union" all garner less than a majority, a runoff will be held between the two top vote-getters.

At stake for the two unions, the Office and Professional Employees International Union, an AFL-CIO affiliate, and the Union of Professional Employees of the Massachusetts Teachers Association, is the right to represent the last non-unionized group of workers in the UMass system.

The professionals at both the Boston and Amherst campuses, whose jobs range from assistant coach to pyschologist to head of residence, have twice voted for no union, in 1978 and 1982.

"It's going to be a big win for OPEIU," said one of that group's organizers, echoing his collegues, who predicted their union would receive 50 to 60 percent of the vote statewide. OPEIU workers said they were calling potential members and asking them to vote for the organization.

The OPEIU workers predicted a turnout of about 80 percent.

Bing Carey, a UPE/MTA organizer, agreed with that turnout prediction but said, "'No union' will come in first."

Carey said MTA was "losing Boston by better than 2-to-1," but that UPE/MTA would beat OPEIU by the same margin at Amherst, giving his group the edge statewide. He added that he expects 40 to 45 percent of the voters to choose "no union."

OPEIU workers yesterday continued to criticize what some called a "smear campaign" by MTA against their union.

"We feel that MTA wants us not to win very badly. That goal is reflected in their strategy more than wanting unionization for the professionals at UMass," said OPEIU organizer Gerry Scoppettuolo.

MTA has claimed OPEIU misrepresents the size and composition of its membership and the amount it would charge UMass professionals for dues.

OPEIU organizers yesterday stressed that their union

Graduation speaker: Dukakis

An Wang to receive degree; alcohol ban is vowed

By LESLEY CLARK
Collegian Staff

Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, who last week announced he will seek reelection, will give the main address at the University of Massachusetts undergraduate commencement on Sunday, May 25.

The governor's office in Boston yesterday did not have any indication of what Dukakis will say.

Honorary degree recipients will include An Wang, president of Wang Laboratories; computer pioneer Grace Hopper; English professor Sidney Kaplan; Lynn postmaster Thomas Costin; and Gen. Andrew Iosue of Randolph Air Force Base in Texas.

The student speaker will be Elizabeth Luciano, a journalism major and former Collegian arts editor.

An administrator yesterday reiterated that to combat what officials have called a "circus-like" atmosphere, authorities will enforce a ban on alcohol in Warren McGuirk Alumni Stadium, where the event will be held.

"Alcohol is not permitted and will not be allowed," said Trey Williams, special assistant to the vice chancellor for student affairs. He said students may be asked to carry their robes into the stadium so they cannot conceal bottles or cans beneath them.

Williams said the Commencement Task Force, composed of students and administrators, will meet tomorrow to iron out security details. Still unclear is whether the University will seek to have graduates searched before they enter the stadium.

A congratulatory letter from Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey to all graduates will refer to the alcohol ban. "The whole letter isn't about drinking," Williams said, "but it will request no alcohol be brought in."

Dukakis received an honorary doctor of laws degree from UMass in 1979.

Graduating students can pick up caps, gowns and tassels at the Textbook Annex, 9 a.m. to 4 p.m., from May 5 through May 23.

A separate commencement ceremony for graduate students will be held Saturday, May 24. Zoology professor Vincent Dethier will give the main address.

Pulitzer winner will lecture tonight

Pulitzer Prize-winning Boston Globe columnist, author and feminist Etien Goodman will give a lecture titled "Life and Change" at 8 p.m. tonight in the Campus Center Auditorium.

Goodman said she will be speaking on the same issues she writes about: social change, feminism and "the spill out," which she calls everything from "superwoman" to "super stress."

More women take on traditionally male jobs than men take on traditionally female jobs, she said: "A lot of women have found it easier to dress for success than change the nature of success."

Goodman, 45, was graduated from Radcliffe College in 1963, won a Nieman fellowship for mid-career journalists at Harvard in 1973 and has been a syndicated columnist for the past 10 years.

She won the Pulitzer in 1980 for distinguished commentary and is the author of a book on social change, Turning Points. Two collections of her columns have been published, Close to Home and At Large. Her syndicated work appears in 325 newspapers.

History buff dispenses knowledge as a service

By JENNIFER ACE
Collegian Correspondent

For many University of Massachusetts students, a stroll through the Campus Center concourse is an opportunity to peruse the wares of various vendors. Henry Bubar, 81, is one of them. But he peddles a unique craft — history.

"Talking to students and seeing that they were interested in history is why I decided to set up this booth," he said one recent afternoon. "I feel that people need to learn history just like they learn chemistry and physics. Students are supposed to memorize facts but are not taught to think and analyze."

Bubar's concourse station is a wooden frame with three rows of pictures strung across it, including shots of prominent historical figures like John Adams, James Watt and Jesus Christ. The photographs are taken from a textbook called Man's Great Adventure, which Bubar used in 1931 when he taught high school history classes in Maine. The pictures are in chronological order and he has written a comment on each telling of its significance in history.

Bubar said he is a firm believer in liberal arts education.

Western governments urge citizens to leave

MOSCOW (AP)—Up against a wall of Soviet secrecy, Western governments urged their citizens yesterday to pull out of the stricken Ukraine, where a nuclear fire spewed more radiation across Europe and touched off a storm of world outrage.

The Kremlin claimed radiation levels were dropping at the devastated Chernobyl nuclear power plant. But a Soviet diplomat was quoted as saying the inferno was "out of control," and US sources in Washington agreed.

The extent of Soviet casualities also remained uncertain.

The Soviet government said Tuesday two people had been killed, and yesterday that 197 others had been hospitalized. But unofficial, unverified reports spoke of higher casualty tolls in what some have called history's worst nuclear disaster.

Some of Kiev's 2.4 million people were fleeing the Ukrainian capital for Moscow, 450 miles to the northeast, West German sources said.

Radioactive clouds, meanwhile, spread as far west as the Swiss Alps and Norway, borne on mile-high winds.

European health officials reassured the public that radiation levels presented no major danger. But anger built up against the Soviets, who kept word of the deadly nuclear event from the rest of the world until Monday, three days after it happened.

"The Soviet Union has an obligation and duty to the international community to give the fullest possible explanation of what happened and why," Britain's foreign secretary, Sir Geoffrey Howe, said at a West European ministers' meeting in Italy.

His West German counterpart, Hans-Dietrich Genscher, called on Moscow to shut down all nuclear power stations similar to the crippled Chernobyl plant, which uses an unusual graphite-moderation process.

The Soviet government has thrown a wall of near-total secrecy around what happened last week at Chernobyl, a four-reactor complex 60 miles north of Kiev.

"I am not authorized to tell you anything," a Ukrainian Health Ministry official said yesterday, in a typical comment. He was reached by telephone by Moscow.

But, again, the Soviet statement offered little on the cause and effects of the accident. The most detailed such information came from intelligence and other US sources in Washington, apparently obtained via US surveillance satellites.

Laurel wants Reagan to show support

BALI, Indonesia (AP)—Philippine Vice President Salvador Laurel, on the eve of talks with President Reagan, appealed to the United States yesterday to work harder to reclaim billions that Ferdinand Marcos is alleged to have stolen.

"The country is broke. Marcos took all the money with him," Laurel told reporters gathered here for Reagan's talks with officials of several Southeast Asian nations.

Laurel said he wants Reagan to remove any "cobwebs of doubt" over whether the United States supports the pressent Philippine government headed by Corazon Aquino and himself.

The meeting is among several Reagan has scheduled today with leaders of Southeast Asian nations, including Indonesia's President Suharto.

Laurel also said that Secretary of State George Shultz told him yesterday that Reagan, in his call to Marcos, had urged the ousted Philippine leader against trying to make a political comeback.

Yesterday's story on union elections contained an inaccuracy concerning Alan Clarke. It was the Office and Professional Employees International Union, not the Massachusetts Teachers Association union, that said Clarke had reversed his union stance.

Due to a reporting error, the starting date of Southwest Week was written incorrectly yesterday. It began Monday, not Tuesday.

Professor concerned for son touring USSR

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts professor whose son was with a group visiting Kiev in the Soviet Union when radiation leaked Monday from the Chernobyl power plant 60 miles away, yesterday said he is concerned but believes his son is safe.

Roberts French, a professor in the English department, said his son Barry, a senior at Bates College in Lewiston, Maine, is with a group of 16 students in the Soviet Union as part of a five-week course in Russian.

Western officials are calling the Chernobyl accident perhaps the worst nuclear-plant mishap in history.

"We are concerned but we think they are doing as much as they can do," French said. He added that he heard the group is in "good spirits and their morale is high."

French said he has not spoken to his son, but Tuesday at 6 p.m. EST he spoke on the telephone with Karen Black, an assistant professor of Russian who is leading the trip.

"She [Black] did not know very much," French said. "She had heard there had been an accident 80 miles north of Kiev.

"She said Kiev is normal. The only difference was that the buses were gone to evacuate people," French said.

He said that when he spoke to Black, he knew more than the Bates group did about the accident, and added that United Press International in Moscow had interviewed his son.

"The group is taking precautions. My son Barry talked to UPI and he said they are staying inside and not drinking water."

However, French said Black told him the group was planning to follow most of its normal schedule Tuesday night in Kiev, including a dance in the city. The group was planning to leave Kiev for Erevan, Armenia, yesterday, he said.

"Kiev is a wonderful place to be, but it wasn't the time to be there," French said.

Southwood construction finishes today

By JEFFRY BARTASH
Collegian Staff

Construction on the road near the Southwood Apartments bus stop in Amherst that has forced rerouting of buses since Tuesday should be completed today, according to the new Southwood manager.

"We forewarned the Pioneer Valley Transit Authority that they would have to re-route. As far as I know this is the only major repair going on," said the manager, Joe Armstrong.

A spokesman for the PVTA said all South Amherst bus drivers were given maps of the temporary route. During the repairs, buses have not entered the Brittany Manor-Southwood apartments compound, but have stopped at the entrance of each apartment complex road.

Chuck Novotny, a foreman of Miazga Co., said his firm was filling large potholes and repaving a 50-foot section of road.

George Yocher, a PVTA bus driver, said the bus schedule was unaltered and he received the normal amount of passengers.

Students who rode the bus from campus were notified by drivers at the Riverglade Apartments stop that the bus would not enter the Brittany Manor-Southwood compound, but some students missed buses to campus because they were uninformed of the change and waited at normal stops.

"We missed two buses until we finally caught one," said Dave Turner, a Brittany Manor resident. "Someone told us about the construction. As long as you know about it, it is only a little extra walk [to the temporary stop]," he said.

Dave Goudreault, also of Brittany Manor, said,"Those potholes were huge. They were a good two feet deep. There was no way to avoid them. They probably could have ruined the buses."

The Southwood complex was bought a few weeks ago by the Woodland Group, a company based in Boston, Armstrong said.

"The new ownership was very concerned about safety. The former company did not seem to respond to people's complaints, Armstrong said.

Banning upheld

Coors won't be sold

By PATRICK JOHNSON
Collegian Staff

At the meeting of the Undergraduate Student Senate last night, a motion requesting the Campus Center board of governors to reevaluate its banning of Coors beer in the Campus Center was narrowly defeated.

The board last year banned the sale of Coors in the Campus Center because of the brewery's controversial policies. Last night's proposed motion asked why the board had not yet acted on a referendum last May in which 73 percent of the voters said they wanted the beer sold in the Campus Center.

Senator M. Lynn Murphy from Grayson House, opposed the motion because the wording of the referendum question did not ask whether Coors should be sold, but whether the board overstepped its authority.

After 90 minutes of debate, the rollcall vote from the senate floor was locked in a tie 22 to 22. Senate speaker Paul Wingle ended the tie by casting a vote against the motion. As Wingle cast his vote, he said, "I hope none of you will interpret this as being biased."

John Hayes, the newly elected board chairman, said the senate had no right to consider the motion on the senate floor. "The senate is in no position to try and force the BOG, which is not an undergraduate student organization." The Board has 32 members, 8 of which are graduate students.

"There are proper channels...One of our members is a member of the Minuteman, he can propose it if he wants to," Hayes said.

The motion is not dead in the senate. Student government president Bill Bennett used a presidential veto — in use for the first time since 1983 — to have the motion reconsidered next week because of the closeness of the election.

The senate also approved a motion to have the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy organize a political tolerance and free speech task force to promote awareness of issues of political diversity and difference of opinions.

Speakers claim juries are "repressive"

Everyone subpoenaed to testify before a grand jury should refuse and instead be imprisoned, according to four men who have been jailed for refusing to testify.

Speaking before 50 people in the Campus Center last night, the men said juries are a form of political repression.

"The grand jury is a political repressive tool of the goverment. I refuse to cooperate to intimidate and repress people, which is what the grand jury does," said Cameron Bishop, a political activist who was on the FBI's "10 most wanted list."

The federal grand juries were created to investigate court cases to find evidence to issue inditements, said Ron Kuby, an attorney for the Center for Constitutional Rights in New York.

"The purpose of the grand jury is to collect political intelligence. A lot of the information ends up in the FBI files," he said.

"Sometimes the court is on a wild goose chase, they don't even want you, they just need your (information) later," said Barry Wilson, a criminal defense attorney from Boston who refused to testify against a client.

Cameron Bishop speaks at a panel discussion last night in the Campus Center.

Refusing to testify is a self-protection of a political movement, since the grand jury is often looking for information about political movements in the country, said Bob Lederer, a political activitist.

"The goverment is trying to repress freedom of speech," he said.

Kuby said, the movement against the juries is progressing because some people who are supposed to serve an 18-month term in prison for contempt of court have been released earlier.

"Judges have released dozens of people because it is pointless to incarcerate people for 18 months when they are not going to speak," he said, explaining that people who refuse to collorabate with the court are jailed to convince them to testify.

Alumna organizes 'Out for Africa' tours

By PAUL LOUIS
Collegian Correspondent

Seeking to expose students to African life, Asmina Jiwa, a University of Massachusetts alumna from Kenya, is organizing safaris of her homeland.

Jiwa's brainchild is Pegasus Tours, which operates out of Travel Unlimited in Amherst and offers 30-day student trips for $3,000.

According to Jiwa, Kenya is an intriguing country with a diverse population and beautiful countryside.

"It is a land of contrast, with 22 different tribes of Africans and also a mixture of ethnic groups with Indians and Europeans," she said.

In the safari experience, Jiwa said, it is the "human who is in the cage," because the animals are seen from a vehicle. The tour covers wildlife reserves in Kenya and animals come as close as four to five yards from the car.

The first "Out for Africa" tour leaves this month.

Jiwa earned her master's degree in microbiology at UMass this year.

Former students work for union

The University that trained them has become the "real world" for at least five UMass graduates currently involved in today's professional employees union election.

The five are graduates of the University's Labor Relations and Research Center. Another union worker, Jerry Ashlock, is currently a student at the center, based in Draper Hall. Ashlock is a worker for the Office and Professional Employees International Union in its bid to unionize 866 professionals at UMass-Amherst and 300 of their Boston counterparts.

In addition to Ashlock, Barbara Niccoli, Nancy Marks and Gerry Scoppettuolo are working for OPEIU.

Labor Center alumni Andrew Kripp and Bing Carey are soliciting support for OPEIU's rival in today's election, the Union of Professional Employees of the Massachusetts Teachers Association.

Scoppettuolo said he did not have names of other UMass graduates involved in the election, but "we went to one meeting and it seemed like all the people there were labor center people."

He speculated that the reason this campaign involves a high percentage of UMass-trained workers is "that in a campaign, unions will look for local talent, people who know the area. In this case they had a ready-made batch of people."

The center, established in 1965, has granted master's degrees to about 275 labor students since its inception, said director Harvey Friedman. He said the center is involved "in the regular things the University does—teaching, research and extension [to the community]."

Chip Maguire, a counsel for the state Labor Relations Commission, said the figure on forms OPEIU submitted to his agency was not legible, but added he thought the figure was $10.

Voters to decide on abortions

BOSTON (AP)—Massachusetts voters will decide this fall whether the state Legislature should have the ability to place some restrictions on abortion, such as blocking funding for government-financed operations for poor people.

The Legislature, sitting as a constitutional convention, voted 123-69 yesterday in favor of the constitutional amendment after many lawmakers said the state should do everything it can—within the bounds of federal law—to restrict abortions.

Rep. Charles Doyle, the most outspoken abortion foe on Beacon Hill, said the state was spending $1.4 million a year to help fund 8,000 operations where fetuses are "scorched by chemicals and dismembered by the surgical tools of the abortionists."

Doyle, D-Boston, ridiculed pro-aboriton groups for calling themselves "pro-choice" while trying to deny "the people of Massachusetts the right to make a choice about whether their tax dollars should be used for the killing of children."

Sen. Francis Doris, D-Revere, said that by allowing abortion, the state was moving in a direction that could lead to the killing of children with birth defects and allowing parents to say "'Let's do away with a person and start again.' I suggest that is not the way to do it."

But Rep. Marjorie Clapprood, one of many women legislators to oppose the amendment, said it had the potential to go much further than limiting Medicaid abortions.

"It is very clearly discrimination against 51 percent of the population by restricting the right of all women—insured and uninsured, poor and wealthy, Republicans and Democrats ... to freedom of choice, " the Sharon Democrat said.

Clapprood said it was a mistake for the Legislature to "pit our women against criminal charges for exercising their right to choose whether their bodies will house an unwanted pregnancy. It's clearly beyond the scope of our role as public policy makers."

DAMAGED BOOKS—Los Angeles fire department officials survey the damage done to books at the Los Angeles library yesterday. Fire burned for several hours in the 60-year-old building.

Reactors lack radiation containment

WASHINGTON (AP)—Five large US reactors used to produce nuclear weapons lack thick containment domes to trap escaping radiation if other safety systems fail in an accident, and one of them has been deteriorating for years, officials said yesterday.

The absence of such a protective steel and concrete shell around the Chernobyl reactor, believed to have melted down in the Soviet Union, is blamed by US officials for the release of massive amounts of radiation in the worst nuclear power accident in history.

In response to a suit from environmental groups, US officials considered building a containment dome around one of four weapons reactors near Aiken, S.C., two years ago but concluded that—with a $850 million price tag—it was unnecessary to do so.

The concrete and steel domes used at US commercial plants are four feet thick.

In addition, according to Enrgy Department documents, officials have been concerned for years about the warping graphite core and embrittled and bowing process tubes in the N weapons reactor at Hanford, Wash.—the US plant closest in design to the Soviet reactor where the accident occurred.

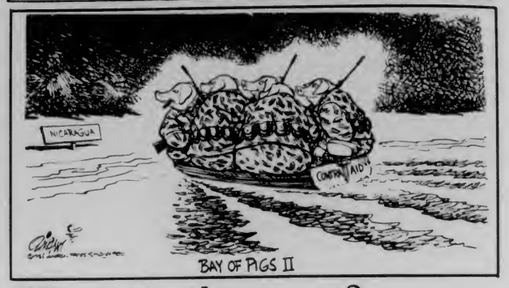
Choices under attack



Though poll after poll and march after march show that an overwhelming majority of US citizens support abortion rights for women, the Massachusetts Legislature this week is considering a constitutional amendment that would allow lawmakers to limit abortions.

It is unfortunate, when there is so much to be done in the areas of reproductive freedom, that the pro-choice fight has to be fought continually. Everyone has different feelings about the morality of abortions, but the abortions will always go on. If abortion is once again outlawed in the United States, rich women will fly to foreign countries and poor women will risk their lives in illegal "back alley" abortions.

The constitutional amendment process is long and complex, but an antiabortion amendment is steadily making its way to a referendum in November. An amendment that would remove any restrictions in the state constitution that limit the Legislature in regulating abortions was approved at the 1983-1984 constitutional convention, so if it is passed in the next few weeks it will be on the ballot next fall.

All concerned students should call, telegram or write their representative and senators and urge them to vote against the anti-choice forces in the Legislature.

Update on the SGA

Daniel Burgess

The Code of Student Conduct is lost in a procedural and political shuffle, having been substantially rewritten by the Univeristy's General Counsel. This situation is unfortunate and somewhat irresponsible, as it lacks clear and consensual cooperation and generally hurts students in the end. It is still the plan to have it finally approved by the Board of Trustees at our June meeting.

Due to the problems created by the Code of Student Conduct, the SGA Constitution has been held up to take a back seat to the Code. However, hopefully there will be slightly less controversy about the Constitution which could allow for a more efficient resolution.

The SGA Student Senate has, for a number of different reasons, been slightly more amicable. It would be wonderful it the Senate can continue this trend into next year, and pull back into its membership the strong, intelligent, and cooperative students that have been disheartened.

The Chancellor's Review Commission of the SGA/SATF is going very well. We are still on time and are excited about some of the plans developed by it. These will be made public within the next two weeks.

For those of you following the Review of the Student Legal Services Office, the on-campus part is complete. The report should be ready by early May and will likely have significant long term implications. Now, regarding the "control" issue over the SATF, (which led to the arrests in Whitmore last semester) and whether students have or have not lost influence. The issue seems to have resolved itself for the time being and without problematic concessions on the part of the students!

I'm off to another meeting, but remember that I am your student Trustee and I am more willing to make myself available to students. As always, I invite your comments, ideas, suggestions and criticisms.

Dani Burgess is the student member of the UMass Board of Trustees.

Who gets the press?

Stephen Erickson

It's interesting, perhaps alarming, to note just how dependent we are on US media sources in the shaping of public opinion. Granted, no news coverage can be one hundred percent objective, and in the context of media coverage throughout the world, US media performance is largely unobjectionable. Nevertheless, perplexing questions arise when one compares certain world events and the respective attention given to them in the our media. Indeed, what the media chooses as newsworthy, and what it does not, can be a most effective means of editorializing.

The drama that unfolded in the Philippines a few months ago warmed most of our hearts. We are all familiar with the story, as it was like a continning soap opera played out during the nightly news. It began with the murder of Benigno Aquino as he attempted to return to his homeland to run for office against Ferdinand Marcos, who is widely believed to have played a role in the killing. Out of the shadows stepped Benigno Aquino's wife, Corazon, to offer herself as a candidate against Marcos. The subsequent elections were greatly flawed as dishonest ballot counting, control of the media, and Marcos strongmen insured his victory. Key members of the Marcos cabinet defected to the Aquino camp, and with the help of US pressure, Marcos stepped down. It is a nice story, worthy of US media attention. Apparently, similar stories elsewhere are not.

Jorge Salazar was a leader of a group of Nicaraguan coffee growers in the Matagalpa region. He had opposed Somoza, yet became an opponent of the Sandinistas because they determined, in the words of Sandinista Directorate member Humberto Ortega, not to have western style elections but "elections to advance revolutionary power, not to raffle off power, because the people already have power through their vanguard, the Sandinista front..." Salazar was a popular leader with charisma, and presented a threat to the Sandinistas through his oppositionist activities. On November 16, 1980, Salazar was murdered, much the same way and for the same reasons Aquino was. Sandinista claims that Salazar was caught in a cross fire and have been refuted by witnesses and weapons found in his vehicle were clearly planted.

Today, Salazar's widow, Lucia, is a leader of the umbrella group which includes the so-called contras. Corazon Aquino became a media heroine after her husband's killing, yet has any significant media coverage ever been awarded to the Salazars? Philippine elections were rightly condemned for their flaws. Nicaraguan elections, including Sandinista ownership or censorship of all media, neighborhood watch committees, and "divine mobs" which resembled Nazi brown shirts more than anything heavenly, were excused and apologized for in the US media. What can possibly account for such discrepancies?

Perhaps Tom Brokaw of NBC News best answered this question, acknowledging that Sandinista President Daniel Ortega still has "friends in the U.S. press". New York Times correspondent Shirley Christian wrote in 1979, "The press got on the Sandinista bandwagon and the story the reporter told — with a mixture of delight and guilt was the ending of an era in which the United States had once again been proved wrong." Apparently most U.S. news people are still riding comfortably on the Sandinista express, double standards not withstanding.

Domestic animals used and abused

Kathy Johnson

The 51st Livestock Classic took place at the Grinnell Arena of UMass last weekend. Advertisements for it were posted on bulletin boards and became centerpieces at the tables of the Student Union Coffee Shop. These announcements alluded to a program centered around the showing of domesticated animals. It looked like it would be a typical animal appreciation event, reminiscent of a small-town, "come-pet-the-animal" county fair.

As I approached the Grinnell Arena on Saturday my assumptions proved to be pretty much accurate. There were goats in one fenced-in area, shampooed and beaming with good health. In the next area a young heifer rested on the ground, looking somewhat bewildered but no less shiney than the goats. Hands of children and adults (including my own) were groping over the wire gates in an attempt to pat their inviting fluff. There were rabbits, ponies, sheep and a wool spinning demonstration.

My curiosity was piqued when I heard cheering and what sounded like the voice of an auctioneer with a microphone emanating from within the barnlike arena. As I entered I realized with a jolt that this fair was no tribute to domesticated animals. My naivete was quickly checked by what I saw. I had just walked into the "baby pig obstacle course" event. In this event, about a dozen baby pigs were forced to race from one end of the arena to the other. And since they had no inclination or desire to cross the finish line (nor before any other pig, for that matter), they were prodded along by the application of fly-swatters on their flanks and buttocks. This event was intended for children's participation and although some willingly participated, some were crying and moaning that they didn't want to "hit" the baby pigs. Unfortunately, their more aggressive daddies were readily available for coaching and persuading.

The scene became increasingly cartoon-like in character. The "ring steward," a man in white shirt and black jacket, kept an account of which baby pig was in the lead, which one was falling behind and which one needed a little more "spanking" in the behind. Meanwhile, the daddies attempted to get their little Susie or Johnny involved in the race by showing them exactly how the spanking should be done. One even had the ingenuity to use the hard handle of the swatter instead of the plastic flap. Approving cheers from family and friends encouraged this foolishness.

The purpose of the Livestock Classic and shows like it became sorely clear to me. As the word "Live-Stock" implies, it is an event which indoctrinates children into the uses and abuses of animals whether it be for profit or enjoyment. The justification for horrendous acts of animal use and abuse are born and preserved through such events as the Livestock Classic. Speciesism is the belief in the inherent superiority of a particular species and its right to dominate over another. Like racism and sexism, it is not a natural or spontaneous process; it must be learned. On Saturday some parents had to force reluctant children to participate in the "games."

Events like the Livestock Classic are not unique. They take place all over the country, mostly at county fairs and circuses. Their frequent occurence, however, must not be construed as a justificaiton for their ethical correctness. We must question the kind of socialization that occurs which makes us believe that we have the right to abuse and even murder other living creatures for the sake of human entertainment and/or gastronomic delight.

It is unfortunate that no one was listening to those children who had the sense to refuse to "play" their parents' games. If anyone were listening, they could have learned an important lesson. I just hope that those involved in the organization of this event will read this article and note that not everyone enjoyed themselves at the 51st Livestock Classic. Not everyone was laughing and cheering for their favorite baby pig. As I walked away from the arena in tears, I thought of other uses and abuses of which humans obtain pleasure at the expense of other animals, whether it be from active or passive participation.

Kathy Johnson is a UMass student.

New tactics needed, but what?

Rob Skelton

This may sound crass, but somehow I have only disdain for those "Democrats" who came calling on campus recently, courting the college support so necessary for their continuance. As a press photographer, I suppose I should be unfazed, but my position only brought into focus the blatancy of their attempted manipulation of the media, or lack thereof.

Big political deal, right? I guess six years of Reagan-smoothed gloss raised my press conference expectations; maybe He can make natural what others choke on. Perhaps it was the homogeneity of their conservative blue pinsuits, or their plastered smiles which ate at me as I ate chicken wings. The blandness of the food matched the words which they spewed out, which were for the benefit of . . . the media.

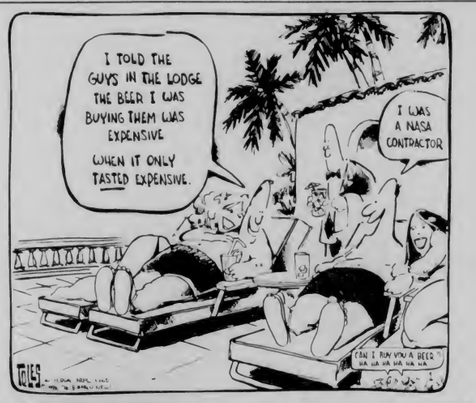
Their literature pointed out that many young people today dislike association with what I term the "Republocrats." But no allowance is made for the support of any third party; instead we must join one or the other in order to "count."

"Forum for the Future," scheduled for 7:30 p.m. in the School of Education auditorium, got underway at 8:15 after two location changes due to an embarassingly low turnout. While the Congressmen chatted in the lush V.I.P. lounge, orders were sent to the four Fine Arts Center Production Service employees to shift all the sound equipment, etc. to an alternative location.

When the forum started, in a rat of a basement room hastily thrown together for the camera, with flags and a backdrop and the local Democratic machine looking on nervously, the professional spewsters took turns twisting sentences and deflecting difficult passages as only politicians can.

The Dems were here to curry campus support, but empty catch-phrases and vague generalizations designed to differentiate the parties didn't work, because frankly they don't have much to brag about, nor do they have practical alternatives to the ills every government must face.

Reagan's Amerika is scary, but this congressional mission, undertaken with the pretense of regaining votes lost through miscalculation and freak demographics, didn't seem serious. The lack of organization reflected this.



Amherst Democratic Town Committeeman Stan Rosenberg attempted to shift the blame to the Collegian, accusing it of not giving the event enough publicity. He should only carefully fault the Collegian, there was a page one story that very ' , and besides, Stan, don't your people know how to icize something?

UMass poli-sci se r Tim Kress, after pointing out that had the Republican organized such a forum, 300 people would be there, keye ight in when he asked "Gentlemen, where is the money?"

Where is the Democratic Party headed when it fails miserably at the game which its nemesis has mastered so artfully? As a photographer, I resent taking part in such a poorly packaged event. Perhaps I shouldn't go into photojournalism as such. Perhaps they should get out of politics.

Think about May Day

Timothy Harris

May 1st means a lot more than spring, maypoles and parades. The Haymarket Riot, the executions of the Haymarket martyrs and the initiation of the long fight for the eight-hour day are some of the things this holiday was intended to commemorate. As you go to your jobs and classes, remember how the struggles of those before you helped to obtain the rights now taken for granted. Remember also, that with eroding union strength, growing corporate power and public complacency, these rights could be taken away.

One hundred years ago, the labor movement in the United States joined together as a powerful force, finding a voice as it had never before. "It was the very dawning of the day when the term 'dignity of labor' meant something," wrote George E. McNeill. While more of the 1,432 recorded strikes of that year were for higher wages, another important demand was the eight-hour work day. Although some states has passed eight-hour legislation, there was little or no enforcement.

May 1, 1886 was fixed as the date for a nationwide effort to rally for the eight-hour day. On that date in Chicago, 30,000 men and women were on strike. Huge rallies were also held in New York, San Francisco and Boston.

On May 3rd, an altercation took place in Chicago when police fired upon striking workers at McCormick Harvester, leaving two dead. A meeting was called the next day to protest the shooting. On May 4, under ominous rainclouds, about 300 workers stood listening to anarchists Spies, Parsons and Fieldmen when police arrived and ordered the crowd to disperse. A bomb went off in the midst of the police, who then fired wildly into the fleeing crowd. 7 police were wounded and 7 killed; 7 civilians died with thirty to forty also wounded. Many of the injured police had been wounded by their own bullets, as they were the only ones who had been shooting.

Police used the event as a pretext with which to cripple the growing labor movement, and in the next several weeks arrested eight anarchists; Albert Parsons, Oscar Neebe, August Spies, Michael Schwab, Louis Lingg, Samuel Fielden, George Engel, and Adolph Fischer. All were indicted for murder, conspiracy and riot, although some had not even been at the meeting when the bomb was thrown. All but Neebe were sentenced to death.

Lingg was eventually killed by a cigar bomb in his cell. Parsons, Spies, Engel and Fischer were hanged together on Nov. 11, 1887. The death sentences of Fielden and Schwab were commuted to life imprisonment, and in 1893, Gov. John Peter Altgeld strongly denounced the Haymarket trial and pardoned them both.

May 1, 1890, was chosen by the American Federation of Labor as the date to renew the fight for the eight-hour day. The Second Internationale, meeting in Paris that year, also designated that date as one for international worker's struggle to obtain the shorter work day.

During the McCarthy period the United States government changed the name of May Day to "Loyalty Day." Later on, the Eisenhower administration modified that to "Law Day." These proclamations effectively turned a day to commemorate worker's resistance into yet another celebration of the State.

While Henry Ford once said, "History is bunk," he may have had a vested interest in feeling that way. Although this pithy gem is certainly revealing, I prefer the old cliche, "Those who do not remember history are doomed to repeat it."

It hurts

Fr. John Tuohey
Rev. Esther Hargis
Sr. Millie Marengo
Fr. John Smegal

It has come to our attention that since Friday, April 11th, there has been an unprecedented increase in the harassment of gays and lesbians on this campus. Openly gay individuals have been physically threatened and harassed with phone calls and signs reading "Kill the Queer" which have appeared on student's doors. Signs encouraging people to slip cyanide into the drinks of lesbian and gay people have been posted in residence halls. We unequivocally condemn such behavior and call upon all Christians and people of conscience to take a stand against these despicable acts.

For those who would adhere to a Christian perspective, the demand of unqualified love of neighbor prohibits such manifest hatred. And for those inclined to its secular expressions, as citizens of this country we are all obliged to respect the dignity of every human being. This reckless and undisciplined emotionalism is a threat to every Godly faith, every reasonable morality, and every plausible definition of human decency.

Little lost

Josh Golub's letter of April 29 illustrates a dangerous inability to understand the underlying causes of terrorism. At the base of such tactics are a homeless people with little or no hope for the future. The Palestinians have been displaced since 1948 and will likely continue to express such hostilities until those who have been blind to their situation come to understand it and help bring about a change.

All people need a home, and I am not discounting the Israelis, but somehow a balanced picture that includes the Palestinians must develop. As long as the U.S. Government continues to miss the causes and see only the effects of terrorism as Golub does, actions such as those taken by Reagan against Libya will continue and so will the actions of terrorists.

Achieving an end to terrorism via current U.S. policy would require the elimination of the Palestinian people as a source of terrorism. We cannot really expect that a mere show of force against the Libyans or even directly against the Palestinians will change the underlying causes, in fact it will only aggravate them. Those who have been placed in such a position as to see terrorism as their only means of change have little left to lose.

Abortion

Lately there has been a lot of talk about abortion, and I feel that people are expressing their opinions without thinking about some of the problems that may lead up to unexpected pregnancies, which in turn may lead to abortions.

Have you ever sat down and watched a couple of hours of television? Within that time, I am sure you can view plenty of sex and violence. That is all our society watches these days. There are so much many pressures on Americans these days. Life is a rat race. Sex is a way to relieve tension. It is for pleasure. When the atmosphere is right, one thing leads to another. It's human nature!

Yes, I am aware of all the contraceptives available today. Yes, I agree more people should utilize them. But, I don't condemn people for having sex. I just think that the necessary precautions should be taken.

I recently read a column by Rusty Denton in which he stated that "Poverty for mother and child would be less of an issue if the government insisted that fathers pay child support and mother-support." I don't think that should happen. Are we forgetting about ERA and Womens Liberation?

If a college female gets pregnant and has to drop out of college along with her boyfriend, how is that going to leave them as far as having money to support a child?

I am in no way stating that I am pro- or anti-abortion because I really haven't thought much about the matter, but I am just presenting a point of view that I feel Mr. Denton and others may have overlooked.

On MTV

Much has been written and said about MTV. It seems those attacking MTV have the right idea. However, these attacks are aimed at a manifestation rather than the fundamental problem.

Video, without a doubt, is a viable art form, one which can capture the feelings of the modern age. But, as with all art forms video can be exploitative rather than expressive. Most of what masquerades as "art" on MTV seems at best an unclever visual promotion of a product — pop/rock-n-roll.

In this respect, the images portrayed in music videos (sexism, male-dominated sadism, ethnic steryotypical caricatures... need I go on?) parallel successful advertising techniques. Realizing this, we should attack the basis of this conceptual depravity: American societal values, and not only this relatively small commercial manifestation.

Violets are Blue and boring

By JOSEPH SHARTRAND
Collegian Staff

Violets Are Blue
Directed by Jack Fisk
Produced by Marykay Powell
Starring Sissy Spacek and Kevin Kline

Violets Are Blue tries to be a passionate film about two former lovers, who are reunited years later, and forced to face the vast differences between their lives.

The problem with this film is that it is too low key. The two main characters, Gussie Sawyer (Sissy Spacek) and Henry Squires (Kevin Kline), former lovers in the late sixties, become reunited years later. Squires must decide whether to leave his wife for Spacek, or to remain the loyal yuppie husband. Sawyer had become a famous photojournalist for big magazines, but she is lonely and wants to get married and have kids. Kline runs the local newspaper, has a wife and kid, and dreams of making it big in the newspaper business. Both Yuppies meet and dream of exchanging lives.

Spacek, in this film, doesn't display a wide range of emotions that a real person in this situation might show. When Spacek is covering a story in the middle of a war zone, she walks around as if she were shopping, not dodging bullets. Her only emotion is patronizing pity when she sees two children playing in the rubble. A real human being would be trying to survive, when everyone around them is dying, but she doesn't show an inkling of fear, or terror. When she returns home, she is as bland as ever, and calls herself a "jaded journalist", but her character comes across more as a romantic yuppie.

Spacek's portrayal of her character is all one note and her character has no strange quirks, or personality defects. She doesn't create a flesh and blood character.

Her lover, Henry Squires (Kevin Kline) is just as bad. His life is dull and it is dull to watch. Even during his passionate love scenes with Spacek, he is unexciting.

Kline and Spacek do not generate any electricity in their love scenes. Their love doesn't seem dangerous, or even exciting and there isn't any reason why we should care whether the Spacek-Kline relationship succeeds or fails. It doesn't mean much to either character because they aren't risking enough. Kline's and Spacek's characters aren't human enough to make the audience empathetic to their risks.

LIVEWIRE
BY TOM MIDDLETON

Lots of music coming up the next few days. Alot of it is free or only a few bucks. Anyway, you'll need a car to get to the more expensive shows.

Tonight, Max Creek is playing at Pearl Street. This band has a real smooth act that consists of Grateful Dead and various other cover tunes. If you like the Dead, you've probably already heard of them. The show will cost $5.

The Iron Horse Cafe will present a Boston folk sampling for $3. The show will include; Elmer Hawkes, Dean Stevens and Kenje Ogata.

Too True will open for Free Press at the Hatch. There will be an open microphone until 10:30 p.m. when the bands come on. Too True is a new "ska" band and Free Press is hard to define like 90 percent of the local bands.

The Stompers will be up in Brattleboro, Vt. at Flat Street. Not only will you have to drive for half an hour but you'll have to pay $8 to see them. If you wait, they will be playing somewhere else for less.

Cruza will play at Sheehan's Cafe in Northampton. There will be a $2 cover charge.

At 4 p.m. you can see Eighth Route Army and Universe at the Southwest Area pyramid as part of Southwest Week.

Friday, Moscow, Flashback, Watch the Teeth Kate and Swift Kick will be blasting at the Southwest pyramid. First band is on at 2 p.m.

Liquid Lesson will play at Sheehan's. This band does originals and they do have talent. It's gonna cost you $3 but if you're in Northampton you might want to check it out.

Katina's on Rte. 9 in Hadley will host Sass. There will be a cover of $2 or $3.

Shelf Life is playing at the Hatch, and if you want to drive into hopping Belchertown, you can catch Johnny B. and the All Night Boys at the Buck and Doe Lounge on Rte. 21.

Saturday, The Pajama Slave Dancers are playing at the pyramid at 2 p.m. These guys have been around the area for a few years and everytime I've seen them they've been lots of fun. They don't take anything too seriously and their music is easy to dance to.

The other campus show will be up in Orchard Hill. Starting at noon you can catch The Modern Pladz, Group Therapy and The Fools. This is all to celebrate Bowl Day...fun in the sun. If you like basic, F.M. radio rock 'n roll, you'll enjoy Bowl Day. If you need a bit more sophistication or humor go see the Southwest show.

The Llamas are playing Sheehan's. The cover charge is $3.

Eric Wood and the Wayout will be at the Iron Horse. This guy is a decent folk musician and it's only going to cost you $4.

Sass will be at Katina's for another show, Saturday night.

Sunday, The big Southwest Area concert will start at noon. This show will include John Cafferty and the Beaver Brown Band, The Souls and The Modern Pladz. John Cafferty is in the top 40s charts these days (We can just leave it at that).

If you have wheels and don't want get mixed up in the Southwest madness, there's an outdoor show down at the Woodbury Ski and Raquet Club in Woodbury, Ct. The lineup includes; Hot Tuna, Max Creek and The K-Man Band. Hot Tuna is made up of the lead guitarist and bassist from the old Jefferson Airplane. They usually put on a good show and there will be a good turnout for this one. Tix are $12 in advance and $15 at the gate.

Tickets are on sale for some good upcoming shows. The Del Fuegos will be at Flat Street May 8th. Tix are $10. Tix for Jerry Lee Lewis at pearl Street on the 28th are $22.50. When you catch your breath you might want to consider paying $9 for The Band at Pearl Street on the 15th.

Bowl Day & Southwest Day

Campus Concerts rock UMass into Spring

The Southwest Area will present John Cafferty and the Beaver Brown Band (below) and The Souls (above) as just a few of Sunday's lineup.

Shoah

Holocaust relived

You might have heard about Shoah. You may not have. But one thing's for certain, you'll be hearing a lot about Shoah next week. And the week after that, and the week after that. This film is a view of the Holocaust that people will be talking about for a long, long time.

The film is based on interviews with surviving victims of the Holocaust, and is said to be the most moving and human perspective of the horror that we should never forget, lest we let history repeat itself.

Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey outbidded the Pleasant St. Theatre for the film, and while cinemas around the area are charging up to $20 for admission, UMass is showing the film for radically reduced rates. Duffey is to be commended for making this important film accessible to the community, which is arguably the best education about the ultimate act of mankind's inhumanity to mankind that five bucks can buy.

Shoah is a documentary that is more than 9 hours long, and it will be shown in two parts at Memorial Hall at UMass from Sunday, May 4 until May 11. Tickets are available at the Fine Arts Center box office, and are $15 general admission, $10 for Five College Students, and $5 for UMass students.

Supreme Court makes ruling on choosing jurors

WASHINGTON (AP)—Prosecutors never may disqualify potential jurors based on their race, the Supreme court ruled yesterday.

The court's 7-2 decision curtailed dramatically the traditionally broad power of prosecutors to strike prospective jurors from trials by using "peremptory" or automatic challenges.

The justices said the exclusion of potential jurors from any criminal trial because of their race violates the equal-protection rights of defendants and of those people excluded.

WHY KEG BEER TASTES BETTER THAN COOKED BEER.

Ask most beer drinkers, and they'll likely agree: nothing tastes better than beer from a keg.

Ever since the days of Frederic Miller's original Plank Road Brewery, keg beer has always been fresher. That's because it isn't cooked to preserve it like most bottled and canned beers.

Well, now there's a beer that delivers that same fresh draft taste in a bottle. A beer specially cold-filtered instead of cooked, so it tastes like it was drawn straight from the keg.

to go in the third. Carr (assisted by Carmean) and then Fisk scored in the fourth period. UMass, while never in any real danger, still couldn't shake the pesky Green.

The officials, Robert White and Steve Roderick, did little to help. Calling the came like they were seeing lacrosse for the first time, the refs' frequent whistles didn't let UMass get into any flow, but that was no excuse.

Statistically, UMass had a huge shot advantage (46-21), enjoyed a 40-35 groundball advantage and won nine-of-15 faceoffs (McGovern was nine-of-14). UMass was 21-of-26 on clears and was called for eight penalties. Dartmouth made good on only 12-of-23 clears and was caught for nine fouls. Bavly, the latest in a row of goalies made to look like an All-American by UMass, made 13 saves.

Gorilla Grumblings: The win wrapped-up the New England title for UMass, as the Gorillas finished up their New England schedule with a 6-0 mark. . .senior defenseman Tom Aldrich left the game with a recurring bad back, but will play at Rutgers. Junior defenseman John Jordan missed his second straight game, with a bone bruise in his thigh, but said he hopes to play at Rutgers, too. . .UMass hasn't lost to Dartmouth over the past 15 years. . .Where does an Ivy League tuition go? The dining commons, the Gorillas found out as the team wolfed some excellent food at Dartmouth. Few were reminded of the UMass eating experience.

UMass seeks A-10 playoff title

Softball in NJ to face Temple

By ROGER CHAPMAN
Collegian Staff

NEW BRUNSWICK, N.J.—If you believe in jinxes, hexes, or plain bad luck, don't bother to read on any further.

But if you think that kind of stuff is just a crock of beans and doesn't mean a thing, then you share the opinion of the University of Massachusetts softball team, as they prepare for the opening round of the Atlantic-10 championships.

The Minutewomen, ranked 19th in the nation and regular season A-10 champions, will face Temple University today at 2 p.m. at Rutgers University, and will be looking to finish better than they have the past three years.

In 1983 and 1984, UMass was regular season champions and was the top seed going into the four-team tourney. Both times, the Minutewomen finished a disappointing third place, and also finished third last season when it wasn't sure if they would make the tournament at all.

This season is different, as are the attitudes among the Minutewomen.

"The kids are really pumped up for this," head coach Elaine Sortino said. "All we have to do is play our game. We have to play defense, hit the ball, and get good work out of our pitchers. There really isn't anymore to it than that."

By sweeping the University of Rhode Island on Tuesday, the Minutewomen captured the top seed in the tourney. URI is seeded second, with Rutgers and Temple seeded third and fourth respectively. The following is a capsule of regular season results against the other tournament seeds:

URI (26-21-1 overall, 6-4 in the conference): The Minutewomen were 8-0, 2-1 victors over the Rams on Tuesday, as UMass clinched the conference title. URI looked lost in the opener, committing five errors and were constantly kept off balance by the pitching of senior left hander Lynn Stockley. The Rams made things close in game two, but only because UMass had trouble hitting the slower than normal pitching of URI hurler Cathy Bade. If the seedings hold true to form, UMass and URI will probably meet for the championship on Saturday. UMass pounded URI game one starter Chris Ashburn for 11 hits.

Rutgers (26-12-2, 7-3): The Lady Knights managed to gain a split with UMass on April 12, dropping the opener 4-0 and taking the nightcap 3-1. Stockley was the winner in game one, tossing a one-hit shutout for what was then the ninth consecutive shutout thrown by the UMass pitching staff.

Temple (19-17, 6-4): UMass faced Temple the following day on April 13 in the second of back-to-back weekend doubleheaders. Another split was the result, as Stockley blanked the Lady Owls 3-0 on a four-hitter in game one.

The second game loss to Temple was the last conference game the Minutewomen lost.

Also at stake for the Minutewomen is a national tournament bid. A tournament championship would solve the issue on the spot, as the Minutewomen would be the top seed coming out of the northeast region of the NBAA division national tourney. A loss anywhere along the line wouldn't necessarily kill UMass tourney hopes, as the Minutewomen are still the number one team in the Northeast.

UM sidesteps Dartmouth, 8-3

Gorillas go 9-2

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

HANOVER, N.H. - The University of Massachusetts lacrosse team won't have to worry about being tired when they face Rutgers on Saturday after sleepwalking past Dartmouth College, 8-3 yesterday.

The Gorillas improved to 9-2, but didn't look impressive in doing so against a Big Green team that fell to 2-11. The UMass defense was excellent, but the offense continued to shoot like they were afraid to hurt the goalie, continually firing into Phil Bayly's feet or directly into his chest or stick.

"I'm disappointed, I really thought we'd have a better game than this," said UMass coach Dick Garber. "The effort was there, we were trying, the execution is what was absent."

Dartmouth, a team that has lost to three Division 3 teams (Williams, Guilford and Middlebury) and beaten only a Division 3 (Georgetown) and the worst Division 1 team (Boston College), actually had UMass caught in a 2-2 tie after one quarter.

The Gorillas opened the scoring when sophomore attackman Kelley Carr (three goals and one assist to break a recent slump) dodged his way to the goal and beat Bayly with 6:13 left in the first quarter. Senior midfielder Greg Fisk made it 2-0, taking a Carr feed and firing in a blast with 5:18 to go.

But Dartmouth answered right back. John Van Slyke (who scored all three Green goals, all of which were assisted by Rob Cote) took advantage of an unsportsmanlike conduct penalty on Seamus McGovern to ripa shot past Gorilla goalie Sal LoCascio with 4:06 left. Van Slyke scored again, trickling a low shot by LoCascio with 1:44 to go.

LoCascio played a strong game after that. Making 12 saves, the freshman and his defense (especially Gerry Byrne, Adam Rodell and Matt Woods) kept UMass in the game, like they did against St. John's, Yale and Harvard earlier this season.

The UMass offense is down to 11.2 goals-per-game, 8.8 over the last five games. The Gorilla defense, meanwhile, is allowing a stingy 6.6 gpp while LoCascio's personal mark is 6.0. Over that same five-game span, UMass has held opponents to 5.4 gpp.

"It's a trend that scares me," said Garber. "Eventually, the defense isn't going to have a great day and we'll be in trouble. We've got some great shooters, they just don't shoot well in the game. I wish I could tell you what the problem is, because then I'd tell the players."

Saturday night's game at Rutgers will determine the Gorillas' playoff future. A win over the ninth-ranked Scarlet Knights could put UMass in, a loss means the Gorillas must beat second-ranked Syracuse at home the week after.

Back to Dartmouth, unfortunately. The second period saw UMass run off three goals to take a 5-2 halftime edge. Carr (assisted by Fisk), junior attackman Greg Cannella and then junior middie Doug Musco (assisted by Tom Carmean) all notched goals.

Senior middie Rick Abbott went one-on-one 2:43 into the third period, and UMass had a commanding 6-2 advantage. But the Gorillas were unable to build on that lead. With Dartmouth double-teaming Carmean (who didn't score a goal for the first time in his collegiate career), the UMass offense sputtered and continued to let the defense bail them out.

Van Slyke made it 6-3 with 34 seconds

Minutemen lose Amherst bragging rights, 7-6

By [illegible]TT GERKE

Amherst College needed 11 innings, but the Lord Jeffs continued to hold on to Amherst bragging rights, defeating the University of Massachusetts baseball team, 7-6 at Lorden Field yesterday.

The Jeffs got 8 2/3 solid innings from starter Ron Raymond and a strong relief performance from John Nimmons, who got the win, to post the victory over the Minutemen. UMass sophomore outfielder Matt Sheran homered in the first inning to run his consecutive-game hitting streak to 21 games.

Steve Allen was the starter for UMass with Jeff Jensen (1-1) eventually taking the loss in relief.

"I'm disappointed," UMass manager Dick Bergquist said. "Our hitting was alright but I thought we could have done better. Their starting pitcher spotted the ball well and the fact that he hung in so long is a credit to him."

Amherst, 15-6-1, pushed across the winning run in the 11th when Paul Foye doubled to left-center and later came around on Randy Jackson's single to left.

The only reason the game even went into extra innings was because of a controversial call by home plate umpire Dave Tabin in the ninth inning.

The Minutemen, 15-18, had the bases loaded with two outs when Sean Flint hit a foul tip with two strikes. The game appeared to be over and the Amherst team swarmed out onto the field. Tabin ruled, however, that catcher Bill Kane had trapped the ball so it was not a third strike. Nimons, now 3-2 after getting the win, proceeded to throw a wild pitch and Rob Holiday scored to tie the game.

"That was a horrendous call," said Nimons. "Bill caught the ball. It was the worst call I've ever seen."

Amherst jumped out to a 3-0 lead in the first inning. Sheran answered with a solo homer to pull UMass to 3-1 after one inning but Amherst tallied twice more in the third to make it 5-1.

The Minutemen scored once in the fourth and a two-run blast over the centerfield fence by Jeff Cimini in the fifth inning made it 5-4. Darrin O'Connor homered in the seventh to tie the score but Mike Thaxton scored on Fred Woody's single in the eighth to give Amherst a 6-5 lead.

"I thought both umpires had tough games," said Amherst manager Bill Hurst. "The field umpire missed two calls, also. Jackson came through for us again, though. It was a big win."

Minuteman Mutterings: Ken Greer pitched 4-1/3 innings of relief for the Minutemen, allowing just one unearned run. . .The two calls that Hurst referred to were also controversial. In the top half of the fourth, Thaxton walked and was picked off on a play in which he was apparently back safely. In the UMass half of the fourth, Jay Zerner doubled to right center but tried to stretch the hit into a triple. The throw apparently had him by a good three steps but field umpire Steve Murray said Foye missed the tag and Zerner had himself a triple.

Heavy turnout reported in unionization vote

By CRAIG SANDLER
Collegian Staff

Turnout was heavy yesterday in an International Worker's Day election that will determine whether 1,100 University of Massachusetts professionals will unionize, and if so which of two unions will represent them.

State labor relations officials said results will be released by 5 p.m. today.

About 700 ballots were cast at Memorial Hall, according to Shirley DeMarco of the state Labor Relations Commission. 886 employees at UMass-Amherst were officially eligible to vote.

Voting took place simultaneously at the Amherst and Boston campuses. UMass-Boston human services director David Edmond, who facilitated the election there, said Boston had "a very good turnout" among its 250 eligible voters.

DeMarco said voting "was very heavy this morning and at lunch we had a good turnout. There haven't been the lulls we expected ... it's been very steady all day."

Her words were borne out by a thin but constant stream of people entering the building, some of them wearing union buttons.

Inside the voting room, two tables were staffed by observers from the labor commission; the state Board of Regents of Higher Education; and the competing unions, the Union of Professional Employees of the Massachusetts Teachers Association and the Office and Professional Employees International Union.

DeMarco said observers challenged about 60 of the 700 ballots cast. Most challenges came from the commission because some

REFERENDUM RESULTS

The votes on four of six referenda put to UMass undergraduates two weeks ago were counted late Wednesday night by volunteers at the Undergraduate Student Senate meeting. Two questions concerning the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group were decided April 15, but the others had remained uncounted due to a lack of student government volunteers. Final results are as follows:

The Union Program Council won a $3 increase in the Student Activities Fee to support its concert programs, 1,686 to 413.

On the same question, the Distinguished Visitors Program won a fee hike of $1.50 to bring speakers to campus, 1,624 to 509.

Students said they wanted the increased Fine Arts Center Fee to pay for concert staging, not summer programs, 1,569 to 603.

Voters objected to a $97 annual student fee, starting in 1997, to pay for a sports arena at UMass, 1,110 to 835.

They also objected to using an increase in the athletic fee for printing nonstudents' tickets to games, 1,625 to 485.

Columnist: 'Superwomen' do not change society

Goodman says that flexibilty is needed

By REBECCA THATCHER
Collegian Staff

A Boston Globe columnist last night called for changes in the public, private and corporate spheres to end the need for "superwomen."

"This generation is going to find that there are limits to the kind of success you can dress for," Ellen Goodman told 500 people in the Campus Center Auditorium.

Goodman described a superwoman as a woman who feeds her 2.2 children a nutrional breakfast, sends them to school, goes to her $50,000-a-year job, comes home and runs six miles, spends a quality hour with her children, cooks a Julia Child dinner and then spends the evening enriching her meaningful relationship with her husband, before they go to bed where she is multiorgasmic until dawn.

She said this type of woman has emerged because she does not ask for a different type of society. She is a woman who "has changed without upsetting society or upsetting men."

This is a "lopsided" change because women have received equal responsibility without equal rights, she said.

It is easier to get into politics, than to change the political system, or to win status in men's jobs (such as a doctor or lawyer) than to achieve status for women's jobs (such as a teacher or social worker), Goodman said.

There is also a "lingering inflexibility" in the workplace, she said, calling for more flexible hours and day care.

A source of the failure to change is the continuing need for the characteristics usually ascribed to women such as caring and nurturing. The use of the term narcissism is a response to this demand on women, she said.

"It isn't a coincidence that when men sought achievement, we called it success and when women did it we called it narcissism," Goodman noted.

Though the changes in society have left many men unsure of themselves, men have to make a committment to examine their values and attitudes, she said.

"Women have come as far as they can without help," she said, "A lot of men would prefer to be married to superwomen. . .so would a lot of women," she added, drawing laughter from the audience.

She urged an end to "the conspiracy of silence" between the sexes. Men and women have to talk to each other about the issues of work and family "before it is too late," she said.

Women often don't "put all the cards on the table" as far as their ideas about work and marriage are concerned, she said, so "the men feel they've made a contract for one women and get another."

Fifth annual gay rights march is tomorrow

Organizers expect about 1,000 people to participate tomorrow in the fifth annual Lesbian and Gay Pride March and subsequent rally in Northampton.

The participants will start the march at noon from Lampon Park in Northampton and will walk about one mile to Pulaski Park. "The whole march will then file into the park for the rally [at 1 p.m.]," said Mark Grzebien, an employee of the University of Massachusetts and a member of the UMass Lesbian, Gay and Bisexual Alliance.

"It keeps growing and growing every year," Grzebien said.

The Boston Gay and Lesbian instrumental band and Erica Thorne, a lesbian dancer, will perform. Gay community activists scheduled to speak include Margaret Cerullo, a member of the Gay and Lesbian Defense committee in Boston, who will lecture on gay parenthood. Comedienne Kieshya Salka will emcee the event.

"This is one of the catalysts that brings many people out of the closet."
— Mary Diaz, march organizer

The Gay Men's Alliance and Lesbian Alliance of Hampshire College will hold a dance tomorrow night at the Red Barn.

"We had 250 people last year from UMass," said Mary Diaz, a member of the Pride Planning Committee. She said the same number of participants from the University is expected to turn out this year.

"This is one of the catalysts that brings many people out of the closet," Diaz said.

Grezebien said, "We usually have problems with the town government but they managed to push the march through."

Diaz said a bookstore in the city which sells lesbian and gay periodicals is usually the object of threats during the week of the march, and this year is no exception.

However, she said all in all, "It's still fun; we get to yell and scream and what not," Diaz said.

'Accident is not over'

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union told a nervous world Thursday that radiation from the nuclear plant disaster was decreasing, but one of its diplomats said other countries should not relax because the "accident is not over."

The Kremlin presented a calm face, rejecting offers of help from the United States and other countries, but an international bone-marrow transplant organization said its offer to aid victims had been accepted.

Traditional May Day parades were held as usual, including one in Kiev, the Ukranian city of 2.4 million only 80 miles from the Chernobyl power plant where a reactor caught on fire Friday. State television showed colorfully dressed folk dancers performing there.

The cause of the accident has not been revealed, but Soviet radiation expert Pavel Ramzaev said when asked Thursday if it was a meltdown of the reactor core: "I suppose that is so."

There were conflicting reports about whether the reactor fire had been extinguished. U.S. intelligence sources had said Wednesday in Washington that it still raged and could burn for weeks.

Vitaly Churkin, second secretary of the Soviet Embassy in Washington, testifying before a House of Representatives subcommittee Thursday, was asked whether the fire had been put out. He said, "I don't know," and added: "The accident is not over with. That is clear. We have not told other countries that everything is OK and they can relax."

Sanctuary activists found guilty

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — A U.S. District Court jury on Thursday found six sanctuary movement activists guilty of conspiring to smuggle aliens into the United States illegally. Five other defendants were acquitted of the same charge.

The defendants also faced a variety of other felony and misdemeanor charges. Three of the 11 were found innocent on all counts, including James A. Corbett, a founder of the sanctuary movement.

A second founder of the movement, the Rev. John M. Fife III, 45, was convicted of conspiracy.

The jury of nine women and two men had deliberated for more than 47 hours over nine days since receiving the case April 17.

The trial itself had lasted just under six months.

Fife, a Presbyterian minister, also was convicted of two misdemeanor counts of aiding and abetting, and a felony charge of transporting an alien. He was acquitted of a misdemeanor count of aiding and abetting illegal entry of an alien.

The three people found innocent of all charges were Corbett, Wendy LeWin, 26, Phoenix, and Nena MacDonald, 38, of Lubbock Texas.

During their deliberations, jurors had asked only one question of substance of U.S. District Court Judge Earl H. Carroll — for a transcript of a brief, secretly recorded conversation, which they received last week.

UPC collecting foods at concert

By PEDRO M. PEREIRA
Collegian Staff

Students attending the Union Program Council's spring concert by the campus pond May 11 will be asked to donate canned foods to Jessie's House, a shelter for the homeless in Northampton, according to Lance Foley, talent coordinator for UPC.

Foley said he conceived the idea while "sitting around" the UPC office. "I just kind of threw it out. We talked about it a little bit," he said.

"We are not trying to do a Live Aid kind of thing," Foley said, just to provide UMass students with an opprtunity to "help people that are less fortunate." He stressed that donations will not be considered an admission charge to the free concert.

Brad Ferris, UPC business manager, said he is hopeful that students will make donations.

"If we get anything, it will be a success for the first year. More than 1,000 [donations] would be fantastic," Ferris said. "It's just one of those things where every little bit helps."

Ferris said about 8,000 people attended last year's concert.

Priscilla White, director of Jessie's House, said she anticipates that many of the concert-goers will make contributions.

"People really want to help," she said. "They just don't know how to go about doing it."

White said she hopes UPC's initiative becomes a tradition. Donations will be shared with other area shelters, she added.

Another UMass group, Students Against Hunger, is planning a "Mass Aid" benefit concert to help the hungry in Massachusetts, to take place next fall.

Disabilities still not addressed adequately, despite progress

By JOHN C. SHEEHAN
Collegian Correspondent

A panel of a mobility-impaired person, a blind person and a deaf person Wednesday night attracted about two dozen people to the last event of Disability Awareness Day, as the three assessed the progress of the disability rights movement.

Susan Patch of the Massachusetts Commision for the Blind spoke of her experience growing up without eyesight.

"No one thought about integrating disabled people when I was in high school," she said. "Public high school was not an option for me ... But compared to what we had, we have a lot."

Patch and the commission work to find jobs for blind people, whose unemployment rate is about 15 percent.

Chris Palanes, from the state Office of Handicapped Affairs, said the disability rights movement was an outgrowth of other movements of the 1960s.

"The real impetus was the other political movements. The black, women's and gay rights movements started and eventually the disabled picked up on these movements."

However, the disability movement developed more slowly, Palanes said, because "it's harder for disabled people to develop a positive sense of self-identity. I don't particularly enjoy a spinal cord injury and appreciate that fact," Palanes said.

The third member of the panel, Christen Johnson, a University of Massachusetts undergraduate and Miss Deaf Massachusetts, addressed the problems of the deaf.

"For many years a good part of the world labeled us deaf and dumb. They used to think deaf people were mentally retarded, but today people have accepted the deaf culture. We have values and language," she said, speaking in sign language through an interpreter.

At UMass, which has eight deaf students, Johnson said many services needed by the deaf are not provided.

Audience members with physical disabilities concurred that their needs are often neglected.

Jane Fraser, a first-year student, said, "As a whole, the services I have received as a disabled person have been inadequate. I went to my first year of high school in a library, and they used me as an excuse to get an elevator they should have had five years before. But there was nothing I could do."

Disability Day also featured two workshops and a demonstration of the wheelchair ramps on a UMass Transit bus parked outside the Student Union Building. The events were organized by Abilities Unlimited, an advocacy group formed in 1984 for disabled students.

Lisa Riskin, president of the group, said Amherst is a haven for many people with disabilities. But she added, "Some barriers on campus prevent people from entering certain buildings and majors.

"Society has placed very negative stereotypes on disabled people and this campus carries them over," she said.

Funding could come through in package

By NANCY KLINGENER
Collegian Staff

State Sen. John W. Olver, D-Amherst, told the Faculty Senate yesterday that the University of Massachusetts could still receive the funding it needs, if the request were made in the context of a long-range plan.

"I would like to see it in terms of a direct five-year plan laid out," he said. "I would hope to be able to come back here five years from now in a situation to be able to say that this was clearly recognizable as the best public university in the east, and recognized internally."

Olver said that "what started out as a very creative 'Funding for the Future' proposal" from UMass became one "you could hardly recognize" when the budgetary process was complete. "That $18.3 million dollars, which was very specific, had become a $19 million proposal on the part of the governor," with different elements, such as parts of the previous year's requests, added in and most of the current requests whittled down.

The problem, he said, was that the $19 million figure was "very difficult to refute."

"I, for one, saw enormous promise in the 'Funding for the Future' proposal," Olver said, and said he was "personally convinced" the state leadership "could be sold" the five-year proposal.

The senate later unanimously passed a motion which urged that certain items be given the "highest possible priority and be included in the FY 1988 state budget requests."

Included on the list were the University Library, the General Education plan, the junior year writing program, additional faculty positions and building maintenance.

The senate also approved 11 graduate courses, some bylaw changes and revisions to the academic calendars for 1987-88 and 1989-90.

Groups generate diplomacy

Diplomacy among nations can be realized through the exchange of ideas between non-governmental groups and political systems, a sociology professor from Dartmouth College said Wednesday night.

Elise Boulding, who served on the Board of Commissioners for the National Peace Academy, said non-governmental organizations, which include scientist, teacher, religious and other groups, are 'diplomatic generating' because members may use their skills to move freely among the realms of the United Nations and the nation-state systems.

"The UN and nation-state rely on this [non-governmental] community," Boulding said, referring to these organizations.

According to Boulding, the nation-state system relies on an intergovernmental structure of treaties and the UN relies on many outlets of expertise and information.

Yet it is the people in the non-governmental organizations who hold the power because they 'contribute to international security by introducing competence' in their fields, she said.

To move toward diplomatic and political action, rather than military action, Boulding said individuals should reshape their identities. Instead of belonging to a national group of scientists or teachers, Boulding said people should belong to an international network of people in similar fields.

She said, "Peace research tries to discover ways to get to the bargaining table without war."

Boulding's lecture was sponsored by the Five College Program in Peace and World Security Studies.

'Shoah' on campus next week

A nine-hour film on the Holocaust which will be shown on campus next week has been called a "remarkable documentary" by Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey, who outbidded a Northampton movie house to bring it to the University.

Shoah will be screened next Sunday through May 11 in Bowker Auditorium. The film is divided into two segments, which will be shown separately.

"It's unusual that a film in the commerical market, more or less, has the special quality of human emotions," said Duffey, who refused to say how much money he offered for the movie.

French filmmaker Claude Lanzman interviewed Holocaust survivors and others at the sites of concentration camps where more than six million Jews were killed.

The presentation is part of Holocaust Memorial Week, sponsored by a coalition of Jewish and other campus groups.

Workshops concerning Shoah wil be offered after the May 5 and 8 showings, 7:30 to 10 p.m. in Campus Center 803. Organizers will also be at Bowker to discuss the film after each showing.

Ticket prices are $15 for general admission, $10 for non-UMass college students and $5 with UMass identification. Tickets are on sale at the Fine Arts Center Box Office.

voters were not on a list compiled by the University. No estimate was available of how many ballots were challenged in Boston.

All the ballots were to be counted at the commission's offices in Boston, where DeMarco said the challenged votes will be reviewed by the commission, the regents and the unions. She added, "The ones we can't resolve will only be counted if none of the sides get a majority."

There were three options on the ballot: UPE/MTA, OPEIU or "no employee organization." If none of the options wins more then 50 percent a runoff will be held between the top two vote-getters.

UPE organizer Bing Carey said the heavy turnout "definitely improves our chances," but stressed, "there's a huge unknown vote there." Carey had predicted "no union" would win but that UPE/MTA would finish ahead of OPEIU.

OPEIU has estimated it would win a clear majority. Organizer Simon Keochakian said yesterday, "I have no reasons to think our projections have changed."

Overreactionaries

I was attacked. For the last month, I had worked hard to bring a controversial speaker to campus. The barrage of vitriolic directed at me for this culminated in a physical attack on me one hour before the scheduled speaker, Dr. Roger Libby, a former UMass professor was to speak. His subject? "Sexual Repression from the New Right and the New Left."

I caught several women defacing and vandalizing some of the 1000 posters I had put up in town and on campus. The police were summoned to inform them they had violated a statue of "malicious destruction to showbills."

These women, I gather, are radical feminists who support Women Against Pornography, a small militant group opposed to all forms of sexually explicit materials, lumping all of it as violent, or oppressive pornography. Furthermore, they are irate at Libby for his opposition to the ban against Playboy and Penthouse sales in the University Store last year. Also, they kept repeating that they could produce many women on campus who were sexually harassed by Libby, but I have yet to meet one.

In the final analysis, I withold judgement until the matters are proven one way or the other. Until then, he has a right to speak on this campus, and others have a right to hear him, and he should be allowed to. Persons interfering with those rights should know that the First Amendment guarantees them. They should not abridge the privilege by removing posters or trying to get the lecture cancelled. Until they can respect his right, the First Amendment is not alive and well at UMass. They are just as culpable as the Whitmore Administration which refuses and denies Libby his rights.

Under the Duke's thumb?

Gov. Michael S. Dukakis has been no true friend of the University of Massachusetts. So it is a formidable task to fathom why he was chosen as this year's commencement speaker.

In January, Dukakis suggested in a Boston Globe interview that building top-flight higher education should not be a high priority because the Bay State already has Harvard and MIT. "We're not California ... we're not Texas," he said.

Shortly thereafter, he put this philosophy into practice by recommending much less budget money than the University requested in almost every category. UMass Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey took great pains not to signal too much displeasure, telling the Collegian he would not "whimper and cry" about it.

We may never know whether Dukakis was invited to address the class of 1986, or whether he invited himself to seize the spotlight in an election year. It is unfortunate that the only current challenge to the governor comes from the smarmy Massachusetts right wing, so that not worrying about his left flank, he can lap up the adulation of the same students he disregarded in his budget recommendation.

In either case, why did the University choose him? If he asked to speak, were the chancellor and other administrators afraid of offending him and incurring worse monetary blows in years to come? If UMass invited him, was it in hopes of buying a better budget next year?

From Massachusetts' vast pool of insightful minds, the University has drawn an incumbent office-holder to make essentially a political appearance — not simply to share the stage, but to deliver the main address. It is hard to picture UMass at such a loss for eminent literary, academic, business and other leaders — or even for more appropriate political figures.

Some of the slimmest parts of Dukakis' recommendation have apparently been rectified as the 1987 budget makes its way through the state Legislature. But the absurdity of the commencement choice will not go away.

Letters from the editor

Larry Bouchie

Or, more accurately, "Letters from a former editor." Luckily, not only was I able to resign early (so I don't fail all of my courses), but the new editors have assented to let me write two more columns, as scheduled. Yes, it does pay to have friends in high places.

Forget about the fall foliage season. I don't want to hear about it. This is the foliage season worth watching. This is the time when the grass literally grows greener every day. This is the time when trees, shrubs, and flowers explode with colors that make the fall foliage look lame by comparison.

And let's not forget that no matter how splendid the weather can be in April and May, it just doesn't feel like summer when trees are still bare and lawns of grass are a dirty beige, speckled with olive green patches. A spring break for me is sitting outside in the evening, breathing the air that smells like summer is only around the corner.

Of course, spring brings another annual occurence to campus, thievery. Now that many students are at the bare end of haphazard school year budgets, it seems there are either more people inclined to steal, or there are thieves who are inclined to steal more.

Those people who think little of leaving a dorm room, apartment, bookbag, or office unattended for a short time are now discovering that one can trust others, but not at this time of the year. If students want to keep their jewelry, money, bookbags, or other belongings, they'll have to spend one more minute considering the worth of walking away from their possessions while they take a break.

I guess this year's commencement, featuring Gov. Michael Stanley Dukakis (who wields the UMass budget ax), signals that it will be "Dukakis and Duffey in '92." Strange bedfellows, indeed.

Which reminds me, will An Wang have to enlarge his office to accomodate his latest in a slew of honorary degrees? This spring's commencement activities nationwide will probably ensure that Wang will emerge as a leader in number of honorary degrees received.

If you can find the time, and you should, attend one of the multiple showings of the film Shoah next week. Though I've only read some of the numerous reviews of this flick, I have yet to see reviewers write anything bad about the film.

While the length of the film, 9 1/2 hours, seems a bit much, this documentary offers a quick course from WWII to the present about the Holocaust. Also, the campus sponsors for the film, including Chancellor Duffey, wisely decided to break the screenings into two parts.

The pseudo-intellectuals

Herb Ramy

I can deal with most of the annoying things about classes at the University. I can deal with professors who yell at me for being late but keep me 20 minutes beyond the allotted time. I can deal with it when the course I took as a gut turns out to be harder than anything else this semester. I can even deal with professors who think that their class is the only class at the University. The one thing I can't deal with, though, is a psuedo-intellectual.

A pseudo-intellectual is defined as one who professes to know everything about Einstein, Shakespeare, Nietzsche, and Freud, but who in reality can't even spell any of their names.

In class he'll be the one who will ask for a supplemental reading list, but when this person gets it he'll just smile and say, "I've read all of these already," in a voice loud enough so that everyone is sure to hear it.

It becomes sickening when the professor pauses after making a point. The pseudo-intellectual will begin speaking. This person will say that they have a question, but all they say is: "So in essence what you're saying is...," as they repeat the lecture verbatim. They seem to take great pride in having the same ability as a parrot.

Unfortunately, I am an English major and have to deal with pseudo-intellectuals on a regular basis. Bartlett Hall must be a breeding ground for them. Statistically, 80% of all the pseudo-intellectuals on campus are English or Journalism majors. The reason for this is probably that it is much easier to bullshit about Poe's intentions in a particular line of poem than it is on a math problem. One and one always equals two.

They love classes where plays must be read aloud. Instead of mumbling through the part like any self-respecting student would do, they stand up, adopt a Laurence Olivier manner, and say the lines loud enough to wake you up.

The pompousness of these individuals really comes through when an author like Stephen King is mentioned in class.

Looks of disgust come over their faces as they comment on how novels such as his are too simple and should be left for the masses to read. I guess a person must die in anonymity to be considered a great author. Personally, I would rather be rich and famous before I die than just famous after. Even worse, I have seen copies of The Shining, and Salem's Lot in the posession of pseudo-intellectuals. Unlike most people, they wrap these books in a different book cover to hide their true feelings.

I guess we'll never be able to do away with the pseudo-intellectual. As long as there are intelligent people in this world, there will be those who will try to imitate them. Now if you'll excuse me, I want to get back to reading Cujo (without a cover of course). I guess I don't mind being one of the masses.

Negligent on safety

It should be clear to anyone who has followed events that the disaster in Chernobyl is another example of Soviet policy on human life. This accident is of worldwide concern but the Soviets neglected to inform the world, or their own people, of the accident until it was discovered by neighboring nations.

The Soviets see human life as expendable. People are the servants of the government; burdens to be fed, clothed, employed and housed. There are those who will argue that the USSR built these reactors without containment vessels to save money, but the cost of the containment vessel is only a small proportion of the total cost. This decision to delete the most effective safety feature is a good example of a negligent policy and a lack of value for human life.

If the Soviets have so little concern for their own people, imagine their lack of concern for the rest of the world. We in the US make decisions to protect and benefit our people and mankind. These elements are left out of the Soviet decision-making process. Before you criticize your own government, be sure you take a look around. Appreciate the government that serves you, and know that it is in service for you, not vice-versa.

Why chance it?

Re William Spain's column on leering: Mellow out, Spain. Nobody minds your looking; what you must not do is react.

Yes, this means no leering. Likewise no catcalls, lipsmacking, suggestive remarks or whistling. For every woman who likes that sort of thing, there are five who consider it harassment.

Why take a chance? Keep your appreciation to yourself like a civilized adult, and we can all enjoy the sunshine.

Max Roach smiles proudly as he stands before a sign in London park named after him.

Park named after Max Roach

Internationally acclaimed percussionist Max Roach was recently honored in London when a park was named after him. The Max Roach Park in the Brixton neighborhood of the city was named after Roach for his many contributions to jazz and the fight for equality.

Roach, an inductee in the Hall of fame of the International Percussive Arts Society, has been a professor in the Afro-American studies and music departments at UMass since 1972. He holds honorary doctorates from the New England Conservatory and from Wesleyan University.

Roach first came to musical prominence in the 1940s and 1950s as a pioneer of the be-bop revolution along with jazz giants Charlie Parker, Dizzy Gillespie, Miles Davis, Clifford Brown and Bud Powell.

He has actively expanded his performing interests by creating recordings with gospel choirs, duets with Anthony Davis, Archie Shepp and a unique percussion ensemble, M'Boorn Repercussion.

BLACK AFFAIRS

Speakers sees 'only two worlds'

By KATHRYN KIRBY
Collegian Correspondent

"There are not three worlds [First, Second and Third], only two, the oppressor and the oppressed," said Josie Fanon to an audience of over 150 in the Campus Center Wednesday night.

Fanon, widow of Martiniquean psychiatrist, writer, activist and social theorist Franz Fanon, was the guest speaker at this year's W.E.B. DuBois lecture.

Speaking through an interpreter, she discussed the association of Fanon and DuBois, in French. "Each man, within his own sphere of activity ... began with his own personal experience of oppression, especially that of oppressed black men — the black people of the US for DuBois and the Algerian people for Fanon."

Both men were effective internationalists in that their writings focused on international political action. Despite the impacts these two men had on blacks throughout the world, there are still restrictions thrown at them by their detractors, she said.

According to Fanon, both her late husband and DuBois were harmed by "those who are threatened by their passion and by their vision of the New World."

Fortunately, "Fanon's detractors have not been able to prevent his work from having a considerable impact from the very moment of its publication nor the revolutionary and national liberation movement of the 1960's," she added.

Fanon has been to this country on four occasions. She resides in Paris. Like her late husband, she specializes in international politics of the Third World. In recognition of her husband, she has acquired Algerian citizenship.

Minority recruitment called failure

BOSTON (AP) — A minority hiring program begun one year ago by about 25 of Boston's major businesses has not met its goals, say those familiar with it.

The Jobs Consortium program was designed to provide 300 to 400 entry-level management jobs in Boston corporations in one year for members of minority groups.

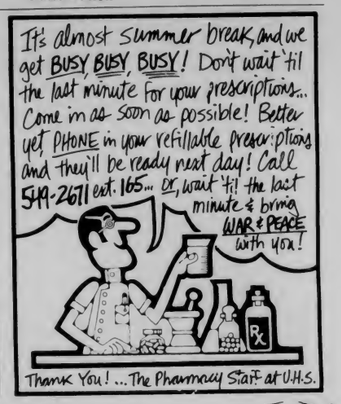
It was organized by the Coordinating Committee, informally called the Vault, a group of chief executive officers of about 25 major companies in Boston.

John Larkin Thompson, president of Massachusetts Blue Cross and chairman of the Vault, and Peter Bertchmann, vice president for human resources at New England Telephone Co., who was in charge of the program until December, acknowledged the program has not had significant results, The Boston Globe reported yesterday.

They declined to say how many members of minorities had been hired through the program by companies connected with the Vault.

But other, unidentified sources told the Globe fewer than 50 of about 1,000 Boston area minority college graduates whose resumes were sent to Vault companies were hired.

Thompson and Bertschmann said the program was begun last May after most compnies had filled new job openings.



They also said it was difficult to design a minority hiring program for companies that have very diverse personnel needs.

But some civil rights leaders and minority advocates said the results reflect a lack of will on the part of some major companies in Boston to racially integrate the work force.

"The failure of the Jobs Consortium is a sad commentary on the status of corporate priorities given to the issue of minority employment in managerial positions," said Barbara Arnwine, a co-leader of the Greater Boston Civil Rights Coalition.

"Clearly the most advanced companies in this country — many of which are members of the consortium — could have designed a program that would have been workable," she said.

"Their failure to implement such a program is no reflection on the availability of qualified minorities," said Ms. Arnwine, a lawyer with the Lawyers' Committe for Civil Rights Under Law. "It is more a question of corporate will and commitment."

FRIDAY FILM FOLLIES

By DON LIPPER
Collegian Staff

A true story: in 1980 a group of educators in New Jersey took two groups of schoolchildren and performed an experiment on them. One group sat in a room and did nothing. The other group of children listened to a comedy album for a half an hour. The two groups were then given multiple choice and essay tests to complete. The group that listen to comedy performed much, much better than the other group. Moral: if you want to do better at schoolwork, subject yourself to comedy.

You will have a fantastic chance to improve your mind and maybe your cum if you go to the Amherst Cinema this weekend. The cinema is showing three, count 'em Three Monty Python Films! Life of Brian (for those of you who have been living under rocks for the past decade) is the irreverent comedy about the life of a guy named Brian (surprised?) who was Jesus' next door neighbor. This funny film is a sardonic look at all the world's religions. It's sure to poke fun at, or offend everyone. See it. In Monty Python and the Holy Grail the troop lampoons the Aurthurian legend. In their latest film, Britain's gang of six tries to sort out The Meaning of Life. This is the film you've all heard about, it's the one with "that scene" in it. The film is a series of skits that looks at each of the chapters of man's life. If you've seen any or all of these films before I would suggest seeing them again. I've practically made a career out watching Monty Python movies, and I still find new things to laugh at with each viewing. Plus you just can't compare these movies on video to seeing them on the big screen. Nuf said?

The malls are offering a mound of movies (that's what a group of movies is called, you know like a gaggle of geese, a congress of idiots, etc.) Blue City stars two of Hollywood's brat-pack, Judd Nelson and Ally Sheedy in a murder mystery.

Jojo Dancer Your Life Is Calling is an autobiographical film starring, co-written, produced and directed by Richard Pryor.

Someone is booking really good foreign films at the Mountain Farms Theater. I don't know who it is, but I definitely like the trend. Federico Fellini's latest film, Ginger and Fred stars Giuiletta Masina and the great Marcello Mastroinni as a couple of has-beens who are asked to come out of decades of retirement for one last grab at glory on the television variety show "We are Proud to Present." The film is supposed to be a skewed look at

A-10 Tourney Notebook

Frattaroli, Stockley honored

By ROGER CHAPMAN
Collegian Staff

NEW BRUNSWICK, N.J. — Carol Frattaroli, the University of Massachusetts' junior second baseman, and Lynn Stockley, the Minutewomen's senior left-handed pitching ace, have been named player-of-the-week and co pitcher-of-the-week by the Atlantic 10.

Frattaroli collected 10 hits in 18 at-bats over the week as UMass went 5-1 to clich the A-10 regular-season title.

Stockley, winning the award for the fourth straight week, was 2-1 during the week to raise her record to 17-2. She beat St. Joseph's 7-0 with a two-hitter and no-hit Boston College for a 3-0 win.

Pop Flies: Including the volleyball season, Elaine Sortino as a coach has a record of 70-15 this school year. The UMass volleyball was 36-8 in 1985. . .Temple's run in the first inning represented the first time all season that a team has scored a run in the first inning against the Minutewomen. UMass holds a 38-1 first-inning advantage over opponents. . .Temple's run in the first was also earned, snapping Stockley's streak of of innings without an earned run at 54. The last earned run she allowed came on April 15 during a 7-1 win at Springfield College.

Penn State head coach Sue Rankin said that UMass, "has more experience, the hitting and the pitching to win the tournament." Rankin called UMass, "a real strong all-around team."

Frattaroli leads the team in hits with 45and at-bats with 134. She has also had hitting streaks and five and six games. She is batting .336. As a team, UMass is hitting .295. This marks the first time UMass has slipped under .300 as a team this season. Sophomore right fielder Chris Ciepiela leads the UMass attack at .370.

Injuries force Reid to cancel spring game

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

If you've ever thought about playing college football, now may be the time.

The annual University of Massachusetts spring football game has been reduced to a "final practice" because of all the injuries the Minutemen have suffered in practice.

Ten players, nine on defense, have been sidelined until the summer because of injuries, some major. One offensive player, projected starting tight end Mike Kelley, may miss next season entirely with a serious knee injury. Kelley missed most of last season with a shoulder ailment.

Saturday's outing in McGuirk Alumni Stadium will be mainly for the area press to shoot a few pictures. The team will undergo its final practice, but not much else. A clinic featuring some high school and college coaches will take place prior.

Among those injured are linebacker Vito Perrone, punter-defensive tackle Dimitri Yavis, defensive lineman Mike Kowalski, nose guard Steve Robar, linebacker Todd Rundle, linebacker Dan Sullivan, linebacker Kevin Oullette and linebacker Bruce Lemieux.

Football Findings: In the current depth chart, the offense is a strong two-deep at all positions, especially on the line. The defense, due to the injuries, is dotted with many players that haven't seen much action in the past. . .one bright spot is freshman linebacker Drew Comeau, who is starting at one of the linebacker spots. Comeau suffered a serious leg injury in high school and this srping is important for his comeback.

around the crease and from the midfield.

Goaltender Jim Gilman, a sophomore, has allowed only 7.1 goals-per-game and has a save percentage of .578.

"We've been working on some different things on defense," said Garber. "Rutgers is so balanced, that our defensive guys will have to work with a variety of looks, including something new for us, a matchup zone. We have some time to put it in, so hopefully it'll work out OK. The defense has bailed us out of the last few games, and they'll be needed again."

That defense, anchored by freshman goalie Sal LoCascio (6.1 goals-against, .681 save percentage) has allowed only five gpp over its last five games. Crease defenders Tom Aldrich and Gerry Byrne, both seniors, have been outstanding. Newcomers Adam Rodell, Matt Woods and Jeff Salanger, along with sophomore Scott Craig, have played well. Junior defender John Joran, a hard-hitting junior-college transfer, will miss his third straight game with a deep thigh bruise suffered against Harvard. He will be missed.

What's been missed most lately has been UMass' offensive punch. The Gorilla offense rips the net up in practice, but misfires in the games. After beating Brown 13-8 and Boston College 17-2, the UMass offense hasn't broken 10, managing only 15 goals over the past two games, an 8-7 overtime loss to Army and an unimpressive 8-3 win at Dartmouth.

Junior All-American Tom Carmean (33-18-51) leads the UMass attack. Junior Greg Cannella has slowed of late, but stands at 18-16-34. Sophomore Kelley Carr (20-10-30) and senior Greg Fisk (18-11-29) have also been dangerous scorers. Senior Seamus McGovern has been strong in the face-off circle all season, and will have a tough battle with Disciorio.

"The offense is good, I just wish I knew what was going on with the shooting," said Garber. "If we run our offense like we're capable, we're tough. If we don't, the better teams like Rutgers will hurt us. I think we'll come out ready to play."

"The Rutgers game is the season," said McGovern. "The whole team, especially the seniors, should come out gunning. We want that playoff spot. We have had it as our goal all season. This is it."

Gorilla Grumblings: C.W. Post, the number seven team in the poll, lost to 14th-ranked Adelphi, 20-10 on Monday. Post is one of the teams fighting UMass to make the Top 10. Post face Army on May 10.

Rutgers has two Longmeadow High products on their roster. Pat Dawson, a junior defenseman, and senior defenseman Gene Johnson. UMass has three Longmeadow graduates on its roster: Fisk, Woods and freshman Greg Collins.

One down: softball edges Temple, 3-2

By ROGER CHAPMAN
Collegian Staff

NEW BRUNSWICK, N.J. - The University of Massachusetts softball team had to remedy a case of opening-round jitters yesterday, as the Minutewomen had to come-from-behind to defeat Temple University, 3-2, in the opening-round of the Atlantic 10 tournament at Rutgers University.

"We were really very tense out there. We need to relax a little more," UMass head coach Elaine Sortino said. "But it's good that we got it out of our systems today. I think we will be all right for our next game."

That next game will come against Rutgers today at 1 p.m. The Lady Knights, seeded third in the four-team double-elimination tournament, notched a mild upset by beating second-seeded Rhode Island, 3-0 in the second game of the day. UMass is now 34-7 on the season and has won four straight.

"It really doesn't matter who we'll play, because we are going to have to beat everybody here to win this thing," Sortino said. "Rutgers is a very good team, but we know what we have to do."

UMass advances in A-10 playoffs

What the Minutewomen need to do is get off to a better start then they did yesterday. Senior left-hander Lynn Stockley raised her record to 18-2 on the season, going the distance and striking out three batters. However, Stockley wasn't at her best and had to overcome a shaky first inning that saw her throw three wild pitches and fall behind 1-0.

Temple scored when Owl catcher Robin Boyd lifted a sacrifice fly to left field, scoring designated hitter Chris Johnston. Stockley also gave up two hits in the inning, but only allowed one more the rest of the game.

The Minutewomen erased the 1-0 Temple lead in the third, when sophomore catcher Ilene Freeman drilled a bases-loaded two-out double to the gap in left-center. Junior second baseman Carol Frattaroli, sophomore shortstop Paige Kopcza and senior center fielder Sally Maher, all of whom had singled with two outs, scored on the hit.

Those would be all the runs Stockley needed as she cruised through the middle innings with ease. Temple, 19-18, did mount a rally in the sixth inning, when Kim Dempsey singled to center and stole second with one out. After Donna Marino's fly-out to left, Johnston lofted a high fly ball to left that caught a strong wind and glanced off the glove of junior Emily Bietsch.

Dempsey scored on the play, but Johnston was gunned down at third on a perfect relay from Kopcza.

Stockley gave up a lead-off walk in the seventh, her free pass of the game, but the UMass defense rallied around their ace, with Stockley throwing out Temple third baseman Kim Seitzinger for the final out.

The Minutewomen tagged Temple starter Marge Lavage (10-10) for seven hits. Maher and Kopcza both were two-for-three while Stockley helped helped her own cause with a single in three trips.

Yesterday's opening-round victory sets up another meeting between the Minutewomen and the Lady Knights. The two teams met earlier this season at NOPE Field when they split a doubleheader.

UMass won the opener 4-0 and dropped the nightcap, 3-1. The starting pitcher for UMass has not been announced by Sortino, but sophomore right-hander Lisa Rever should get the nod if the season rotation holds true to form.

Rutgers, 27-12-2, will have Sue Gallagher on the mound for the game. Gallagher beat Rever in 10 innings in their last meeting.

Yesterday's win, as well as the remaining games in the tournament, will have regional significance as well as the Minutewomen are still in the running for a bid to the NCAA tournament as the top-ranked team in the Northeast. Like basketball, the softball tournament is divided into regions and UMass is currently the top team in the Northeast. Two teams, the top team in the region and one at-large team, will make the tourney, 16 teams nationwide qualify for the playoffs.

Yesterday, the University of Connecticut, ranked second in the Northeast, and third-ranked Adelphi University split a doubleheader in Storrs. If the Minutewomen can capture the A-10 championship on Saturday, a national bid is certain as UMass would represent the Northeast region.

9th-ranked Knights host no. 10 UMass

It's Crunch Time.

The University of Massachusetts lacrosse team has beaten the teams it should have beaten, it has captured the attention of UMass sports fans and it has attained national recognition.

But that's not enough, not for the players, not for the coaching staff, and certainly not for the fans. Tomorrow night at Rutgers University, the Gorillas have a final step to take: Making the national playoffs.

UMass, ranked 10th in the nation, will face Rutgers, the number nine team in the poll at 7:30 p.m. in a game that should determine which team makes the NCAA playoffs.

There is a ten-team poll in the Division 1 playoff setup, and this game is critical to the chances of both teams. It is the final game of the season for the Scarlet Knights, 9-3, while UMass must still play at second-ranked Syracuse on May 9.

"You can't say that if we lose, we're out, but that's what will probably happen," said UMass coach Dick Garber. "We need a win against one of the top teams to make it, and Rutgers could be it. This is the most important game of the season so far."

UMass hasn't qualified for the playoffs since 1981, Rutgers has been in a tourney dry spell since 1974. Both teams have young rosters and a playoff berth means a lot for both programs.

"I've said from the start of the season that our goal was to make the playoffs," said Garber. "This is a good lacrosse team, we have that kind of ability. Now we have to go down there are prove it against a good team."

Rutgers has lost only to second-ranked Syracuse, sixth-ranked Navy and eighth-ranked Army (11-7). The Scarlet Knights only other common opponent with UMass is St. John's, who they beat 10-2. On Wednesday, Rutgers tuned-up for the Gorillas with a 15-8 win over Drexel.

Leading the Scarlet Knights is junior attackman Ed Trabulsy. A probable All-American, Trabulsy has scored 26 goals and dished out 17 assists for 43 points. Junior attackman Brad Fish is at 13-16-29. Right behind him is senior midfielder Gregg Fried at 19-9-28. Middie Dave Disciorio (21-4-25) is the face-off man, and a good one. Add senior attackman Jeff Lynch (20-3-23) and outside of Syracuse, Rutgers is the most explosive, balanced attack UMass will face this season, with threats both on the Gay rights advocates march and 'celebrate'

Balloons, banners, and singing carried the afternoon as about 1,000 supporters of gay and lesbian rights marched through Northampton on Saturday in the fifth annual Gay Pride March.

"I'm here because I won't stay home in fear," said Kol Goodstein, a student and staff member at the University of Massachusetts.

The parade began in Lampon Park in Northampton at 12:30 p.m. and proceeded one mile to Pulaski Park, as marchers chanted, "People united will never be divided."

"Today's a day to feel power and security," said Patsy White, who was a "peacekeeper" for the march.

Peacekeepers, or volunteer security staff, "help keep the march going, trying to keep people safe," explained Caroline, a peacekeeper who refused to give her last name for fear of losing her welfare benefits.

At Pulaski Park a music group, No Regrets, and several other performers entertained the marchers.

"We're here to celebrate our unity, and let people know that we're here to stay," said Mark Clukey, a UMass residence hall assistant and member of the Lesbian, Bisexual, Gay Alliance.

The marchers encountered one group of anti-gay protesters, a church group from Easthampton.

About 20 members of Victor Chapel, a Christian fellowship, occupied the stairs on the side of the Academy of Music, next to Pulaski Park. "We're here to make a stand for God," said their pastor, Doug Marcotte. "We're really here to save them. We're a Bible-believing, Bible-preaching church."

Marcotte's group was met by peacekeepers who chanted, "Hey hey, ho ho, homophobia has got to go." Several police officers stood between the two groups, but there were no disturbances.

One protester, dressed as a devil, was accompanied by two women in chains. "I'm here to tell people they're in public

'No union' comes out ahead; runoff possible

Unionization is rejected for a third time, unless challenged ballots force second vote

By CRAIG SANDLER
Collegian Staff

"No union" and the Office and Professional Employees International Union were the top vote-getters in last Thursday's University of Massachusetts union election, and a runoff between the two options may be held pending a review of challenged ballots.

Results of the vote released late Friday afternoon indicate that for the third time in eight years, the Union of Professional Employees of the Massachusetts Teachers Association has failed in a bid to unionize UMass professional employees.

Of 846 approved votes, the "no union" option received 435; OPEIU got 259; and UPE/MTA received 152.

The focus of the unionization battle now shifts to a May 12 meeting in Boston, in which 64 ballots that were officially challenged during Thursday's vote will be reviewed.

Several ballots were challenged by the two unions vying to represent the professionals, OPEIU and the Union of Professional Employees, because their polling place observers felt the votes were cast by workers who did not fit the "professional" classification. But most challenges came from the state Labor Relations Commission in cases where voters were not on a list compiled by the University.

The challenged ballots will be reviewed by representatives from the two unions, the commission, and the state Board of Regents of Higher Education. Every ballot which all four parties agree is valid will then be added to the vote totals.

John Connolly, the head of OPEIU's Amherst drive, said through a spokesperson, "We always expected a clear victory. We are greatly encouraged by the fact that the union vote was so strong. We look forward to a runoff."

The spokesperson, Kathy Burton, said OPEIU representatives will seek a runoff based on the strength of the pro-union vote. 411 of the validated votes, or 49 percent, favored unionization under either OPEIU or UPE/MTA.

RESULTS

NO UNION	435
OPEIU	259
UPE/MTA	152

51 percent of the validated ballots favored no union.

64 challenged votes may be added pending review May 12.

Burton predicted OPEIU will be supported by many of the challenged ballots. But she added that the union may take legal action to challenge the "professional" status of some of the voters who cast challenged ballots.

The rival union, the Union of Professional Employees, would not come out ahead even if it were supported by all 64 challenged votes.

UPE/MTA is an affiliate of the Massachusetts Teachers Association, which already represents faculty, clerical and library workers at UMass-Amherst. Attempts by UPE/MTA in 1978 and 1982 to unionize professional employees failed. UPE/MTA officials were unavailable for comment Friday.

Low grades qualify students for scholarship—with a hitch

Two University of Massachusetts graduates are offering a $350 scholarship to "underachievers" as an incentive to improve academic performance.

James Kwiecinski, a 1975 UMass graduate, and his wife Cynthia, class of 1977, are accepting applications from any full-time student who has completed at least one semester at the University and has a grade point average of 2.85 — or less.

The catch? "I'm then committing them to get a 3.5 or better for fall 1986," Kwiecinski said.

The winner of the $350 will then be chosen from those who meet that commitment. "I'll pick them out of a hat," he said.

The scholarship, named the "Kelimegs" award after the Kwiecinskis' daughters, Meaghan, 2, and Kelly, six months, was originally planned as three $100 scholarships, but "I decided that wasn't enough of an incentive," he said.

Kwiecinski, now a real estate agent in Holyoke, said of his time at UMass, "I am a person who didn't always live up to his potential; I was even on academic probation for one semester ... I did turn around and ended up with 3.5s and 3.7s for a couple of semesters."

'A Class Act' finishes

By STUART GAMBLE

More than 200 seniors and Physical Plant workers donated their time Thursday through yesterday to help restore the 12th floor of the University of Massachusetts library tower in the first stage of the "Mass Transformation" project.

The weekend's work was called "A Class Act" because only seniors were eligible to participate. The project will be open to all classes next September, when Mass Transformation will swing into high gear and renovate the library from top to bottom.

According to Anne McCrory, student co-coordinator, the project was conceived by the Campus Awareness Committee, a student-administration board which explores ways to improve the campus, and will involve 2,000 to 4,000 volunteers.

McCrory said the project will include "all study floors" of the library. The UMass art department is holding a contest for murals to be painted in the stairways and possibly in the elevator waiting lobby.

McCrory said the paint and other

Panelists: Struggle is root of Mideast violence

Members of a panel examining US foreign policy last week at the University of Massachusetts concurred that the Palestinian struggle for a homeland is at the root of violence in the Middle East, and criticized US actions in the region.

About 60 people listened to the four panelists in the Campus Center, at an event sponsored by the Radical Student Union.

Mansur Al-Hassan, a member of the General Union of Palestinian Students in Massachusetts, said "We Palestinians denounce terrorism and we have said that all along. Our targets are military ... but nobody wants to believe us."

Mulugeta Agonafer, an Ethiopian graduate student at UMass, said the US never forgave Libyan leader Moammar Khadafy for closing an American base in Libya during the early 1970s and for his role in raising oil prices in 1973.

"Certainly, the US does not want someone like Khadafy as a ruler in that area," he said.

Debbie Friedman of New Jewish Agenda, a group opposed to Israel's occupation of neighboring territories, said the US bombing of Libya last month escalated tensions in the Middle East and undermined the credibility of the United States.

She said the only way to reduce terrorism in the region is "some kind of two-state solution, which will involve Israel withdrawing from the occupied territories and for both groups to talk about how peace can be achieved."

David DuBois, who teaches Afro-American studies and journalism at UMass, said the United States aims for "dominance, consumerism and consolidation under and around the American way of life."

Hassan said, "The Middle East is going from bad to worse. The only thing I see is a chance of another war."

Debate team finishes strong

The University of Massachusetts Debate Team has wrapped up one of the most successful seasons in its history, finishing ninth out of 64 teams in the National Debate Tournament held recently at Dartmouth College.

"There is a rigorous qualification process just to get into the nationals ... We did exceptionally well in a number of areas," said Joe Willmore, director of the team.

UMass boasts the debate duo of Danny Povinelli and Mark Friedman, who were ranked as the top two-person team going into the Dartmouth tournament. Povinelli finished third out of 128 college representatives, and together with Friedman gained the second-highest point total.

"The tournament was a bit of a disappointment to us," said Friedman, a sophomore political science major. "We were killing them until we lost sight of the big picture in the last round. They did to us what we usually do to win."

Other strong finishers at the tournament were first-year UMass students Stacy Kinnamon and Dayna Scott, who Willmore said "came to UMass to debate and are often overlooked."

supplies will be provided by the Physical Plant, but said she believes additional supplies will be provided by UMass alumni, parents of students and other friends of UMass, like merchants and corporations.

Stacy Roth, also co-cordinator of the project and former Student Government Association campus president, said she also served on the Campus Awareness Committee, and added, "I was interested and wanted to become involved."

The project will "build pride to have people get involved and everyone is volunteering," she said. "Not only students but the community is involved."

Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey donated time Saturday, painting alongside Roth and McCrory.

Other students who volunteered said they were enthusiastic about the project.

Zoology major Sarah Oulton, who was sanding the walls before painting, said, "I've lived in the library for three and a half years and I'd rather donate my time than money."

Roger Cherewatti, head of the UMass Physical Plant department, said, "The project is going great and the students are fantastic."

Cherewatti predicted "A Class Act" will save the University approximately $50,000 worth of contractor work and the entire Mass Transformation project will save about $250,000.

The senior project began Thursday night and continued through Sunday. Students who participated were served refreshments provided by UMass Food Services.

Designers to show 'sunsational' clothes

"Sunsational Fashions," a student-organized fashion show, will bring glamor to the area at 8 p.m. tomorrow in the Campus Center Auditorium.

The two-part show will present the latest works of five-college clothing designers as well as those of local retailers, with the intention of getting local designers noticed, said Beth Marshall, chief organizer of the event. The clothes will be modeled by a team of 23 University of Massachusetts students.

Tickets for the event will cost $2 and proceeds will go to the American Cancer Society, Marshall said.

A 10-foot screen will be mounted above the stage, making the models appear larger than life, which Marshall said is "the up-and-coming thing in fashion and fashion shows."

"The biggest problem is getting the idea across to people that it is not another rinky-dink show," she said. "There is a lot of talent out there."

One of the designers from Mount Holyoke College has traveled all over the world and had her work shown in Japan and China, Marshall said.

The show is the creation of the "Fashion Five," the primary organizers of the event. Marshall said preparation has been "a lot of work for everyone."

Local retailers have donated time and resources to the show and have been "very cooperative," she added.

bondage. We want to set them free from bondage.

"Homophobia is a sin, homosexuality is a sin. These people I have in chains are like homosexuals in Satan's hands," said the protester, who refused to give his name. He told marchers, "You're in bondage and I love it."

"We love it, too," a marcher replied.

After 20 minutes police asked the church members to leave; they complied. "We made our point," Marcotte said.

Meanwhile, gay rights supporters sang and danced nearby.

"It's great," said Eric Hansen, a marcher. "They (the protesters) stimulate more controversy. Paul Cameron gave a focal point; the protesters did the same thing." Cameron, an anti-gay psychologist, sparked protest when he spoke at UMass last month.

The march was supported by numerous area groups, including HAVEN, the Harassment And Violence Energy Network, a support group for gays and lesbians "who are threatened or harassed," said HAVEN staff member Edie Woodward.

Showing Soviet colors

Stuart Gottlieb

In 1979, as the whole world was watching Three Mile Island brew to a near meltdown, a smug Soviet administration openly declared that the potential disaster of such power plants as the one on Three Mile Island are direct results of "capitalistic greed" and declared that such a disaster could not take place in their society.

The Soviet Union was proven wrong the hard way.

But, even more than opening the world's eyes to the fact that Russia is not exactly the ideal society it claims to be, the Chernobyl disaster has also brought forth the harsh reality of Soviet policy, both internal and external.

The "paranoia policy" which dictates Soviet life has shown us what a danger the "enemy without" is. It is such a danger that the Kremlin is willing to shrug off the deaths of innocent Russians and totally disregard the justified concerns of free nations outside the iron curtain for the sake of "national security".

With an intense feeling that they face a hostile world, the Soviets control outgoing information that might feed their enemies, and incoming information that might undercut their hold on their own people. The Soviet bureaucrats did not seal their graphite reactors with lead containers because they operate in a sealed society which controls all information, and can take those chances.

The closed society of the Soviet Union where only the elite debate, and only their voices are heard, leads to problems such as Chernobyl. These problems not only threaten the Soviet people, but neighbors as well. Russian leaders justify their closed society as a defense against their external enemies while the real enemy is the tyranny they practice.

In a vulgar display of arrogance, ignorance, and self righteousness, the Soviet Union delayed verification of the meltdown at the Chernobyl reactor until Sweden reported a well above normal radiation count on Monday; four days after the initial explosion. Mikhail Gorbachev has both stimulated new possibilities of nuclear arms reductions, and then shown a total disregard for human existence; the existence he claimed would be protected by his "nuclear free" proposal. The Challenger tragedy is a clear example that open societies are also imperfect. But just in being open there is a force of checks on stubborn bureaucratic tendencies, and balances on technological "stability". Interest groups which flourish in the United States are absent in the Soviet Union. If they had even a miniscule number of interest groups, they would have long ago imposed far stricter regulations on their nuclear power industry as a whole.

Even more important is not how Russia destroys itself, but rather how we can avoid their collective paranoia lifestyle, which is obviously doing them no good.

The Kremlin has been taking a "moral" stance on its recent propaganda jousts at the US. It appears that Gorbachev's moral stance has been mainly precedented in annexing sophisticated Western technology, due to a technological lag in the Soviet Union.

This outrage of human sacrifice, and disregard for international interests has tightened European distrust of the Soviet Union, and rightly so. Gorbachev's message to Europe about arms control and Star Wars has been that he cares about the "valuable" existence of European nations, while Ronald Reagan does not.

It looks like old Gorby has put a geiger-counter where his mouth was.

Destroy the ugly tower library

Jonathan Gottsegen

According to my calendar, we are well into spring. Spring tends to bring out the wildness in all of us. We take off our sweaters, open our collars and simply be who we are. To me, spring is the sun mutilating our skin and the little flower bursting through the snow. We students also have a right to wreak some havoc. In short, I have a dream. My dream for this spring is the destruction of the library tower.

The library tower is not a pretty sight. It is in the way. It does not fit in. The structures around it are lower, less conspicuous buildings. They add an almost pleasant atmosphere to the area. Yet, that mammoth red thing ruins everything. Twenty-six floors of hideousness is just too out of the ordinary. It detracts from campus appearance. It is like Bo Derek walking around with a monster zit between her eyes.

I remember visiting the University over a year ago. I remember seeing the construction going on in and around the library. I distinctly recall saying to myself that all of this work will be complete by the time I arrive in the fall. Who was I kidding? Since it is impossible to beautify ugliness, it follows that the tower should have been destroyed long ago. However, we are stuck with it. Besides its vile appearance, it is built on horrible land and bricks fall when the wind blows. Martin Luther King would advocate a non-violent solution, but I cannot come up with one.

To bring such an awesome structure to the ground is not an unthinkable task. We must assemble our forces. After everyone is designated to a unit, we must train them and prepare a plan of attack.

A battalion from Sylvan could creep around the parking garage and attack the northwestern corner of the tower. Simultaneously, troops from Southwest could assault the western and southern sides, while residents of Central could strike the eastern front with half of the Northeastern armies. The other half could take the north. Orchard Hill legions should be reserved as tactical combatants. From their strategic position on the Hill, students could fire SAM warheads to the tower mid-section, while others attack the edifice from the air in Tomahawk helicopters. It's not going to be easy, but somebody has to do it.

Someday, my dream will come true. Just visualize the campus devoid of the tower, with a nice brick, ivy covered, Goodell-style building in its place. That day when the tower plummets to the ground will be a great one. We will all be able to join hands and say: "Free at last. Free at last. Thank God Almighty we are free at last."

Jonathan M. Gottsegen is a UMass student.

Letters

Low blow at Soviet

This is in response to the letter from Jackie Kaufman and Thomas Bushman that asserted that the Chernobyl nuclear reactor disaster can be directly attributed to the Soviet's view of human life as "expendable." While it is true that they have not handled the situation in an up-front or ethical manner, it is ridiculous to claim that the plant was built with a deliberate "screw them; it's only our own countrymen and we can use the farmland again in forty years" attitude.

It is a sad fact of life that much modern technology seems inherently connected with the possibility of technical breakdown. Most often it is the act of trying to save face or a willingness to cut corners which has a major hand in these disasters. Remember the space shuttle? Seven astronauts died, despite urgent warnings from experts, due to the tight schedule NASA would not back down from.

Think of how many nuclear reactors in our own country which have been built near large population centers. People living with them have nothing to go on but blind trust in the benevolence of the contractors, engineers, etc. By the way, have Tom and Jackie forgotten about Three Mile Island? In most cases, cancer caused by radiation takes at least twenty years to strike.

Finally, I would like to remind them about the Union Carbide incident. Toxic fumes were spewed around Bhopal, India, killing thousands of people. Where was that American corporation's concern for humanity? Answer: not in India, where operational safety standards are lower than those in America, making it easier to cut corners and save money.

We are now learning a lesson in how not to handle a nuclear meltdown, but please do not exploit the Chernobyl disaster as an opportunity to take cheap shots at the Soviets.

Abortion equals death

I am responding to the unsigned editorial of May 1 about the constitutional amendment that would allow lawmakers to limit abortions. The feeling of the editors is that if "abortion is once again outlawed in the United States, rich women will fly to foreign countries and poor women will risk their lives in illegal 'back alley' abortions." This argument, coupled with the figure that 5,000-10,000 women were killed annually in "back alley" abortions before the legalization of abortion, helped to make legalized abortions a reality. Yet, Dr. Bernard Nathenson admits this figure is grossly false. He should know because he was one of the abortion advocates who circulated this statistic before the 1973 Supreme Court hearings. He says the figure is closer to 500 and was only 39 in 1972, the year before abortions were made legal. Senator James L. Buckley reports that legalization has had no effect on the criminal abortion rate: "Legalized abortion moves the back alley abortionist into the front office where their trade can be practiced without fear of criminal prosecution."

The response could be the same as the editor's: "Everyone has different feelings about the morality of abortion, but the abortions will go on." This may be true, but does it condone abortion? Perhaps an analogy would help. Let's say rape. People rape even though it is against the law. In the process, the rapist can be harmed; he may be scratched or even sprayed with mace. Should we therefore use government money for safe, clean rape clinics where rapists can bring their victims? This makes about as much sense as legalized abortion. Clearly, just because something is going to happen does not mean it should be legalized. If my rape analogy sounds too contrived, try something like drunk driving. Better yet, try substituting murder. That should not be too hard to understand since it is just another word for abortion.

Shoah: a stark portrayal of death

By DODE B. LEVENSON
Collegian Staff

Blow off your classes. Skip your meals. Don't go out to the local pubs. You can't afford to miss this movie.

Shoah, has been heralded as the "Event of the Century" by the Washington Post—with good reason. Not using any of the graphic footage that other Holocaust films use like Night and Fog, Shoah chronicles the planned extermination of the Jewish people by capturing the memories of survivors of Nazi death camps as they tell their stories.

French director Claude Lanzmann uses only modern day footage of the now lush and green lands that were once the sights of Auschwitz, Treblinka, Sobidor, and other Nazi death camps. These calm serenic visual scenes are contrasted sharply by a stinging narration from survivors of the camps, and the people who lived in the surrounding towns during that time.

The effect is the same: chilling.

The stories of the victims of the death camp nightmares, told in German, French, and English are complemented by stories told by the townsfolk, blasting the myth that people in the towns surrounding the death camps "simply didn't know" of the horrors committed a few short miles from their homes.

Claude Lanzmann

Lanzmann's cinematography sets the mood for a somber recollection of a different time. There is a prevalent theme of reaching the "end of the road" throughout the film. Lanzmann's camera takes you on the same railroad line that only forty years earlier, cattle cars, packed to overflowing with Jewish men, women, and children, traveled on, without food or water, to their final destination, Treblinka death camp.

In one of the most powerful scenes in the film, one of two survivors of 400,000 Jews of Chelmno is surrounded by his former townsfolk. The people remember him because he used to sing beautifully for the Nazis. The people callously speak about him as though he isn't there at all, with one saying, "I remember he was so thin, he was ready for the coffin." The survivor, standing amongst them tight-lipped and with his hands crossed lets his eyes tell the audience and the director what he thinks about the people who did nothing to help him when they knew the barbarisms that were being committed against himself, and his people.

Using sophisticated surveillance equipment, Lanzmann also traps former Nazis on film as they describe, complete with charts, how people were brutalized, beaten, and made to carry their own lifeless relatives to be burned.

The pain in the eyes of another survivor as he brings himself to tell how he was forced to dig up mass graves with his bare hands so that the corpses could be cremated to dispose of the evidence, and then seeing among the dead his wife and children is seared into your mind, despite the fact that no footage of any atrocities is shown.

Although the show runs a total of 9½ hours long, the films characters, combined with their tales and their emotions engross you from minute one.

Watching Shoah is walking through history with those who have lived it, and thanks to Claude Lanzmann, you experience it.

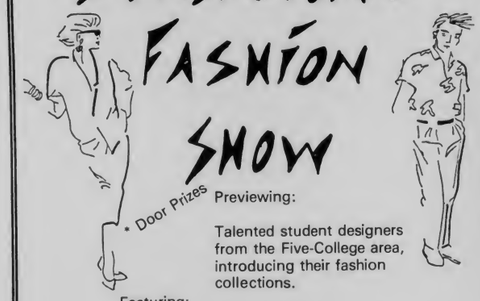
Animation tourney offers a glimpse into the varied world of cartoons

By THOMAS HARRINGTON
Collegian Staff

In a time in which all original cartoons are nothing more than extended advertisements for the Care Bears or Rainbow Brite, The 19th Tournee of International Animation comes as a breath of fresh air.

This collection of 20 cartoons by animators from 9 countries has the kind of imagination and vitality that hasn't been seen since since Rocky and Bullwinkle. I liked every one, and loved more than a few, but space permits me to comment on only a handfull.

If any one cartoon shows the endless variety of animation methods, it is the bizarre Anijam, masterminded by Marv Newland, the creator of the infamous Bambi meets Godzilla. In this We Are The World of cartooning, 22 different animators work independently on the adventures of a little character, with the last frame of one cartoonist's segment serving as the first frame of the next sequence. The effect is total chaos, yet the pudgy creature's constant presence creates just enough consistency to pull it off.



Aside from that, there are some beautiful works such as Anna and Bella, a sentimental comedy drama done in a Walt Disney style, and Skywhales, the most beautiful animated science fiction I've ever seen. The comical pieces are funnier than anything available on Saturday morning TV, Bugs Bunny excepted. Romeo and Juliet is a grotesque reinterpretation of the Shakespearean tragedy as performed by slobbering monsters, while the Academy award-winning The Big Snit concerns a bizarre domestic squabble of a married couple who are totally unaware of an imminent nuclear war. The single biggest laugh, however is saved for last with the pythonesque Charades, another Oscar winner.

The 19th Annual Tournee of International Animation is appearing at the Pleasant St. Theater through tomorrow.

Vincent, starring Vincent Malloy, left, and Charade are just two of the cartoons featured in the 19th International Tournee of Animation.

Baseball drops two at Northeastern

BOSTON—The University of Massachusetts baseball fell to 15-20 on the season, dropping a doubleheader to Northeastern University on Friday at Parsons Field.

UMass dropped the first game, 9-3 and was shutout for the first time this season in the second contest, 3-0.

The Minutemen have now lost three straight and five of their last six.

UMass now has five games left this season and must win all of them to reach .500. Dartmouth College faces the Minutemen on Tuesday for a doubleheader in the final homes game at Earl Lorden Field.

Sophomore outfielder Matt Sheran provided one of the highlights against Northeastern, getting a hit in each games to extend his school-record setting hiting streak to 23 games.

Senior co-captain Bob Kostro took the loss in the first game, lasting four innings before the Huskies shelled him out of the mound. Kostro allowed seven runs, all earned, along with three doubles and a triple. He is now 4-3 on the season.

Freshman Jeff Richardson came on in relief and was touched for two runs.

Freshman Steve Kern belted a two-run homer in the game, his fifth dinger of the season. Sheran had two hits in the game.

The second game saw Northeastern's third pitcher, Dave Weiner, shut the UMass offense off, authoring a complete-game two-hitter. Only Sheran and sophomore infielder Steve Allen managed hits.

Freshman Mike Owens took the loss and fell to 0-4. Owens left the game with a shoulder injury suffered while warming up for the fifth inning.

Freshman Dave Telegheder worked three strong innings of relief for the Minutemen in his fourth outing of the season.

Freshman Barbara Meehan pinch-ran for Reed and advanced to third on Bietsch's single and Bietsch went to second. Stockley then reached on an infield single scoring Meehan from third. Bietsch alertly scored when confusion set in among the Rutgers infield and tied the score at 2-2.

Luck has been defined as "opportunity meeting preperation". If that were the case, the Minutewomen had prepared the entire season for what happened in the sixth inning. Frattaroli opened the inning with a sharp drive down the left field line that looked to be an easy double. What insued was entirely different.

Clarke, in an attempt to field the play, had the ball richochet off her right ankle and roll to the center field fence. Frattaroli scored easily with what proved to be the game winning run.

"I' didn't think that Anita (assistant coach Anita Kubicka) would send her," Kopcza said. "But we beat them before and we did it again. After Carol scored, there was no stopping us."

Stockley made sure off that, as she put emphasis on the championship by striking out the side in the seventh inning, with the final out coming when she struck out Clarke with a pitch the Rutgers' left fielder never laid eyes on.

Stockley struckout eight batters and improved her record to 20-2, going the distance for her third straight tournament victory. She gave up five hits and walked three.

Frattaroli led the Minutewomen offensively going two-for-three on the day with one run scored. Bietsch and Kopcza had the other two hits for UMass. Bietsch was one-for-two and Kopcza went one-for-three.

"They deserve the championship," Sortino said. "They have so much heart and personality."

UM dominates all-tourney team

By ROGER CHAPMAN
Collegian Staff

NEW BRUNSWICK, N.J.—Winning the Atlantic 10 tournament championship wasn't the only thing the University of Massachusetts softball team had to celebrate.

After the mandatory showers of champagne, the A-10 tournament officials announced the All-Tournament team. It's safe to say that the Minutewomen had their share of members on that team.

Senior center fielder Sally Maher, senior pitcher Lynn Stockley, junior second baseman Carol Frattaroli, sophomore catcher Ilene Freeman, and sophomore shortstop Paige Kopcza were all named All-Tournament.

Frattaroli was also named the tournament's Most Valuable Player and Stockley the tourney's Most Valuable Pitcher.

"I never expected it," a suprised Frattaroli said. "I feel honored, but I owe it all to the rest of the gang."

Frattaroli went five-for-nine in the tourney (.560), with a double and two runs scored. She also had the game-winning against Rutgers in a 3-1 win on Friday, and scored the winning run, yesterday.

Stockley continued to show her dominance on the mound, winning all three of her decisions in the tourney. She allowed two earned runs, both of those coming in the 3-2 first-round win over Temple, and struckout 18 batters. Stockley allowed 12 hits and walked three.

Pop Flies: It may seem unbelieveable, but the Minutewomen had twice the number of fans in attendance of both UMass/Rutgers games than the Lady Knights did. Parents made the trek to New Jersey from parts of Massachusetts, Connecticut, and New York. . .The Minutewomen also enjoyed the opportunity to reflect on their tournament championship at picnic held at the residence of Lisa Rever in nearby Union, N.J.. Food, drink, and good times were provided as players and fans alike were in attendance. . .Yesterday's come-from-behind win was only the second time UMass has done it all season. The first came in Thursday's first-round win over Temple.

Beer, Fun, Wildness, Etc.

Softball reigns over the A-10

Nationals next for the Minutewomen

By ROGER CHAPMAN
Collegian Staff

NEW BRUNSWICK, N.J.—The dream started out to be more of a nightmare for the University of Massachusetts softball team.

But ultimately, a happy ending was in store for UMass, as the Minutewomen came from behind to beat Rutgers University, 3-2, and lay claim to its first Atlantic 10 tournament title.

"I've had three magic moments in my coaching career," UMass head coach Elaine Sortino said. "The first was when we went to Oklahoma City for the regionals in 1983. The second is when the volleyball team won the ECAC championship, and this is the third. I feel like I'm someplace else looking in from the outside."

UMass, 36-7 overall and ranked 19th in the latest national poll, will now advance to the NCAA Division 1 Regionals, as the top team from the Northeast. Tournament bids will be announced May 12 with UMass potentially hosting a first-round game.

"It was messy, but a win is a win," senior co-captain Sally Maher said. "No one cares how you do it as long as you get it done."

In addition to being the first A-10 championship for the Minutewomen, Saturday's tourney conquest was only the second league championship for a UMass athletic team. The baseball team won the A-10 tourney way back in 1980. Basketball, baseball, swimming, golf and tennis (men's and women's) are also members of the conference.

"Considering the way we played, it's a great feeling to win the tournament," sophomore shortstop Paige Kopcza said. "To have the same team from last year and pull it out this time really means a lot."

The game itself was by no means a gem. Defensively, UMass committed a season-high five errors, two of which led directly to both of the Lady Knights runs in the game. The Minutewomen did have their moments, however.

In the the third inning, junior second baseman Carol Frattaroli made a leaping, off-balance catch of an Amy Masonis line drive for the first out of the inning. Rutgers catcher Tracy Buono reached on a Kopcza throwing error and went to second. Rutgers left-fielder Renee Clarke then singled to center with Buono going to third.

But Buono wandered off the third a bit to far and was picked off by Frattaroli at home. Freeman then relayed to Kopcza at third, who put the tag on Clarke for a 4-2-6 inning-ending double play.

That was it for the defensive heroics as the Minutewomen handed the Lady Knights a 2-0 lead.

UMass had its problems against Rutgers pitcher Sue Gallagher in the early innings. The junior right-hander set the Minutewomen down in order through the first three innings, and gave up her first hit when Frattaroli singled to center in the fourth inning.

The Lady Knights, however, got to UMass starter Lynn Stockley very quickly. Rutgers connected for one hit in each of the first three innings before scoring in the fourth. With two out and a runner on third, Rutgers third baseman Jackie Grippo hit a soft ground ball back to Stockley for what seemed to be a sure third out. Instead, Stockley's throw went wide of senior first baseman Beth Talbott, scoring Adele Calimer from third.

Rutgers struck for another run in the fifth when catcher Tracey Bouno reached and later scored on a Stockley wild pitch. At that point, UMass trailed 2-0, and a second and decisive game seemed to be looming large on the horizon.

What seemed even more evident, was the fact that the Minutewomen were beating themselves. Both of the Rutgers runs were unearned, aided by four UMass errors in five innings. In addition, the Minutewomen could produce only one base runner in four innings.

All of that changed in the UMass half of the fifth. Sophomore catcher Ilene Freeman led off with a strikeout, but sophomore right-fielder Chris Ciepiela followed by reaching on Rutgers second baseman Sue Robson's error. Senior designated hitter Cathy Reed reached on a fielder's choice while Ciepiela was forced at second, before junior left-fielder Emily Bietsch singl-

UMass falls at Rutgers, 7-4

BY PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts stood 15 minutes from the national playoffs on Saturday night at Rutgers. One good quarter of play was all they needed.

But the Gorillas couldn't handle the pressure, allowing three goals in 2:22 to let the Scarlet Knights take the lead and eventually the game, 7-4.

UMass led 3-2 after three periods, despite a sputtering offense that scored the fewest goals by a Gorilla team since Rutgers beat UM, 8-4 in 1984.

But the fourth period, actually the entire second half, saw UMass get badly outplayed by a ninth-ranked Scarlet Knight team that needed the game to make the playoffs, and unlike UMass went out and did the job.

"I'm disappointed, what else could I be?" said UMass coach Dick Garber. "We played a great first half, although the offense was missing good shots, and then we played the second half without any desire. I don't know what happened. This is a tough loss for the kids and I feel bad for them, but they also had them. We were looking at the playoffs and we backed away from them."

UMass slumped to 9-3 on the season and will probably fall from tenth in the USILA weekly poll. The Gorillas play at second-ranked Syracuse next Friday night and, according to Garber, must win to get back in the top ten 10 and make the playoffs.

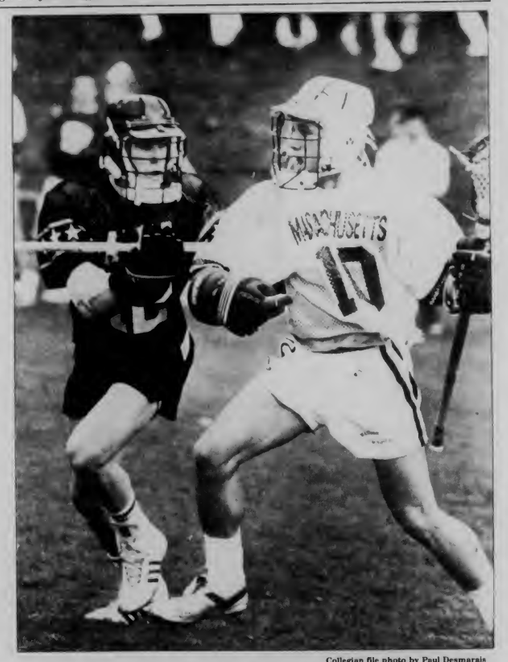
UMass took a 1-0 lead 2:07 into the game as Tom Carmean scored, assisted by Greg Cannella. Brad Fish tied it up for Rutgers with five minutes left before Cannella (assisted by Carmean) put UMass up 2-1 with 7:01 gone in the second period.

Senior defenseman Tom Aldrich then led a break downfield, and hung around for the result, taking a feed from Carmean in the middle and blasting home his third goal of the season to produce a 3-1 UMass lead at halftime.

Lou Fusilli (assisted by Gregg Fried) made it 3-2 going into the fourth period, and on a cold and windy New Jersey night, UMass saw its season start to slip away.

Tim Donovan scored just 41 seconds into the period. Fusilli ripped home his second, just 26 seconds later. Dave Disciorio made it 5-3, going in unassisted with 2:22 gone. The Rutgers barrage halted, but Ed Trabulsy banged another Knight goal home at the 11:12 mark and UMass was reeling.

Greg Fisk finally answered for UMass, scoring his 19th goal of the season with 7:52 left, but Disciorio (assisted by Donovan) drive home some insurance with 2:28 to go.



In the second half, Rutgers outshot UMass 30-9 and held a 34-14 advantage in groundballs, a good indication which team wanted the game more.

"They played us hard, they pressured us pretty good," said Garber. "But we've faced that before, this time we just let them beat us. It's hard to believe we only had nine shots in the second half. That shows what the offense was doing. We didn't execute."

For the game, freshman goalie Sal LoCascio made 16 saves in another solid effort. Jim Gilman made 16 for Rutgers. The Knights outshot UMass 45-25 and had a 54-30 groundball advantage. Disciorio won ten face-offs, to handle UMass senior Seamus McGovern, who took five.

On clears, UMass was good on 30-of-36 while Rutgers was successful on 25-of-29. Despite the presence of three officials, only three penalties were called the entire game. Rutgers was one-for-two on man-up situations. UMass was o-for-one. The play was also a little chippier than three penalties would indicate, but the officials seemed content to let a lot of banging go unnoticed.

"This has been a good season, no matter what happens at Syracuse," said Garber. "But we could be 11-1 right now. We had Army (an 8-7 overtime loss) and we had Rutgers. We just didn't put them away like we should. It's a shame."

Playoffs still a possibility for Gorillas

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

NEW BRUNSWICK, N.J.—All is not lost, maybe.

The University of Massachusetts lacrosse team has lost two of its last three games to slip to 9-3 on the season and hasn't beaten a current top 15 team outside of Delaware, but could still make the national playoffs.

Eighth-ranked Army lost to New Hampshire on Saturday. 14th ranked Adelphi (who earlier in the wek defeated seventh-ranked C.W. Post, 20-10) lost to Harvard. Post, meanwhile, was unimpresive in an 8-7 win over Penn State.

Army, with five losses, should not make the playoffs. Post, with a 10-goal loss to Adelphi, also shouldn't. Adelphi could have moved up, but choked against Harvard. However, New Hamsphire at 9-3 and winners of seven straight, could move up. Confusing in an understatement in this situation.

UMass has one game left on its schedule, against second-ranked Syracuse on Friday night at the Orangemen's Coyne Field. Gorilla coach Dick Garber said that, in his opinion, UMass must beat Syracuse to make the playoffs for the first time since 1981.

"We've got to get some help and probably have to beat Syracuse, but who knows? Maybe we can sneak in," said Garber.

Coors may get a second shot on campus

By JEANETTE DeFORGE
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate will vote again tomorrow on whether to ask the Campus Center Board of Governors to reconsider its decision last spring to discontinue the sale of Coors beer in the Campus Center.

Last Wednesday, the senate defeated by one vote a motion asking the BOG to reconsider, but Bill Bennett, SGA campus president, vetoed the results, saying the vote was too close.

Proponents of the motion noted that most voters answered "yes" to a referendum put before students last year that asked, "Has the Campus Center Board of Governors oversteppped its bounds by calling for the banning of the sale of Coors beer in the Campus Center and Student Union buildings?"

The referendum was held after board voted to ban the sale of the beer in the Campus Center because the Coors company has been accused of unfair labor practices. The American Federation of Labor and other groups have repeatedly called for boycotts of the firm on grounds it busts unions and discriminates against women, minorities, gays and lesbians.

"I am asking the Board of Governors to look back at the decision a year ago."
— Tony Rudy, senator

Fran Hegeler, outgoing treasurer of the BOG, said the student senate would be overstepping its bounds if it sought to change the board's decision.

"The board is completely divorced with the senate and the politics of the senate. We have always been completely autonomous from them," she said.

Last Thursday, Bennett said at a board meeting, "We didn't say we have any authority and never claimed to. I am asking the Board of Governors to look back at the decision a year ago." Student senator Tony Rudy, who proposed the motion, said he wanted to know why the BOG ignored the results of the referendum, and asserted, "I am just trying to represent the students' best interests."

Outgoing BOG chair Alex Zucker said, "If there was a grass-roots movement to get Coors back on campus, it would have come up a lot earlier."

According to the Student Goverment Association, 70 percent of the students voted "yes" on whether the BOG was out of line.

"This motion is almost as vague as the referendum question last year," said Mark Friedman, BOG treasurer.

"Saying that the Board of Governors overstepped their bounds is saying that students want Coors on campus. It seems the same to me," Rudy said.

"I think Tony Rudy is trying to interfere just like MassPIRG and the other groups he is oppossed to, it's just another of his series of attacks on RSO's," Zucker said.

Man cited for vehicular homicide

A 19-year-old Granby man has been issued a citation that charges him with vehicular homicide and operating to endanger, in connection with an accident that killed a University of Massachusetts student April 25, Amherst police said.

According to police reports, Paul Gilman 2nd turned off West Street onto Shays Street and cut off a Coca-Cola delivery truck, that struck the passenger side of Gilman's Ford. Gilman's passenger, Elysa R. Kates, 18, a first-year animal science major, was killed.

Gilman was injured and hospitalized at Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton, where he was released last week. The driver of the truck, William Swinington, 22, was also taken to the hospital, treated and released.

The citation was issued Friday after an investigation of the accident. Police said they could not give any more details of the accident or investigation.

If convicted, the penalty for vehicular homicide is up to two and one-half years in jail, a fine of no more than $1,000 or both, Amherst police said.

University student falls 40 feet from Baker window

By JEFFRY BARTASH
Collegian Staff

A 19-year-old University of Massachusetts student suffered a fractured leg and ankle and possible back injuries after he fell 40 feet from a fourth-floor bathroom window early Saturday morning, according to University of Massachusetts police.

Shawn Murphy, a resident of Cance House, fell at 12:24 a.m. from the window in Baker House in the Central Residential Area, police said.

He was taken to Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton, where he remained in fair condition yesterday, a hospital spokeswoman said.

Police said they believe alcohol was involved and are investigating the incident. Students and officials in Baker said they did not know what happened or would not comment.

In other police reports:

- Two 20-year-old men were arrested and charged with being minors in possession, and one was charged with possession of marijuana after being searched by police, who confiscated 139 beers at 6:55 p.m. Saturday in the John Quincy Tower, police said.
- A female student reported an assault and battery after being hit in the arm by "someone yelling things in the corridor about her" at 8:25 p.m. Saturday on the fourth floor of McNamara House, police said.
- A woman reported scaring away a person trying to break into her Volkswagon, at 9:48 p.m. Saturday in lot 62 near Clark Hall, police said.
- A 22-year-old male non-student was arrested for State Police motor vehicle violations after police ran a check on the man when they responded to argument he was involved in with a woman at 11:11 p.m. Saturday on Massachusetts Avenue, police said.
- Three men will be charged with attempted larceny of bicycles in connection with an incident that occurred at 2:36 a.m. Sunday at the south side of the Graduate Research Center, police said.
- A 16-year-old boy "under the influence of alcohol" was put in protective custody at 5:12 p.m. Sunday at the Southwest concert, police said.
- A 19-year-old male non-student, issued a trespass notice at Cance House Saturday night, was arrested for being a minor in possession of alcohol at 5:31 p.m. Sunday at the Southwest concert, police said.
- A 1984 Mazda and a 1975 Honda both received $200 damage when the Honda backed into the Mazda as it was leaving its parking space at 10:10 a.m. Friday in Haigis Mall, police said.
- Items worth $190, including a gold chain, were reported stolen at 8:28 p.m. Sunday on the third floor of Patterson House, police said.
- A 1970 Chevrolet was reported stolen at 10:45 a.m Sunday from lot 22, police said.
- During the weekend, 29 persons were arrested for being minors in possession of alcohol — 14 at the Southwest concert—and 10 persons for having altered or fake identification cards, police said.

Fire destroys bookstore near Mount Holyoke

SOUTH HADLEY, Mass. (AP) - A fire early yesterday destroyed a building housing the Odyssey Book Shop, across from Mount Holyoke College, for the second time in five months.

South Hadley Fire Chief Joseph Brooksbank said the cause of the blaze was under investigation by the state fire marshal's office. The blaze apparently started in the rear of a 2 1/2-story wood building on the South Hadley Common, which housed the bookstore, a travel agency and the offices of two psychiatrists, he said.

"At this point we have absolutely no idea what caused the fire," Brooksbank told the Daily News in Springfield. The blaze was reported by Mount Holyoke College security officers.

No injuries were reported, but two firefighters had to scramble to safety when the north wall of the building collapsed, he said. Assistant Chief Allan Simpson told the newspaper that after the stone roof caught, the heavy slates "were falling like guillotines."

The book store, opened by retired pharmacist Romeo J. Grenier in 1962, had been a haven for readers from the surrounding college towns and a textbook supplier for Mount Holyoke.

"Many of the faculty and staff had tears in their eyes as they watched it burn," said Irma Rabbino, the head of the college news bureau.

Grenier's original store burned to the ground shortly before Christmas in a blaze that also destroyed the adjacent College Inn, built in 1782. That blaze was later blamed on a faulty oil furnace in the inn.

"I don't know what is going to happen," Grenier, 75, told the newspaper. "It's too early to tell. When I got the call, I was numb. It doesn't seem possible it could happen twice in the same place. I can't believe it."

Soviets: Radiation spread

MOSCOW (AP) - The government indicated yesterday that radiation had spread beyond the evacuated zone around Chernobyl, and an official said foreigners would be allowed to visit the stricken nuclear plant when it is safe to do so.

A government statement also indicated that contamination threatened a river that feeds a major reservoir near Kiev, the Ukrainian capital of 2.4 million people 80 miles south of the disaster site.

The head of the International Atomic Energy Agency arrived for talks with Soviet officials about the April 26 accident.

An invisible cloud of radiation spread over much of Europe after a reactor caught fire in the Chernobyl plant. The Kremlin's official reports say two people were killed and 197 iniured, but other governments believe the toll is higher.

No health-threatening radiation levels were reported outside the Soviet Union yesterday, but precautionary measures remained in effect in some European countries.

In a four-paragraph statement distributed yesterday by the official news agency Tass, the Council of Ministers said that a cleanup was under way and that radiation was found in both the Ukrainian and Byelorussian republics.

Birdseye view of swarm of bees huddling around tree branch near the Old Chapel yesterday.

Bzzzzzzzzzzzzzzzzz . . .

By DAVID BURGESS
Collegian Staff

People who strolled past the Old Chapel yesterday were greeted by a watermelon-sized swarm of honeybees clinging to the bottom branch of a pine tree.

The mass of bees was probably resting enroute to a new site for their home, such as a large hole in a tree or a crevice in some rock formation, said a professor of entomology at the University of Massachusetts.

What was mistaken for a nest covered with bees was actually a solid mass of bees that were clustered about the queen honeybee. This is their method of protecting and insulating the queen while other bees, called scouts, search for an acceptable home, according to Dr. T. Michael Peters of the entomology department.

Dr. Peters said the bees' old home had probably been destroyed or simply became unsuitable to live in and they were forced to seek new quarters.

The people who walked near or under the swarm were not in much danger, said Peters, because the bees were full of honey and content to just look for a new abode. They carry enough honey to survive the flight to a new site.

The queen bee is the only female of the swarm and the rest are workers (drones) who guard and service every need of the queen. The queen usually has a life span of 2-3 years and after "overwintering" will produce young when it is warm enough and there is plenty of pollen available.

Dr. Peters said he was "surprised that they were on the move this early" because most swarms do not begin this sort of journey until later in May. A swarm normally does not move more than a half mile when searching for a new lodging, he said.

When the scouts have found what they believe to be suitable sites for building a nest, they will return to the swarm in a state of excitement. If the new site is dry and large enough, the scouts will impart all necessary information, such as distance and direction, by performing a vigorous series of "dances." The more of a frenzied dance that is performed, the "better the sell" to the other bees, said Dr. Peters.

Once the entire swarm is satisfied with the new site, they move with the queen bee to begin building the new structure with beeswax, a substance they carry on their bodies.

Graduate students begin elections

BY SEAN CASEY
Collegian Staff

The Graduate Student Senate will hold elections today from 3:30 p.m. to 7:30 p.m. in Campus Center room 917. Graduate students will elect a new slate of senate officers, vote on a proposed constitutional amendment and decide a referendum question.

Incumbent President George Claxton will run unopposed for re-election, while Gary Jakacky will be unchallenged in his bid for treasurer.

In the race for vice-president, Ralph Sbragia, a senator from the Division of Public Health, will face history department student Jonathan Frank.

Sbragia, who has represented the senate on the Distinguished Teaching Awards Committee and the University Committee on Alcohol Use, has been a senator for one year.

Frank has served on the senate Finance Commitee and is currently serving on a committee that is rewriting the University picketing code.

Antony Zografos will face Nancy Muller-Milligan in the race for senate executive officer.

Zografos, who is from Greece, said that he wants to represent engineering and foreign students as an officer in the senate.

Muller-Milligan, who has served on several committees, said she wants to increase graduate student input on campus.

The referendum question on the ballot concerns a waivable fee for MassPIRG, which was approved by undergraduates.

The proposed constitutional amendment would make clearer language concerning the senate's representation of graduate students.

Claxton said that he will continue to seek a graduate student seat on the Boards of Regents and Trustees, while Jakacky said he will try to increase the senate's reserve funds.

Two RSO leaders will receive scholarship

A scholarship to honor outstanding student leadership will be awarded next fall to two University of Massachusetts students, according to the director of the Student Activities Office.

The awards, $500 each, will be given to two leaders of registered student organizations, said the director, Randy Donant. Applicants must have held an office in an RSO for at least two semesters, have a grade point average of 3.0 or better, and demonstrate leadership skills, he said.

Eunice Konieczny, whom the scholarship is named after, retired last December from her position as secretary in the Undergraduate Student Senate office, where she had worked for 25 years.

"She was the foundation of the office. She was a mentor and support system for student leaders for over 25 years, so we decided to do something in her honor," Donant said.

Contributions to the scholarship fund were made at a banquet held in Konieczny's honor when she retired, he said. Additional money was drawn from an endowment composed of fines paid by shoplifters at UMass.

A committee of staff, faculty and Konieczny, will review the applications, which will be accepted until May 30 and are available in the Student Activities Office.

Microbiologist researches drugs

Linda Nolan-Labbe, a microbiologist at the University Department of Health Services is investigating several drugs to see which may effectively combat leishmaniasis, a disfiguring disease that has infected 12 million people.

In the past, leishmaniasis was treated with drugs, known as antimony compounds, which helped the disease but caused "toxic side effects" to the central nervous system, especially in children, Nolan-Labbe said.

According to Nolan-Labbe, the disease is prevalent in tropical regions but poses a risk to travelers who are bitten by sandflies.

Nolan-Labbe said that while she is studying the effects of the drugs, the US Army is doing tests on laboratory animals. "It's difficult to extrapolate from the animals to humans but it looks very promising," she said.

Nolan-Labbe said although there are no effective vaccines because of the many types of leishmaniasis, "the right drug could treat all varieties."

Understanding how the disease differs from human biochemistry will help to decide which drugs will help fight it, Nolan-Labbe said. — LISA DiMEO

Professor honored for excellent service to the food science field

By KATHLEEN MOYNIHAN
Collegian Correspondent

A University of Massachusetts professor was recently honored for his contributions to the field of food science and nutrition by the Institute of Food Technologies, which has more than 24,000 members in the Americas and Europe.

Fergus M. Clydesdale, co-instructor of the popular "Struggle for Food" course, received the Donald K. Tressler Award, one of five awards given by the institute, for ability to communicate with scientists and the public. Of the five, Clydesdale said this is the third that he has won. The other two were for excellence in teaching and excellence in nutrition research.

He and professor Frederick J. Francis, also of the food science and nutrition department, started teaching Food Science 101, Struggle for Food, about 15 years ago. The course is currently among the most popular "E" cores, science classes for non-majors, although the UMass administration said in January that it might no longer fill a science requirement when the "core" system is phased out.

"Food science and nutrition is critical for non-majors in terms of learning about diet and disease and diet and health." Clydesdale said. "If we don't teach it to non-majors, they probably wouldn't find out about it."

Clydesdale has written several books, including Food Nutrition and Health and Food Nutrition and You, co-written with Francis. He recently edited Iron Fortification of Foods, which addresses anemia, a disease caused by iron deficiency.

A native of Canada, Clydesdale earned a bachelor's degree from the University of Toronto. He has taught at UMass for 19 years — "a life sentence," he said.

He is on sabbatical this semester, and plans to spend a month in England. He will give lectures in London, Bedford, Nottingham and other cities. . .

A no-win situation

For six years running, President Ronald Reagan has compromised world security by his efforts to increase American nuclear superiority. He has refused to join the Soviet Union in a nuclear test moratorium. He and his administration have worked diligently to undermine all efforts towards arms limitations or reductions. Since 1981, the Federal Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, the Washington agency designed to work for a sane resolution of the arms race, has been stacked with men like Eugene Rostow, who oppose agreements of any kind with the Soviets.

Indeed, Reagan has to his credit only one feeble attempt towards arms reductions. This proposal was called START and from the outset, the Reagan administration knew it was totally unacceptable to the Russians. It called for cuts in only one category of weapons—ICBM's—and this is the only category in which the Soviets have an edge over the USA. In fact, the USA is far ahead of the Soviet Union in every other area, including nuclear submarines, bombers, and quality and reliability of weapons.

I will not be fooled by the New Right; when Reagan says we need to build the MX missle, the Minuteman, and SDI because the Soviets are planning a first-strike, I look at the facts and I am able to understand that the USA possesses the strongest military force in the world (and has since the end of WWII). In fact, Robert McNamara, a former Defense Secretary, said in 1982 that even "if (the Soviets) could destroy our Minuteman, that doesn't give them a first-strike capability, not when they are facing our Polaris subs and our bombers. The other two legs (of the American defense Triad) are still there." When Reagan says that the USA will test anti-satellite weapons in the near future in the interests of national security, I know that anti-satellite testing will actually jeopardize national security. Gorbachev stated that the Soviets will resume nuclear testing and do a space weapons test if the USA tests in space. Unfortunately, Reagan won't heed this warning, or any others from "peacenicks," the House of Representatives, or the Europeans. Instead of working for cooperative, assured peace, he will drag us further towards nuclear conflagaration.

A horrible human truth

Genocide: the deliberate and systematic destruction of a racial, political, or cultural group.

It happened.

As incomprehensible as it might seem, six million individuals — six million human beings — were put brutally and systematically to death for one reason alone: They were Jewish. That was their crime.

First they labeled them with yellow stars on their jackets so they could be openly and easily persecuted. They could be raped, beaten, scorned and ridiculed — even killed. All because they were Jewish. They were different.

Next all their property was confiscated, and the Jews were rounded up like cattle and placed in ghettos with subhuman living conditions. They did not have enough food, water or medicine. People dropped dead on the streets, typhoid ran rampant; severe overcrowding and lack of sanitation were commonplace. A blind and deaf world chose to ignore even the existence of such a place.

Then Hitler's "Final Solution" was put into effect. From all over Europe, Jews were transported in cattle cars, 500 to a car, with children thrown in on top. It was so crowded that those who died on the way stayed upright; there was no room for them to fall. For the survivors of the cattle cars, death awaited at the now-infamous concentration camps — Auschwitz, Treblinka, Buchenwald, Dachau ... the list goes on.

Six million people. Think about that number. The University's football stadium holds about 15,000. That's 400 UMass stadia full of human beings — all murdered. This happened less than 50 years ago. Think about it. You must.

This is the importance of Holocaust Memorial Week at the University of Massachusetts: We must never forget what happened — and what could happen to a group of people.

Shoah, a 9½ hour documentary shown in two parts throughout this week, shows none of the atrocities that were committed during the Holocaust. Instead, the filmmaker interviews survivors and townspeople who testify on the extent of the savagery. If you cannot see both halves, see at least one.

Besides Shoah, many other events at UMass this week are well worth students' time.

It happened to the Jews. It could happen to anyone. Learn about it, and never forget it.

Here we are in beautiful downtown spring-time. The hills are verdant, the stereos are cranked up to full power, and the students are cranked down to half-naked as they saunter along every street and sidewalk. Nudity in the streets elicits all sorts of responses, especially among those who fantasize about the shimmering acres of public flesh. But I think there is at least as much to think about in the statements various states of undress are making.

A number of students would assure us that they're not making a statement at all; they just like to go native in the warm weather. But there is a statement there. It says, "This is what I'm doing, and I don't give a hang for what you think about it." Seeing how carefully most people choose what few clothes they're wearing, I suspect there is a still deeper statement than that.

Some of the recent correspondence on the editorial page suggests other motives. For instance, what about the woman who flounces across campus inviting second looks, and yet demands that men not leer or make catcalls? Her message reads something like this: "I despise you. I'm going to appeal to your lower nature, and then condemn you for having one. I'm going to whet your appetite and make you hungry. I think so little of you that your opinion of what I'm doing is mere sport for me."

Of course, some women are simply hungry for the attention their peek-a-boo apparel can generate. I pity those women. It makes me think that they did not get the love and affection they needed at home, so now they are seeking approval by giving others a vicarious thrill. Some psychological studies will back me up on that.

And what about men? What sorts of statements are they making? Not having shoulders like melons or a hairy rug running from my navel to my chin, those are the guys who really stand out to me. Their message is pretty loud, too: "Here, this is what a real man should look like. Don't even bother to take off your shirt unless you have virility spilling out of your armpits, like me. Over here, women—don't settle for less than a real man."

But men in veritable loincloths make some other statements. Some of them, like some women, seem to be inviting second looks. Come on, guys, when your undershorts are hanging out beneath your boxer shorts, don't tell me you don't expect a certain amount of attention. And don't tell me skimpy nylon gym shorts are not an advertisement for what a stud you are.

I admit that some of those sunbathers out there simply admire a good tan, and want one for themselves. But why does a good tan have to converge on a person's private parts, if not to draw attention to what lies beneath the few clothes being worn? Some people will say that it is a primitive instinct to walk around in the altogether, but actually that's not true. Small children are very uninhibited until they are about three or four, when they suddenly become very modest. And for the rest of their lives, they are making a conscious statement by what they wear (or don't wear) in public.

Many times the messages being sent back and forth between the semi-clad sexes are misinterpreted. Guys are visually stimulated, and many assume that women are, also. In fact, most women are not aroused by the mere sight of nudity, and many do not really understand what it is that makes a row of men turn their heads in unison when a "looker" walks by. So, the next time you get the urge to tear off your clothes and lounge in the sunshine, remember that one way or another, you are sending a message. It may not be the message you intended to send

Big mess

I love UMass. I love its location, the women, the activities, and the overall atmosphere. Sometimes a little thing goes wrong and I overlook it.

However, one morning last week, I woke up ready to be productive. I get out of the dorm, walk by the Worcester Dining Commons, and I smell this awful odor. No, it was not the DC; it was this mound in the middle of the walkway. It was hay...no it wasn't hay. It was dirt...no, no that's not it. A mound of horse-shit...yeah, yeah, that's it.

First, I wondered what a horse would be doing anywhere near there. There has got to be a law somewhere that prohibits horses from using high traffic walkways. I don't know much about horses, but I do know there's about a 99 percent chance that a horse will defecate in the wrong place when in public. So I say to myself, "Don't worry about it, the DC is right there so it will have to be cleaned up real soon."

Well, it's been about 6 days and I have to use that walkway 5-10 times a day along with a couple thousand other people. What is the deal? Is the DC using it for free advertising? Please, please...for 4 out of 5 of my senses sake, if anyone has a shovel, or even a hockey stick, move that mess.

Truth is embarassing

We were disturbed to read the comments of members of the Environmental Health and Safety (EH&S) staff in the April 25 article concerning a potential asbestos hazard in Room 10 of Arnold House. Both the Physical Plant and EH&S have been well aware of the situation for some time; Environmental Health & Safety visited Room 10 on August 2, 1985, and shortly thereafter posted a sign (which is still there) on the door warning people not to use the room. On Nov. 15, 1985, a work order was written for removal of asbestos from the room. Since then, both of us have talked with Physical Plant and EH&S staff to check on exactly when the work would be done.

Given the background, it was very upsetting to see the members of the EH&S staff quoted as saying that they knew nothing about the asbestos problem in Room 10 until last week, and that the damage to the asbestos insulation "is of recent origin;" but then, the truth is somewhat embarrassing.

Message:

On April 17, I met with several students from Amherst and other colleges and universities to discuss arms control and national security issues.

They spoke to me on the need for a comprehensive ban on nuclear testing, their opposition to the Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI) or "Star-Wars" program, and their thoughts on other important arms control and foreign policy issues.

Their concern about arms control and prevention of nuclear war is to be commended, as is their willingness to journey to Washington to press their concerns in Congress.

The time is ripe for the United States and the Soviet Union to achieve real progress toward an arms control agreement that would be in the interest of both countries. I believe that President Reagan and Soviet leader Gorbachev have an historic opportunity to pursue their common goal of a world without nuclear weapons. With those shared ideals, I believe practical steps are feasible, and should be taken as soon as possible.

CITY SPIRITS
Tony Vacca, Tim Moran with Don Cherry
Philo Records

By GLENN SIEGEL
Collegian Correspondent

The body of music that has come to be known as jazz, has packed more innovation and change into its brief, 90-year history than almost any other art form.

Slaves made their music with combs and paper, washboards and spoons, in short, with whatever was available. It is this sense that the tools of music can come from anywhere which prompted Yusef Lateef to master the shenhai and argol, Howard Rumsey's Lighthouse All-Stars to employ oboe and English horn and Rufus Harley to play bagpipes.

Another jazz veteran whose musical odyssey crossed cultural boundaries before a category existed was Don Cherry. During the 1960's, the Oklahoma-born trumpeter mastered the doussn'gouni (a seven-string hunter's harp), wood flutes and other far eastern countries. The 49-year-old Cherry has now teamed up with local favorites Tony Vacca and Tim Moran to produce City Spirits, recently released on Philo Records.

Hot tuna reunion cold and short

The reunion of the acoustic Hot Tuna, Jorma Kaukonen and Jack Cassady was a long awaited event, but in the end it was a let down, at least at their show outdoors at Woodbury Ski and Racquet Club. It's rude to complain but the music wasn't loud enough, the crowd talked too much and the band only played for about three-quaters of an hour because of a six p.m. curfew in the town of Woodbury.

Starting with "I Know You Rider" and "Hesitation Blues," Jorma on guitar, seated with hat, Jack on bass, dressed in black with a red bass, the duo ran through a selection of their old material as well as some songs off of Jorma's last album. For those who made the effort to hear the band it appeared that Jorma and Jack were playing pretty well. Violinist Papa John Creach who had played with Hot Tuna on Friday and Saturday night didn't make it to Sunday's concert, so it was up to the two of them to keep things moving along.

Between the choice of songs and the way they pick up each other's slack the concert was never boring. In fact it was really quite good. They played an untitled instrumental which was a good as they get as was their final song, "Killing Time in the Crystal City."

But as well as they played it was hard to enjoy it. Knowing that the band had to be off at six, Max Creek, who played right before Hot Tuna played for almost an hour and a half and got an encore, a luxury that Jorma and Jack had to do without. The reader must consider that there were three or four bands on before Hot Tuna and I only came for the last band so perhaps others had a better time than I.

for Moran's flute and saxophones and Cherry's pocket trumpet and doussn'gouni. But like the late Collin Walcott (sitar, tabla), Alice Coltrane (harp) and Cherry, Vacca has taken a traditional instrument and infused it with his own musical roots.

The results are dreamy and hypnotic at slow tempos and riveting at uptempos. Tim Wolf joins Cherry on doussn'gouni for "Gourni'na." The piece begins with the

Tim Moran, Don Cherry and Tony Vacca

African harps playing a repeated eleven note phrase along side the balafon, with Vacca overdubbed on talking drum and wood blocks. Moran's alto sax soars above the buzzing rhythm, filling in the space generously left by the others.

Moran's haunting 10 minute composition, "Homeland," affords ample space for all involved, and Cherry and Vacca respond with their most spirited playing on the record. Cherry's muted trumpet solo is a gentle cascade of notes, beautifully conceived. Vacca follows with a short barrage of a solo that is technically dazzling and highlights the deep, hollow timbre of the balafon.

Vacca's "Sundiata" is sparked by the song's introduction on gongs and soprano sax, which conjures images of entering a powerful ancient shrine. "The Road to You," with its strong Caribbean feel, is made for tall summer drinks and wide brim hats, and features Moran on flute in a Herbie Mann groove.

Don Cherry is presented as a guest on City Spirits, and he seems content to play a supportive role. He sits out two of the six pieces and there is not much interaction between Cherry and Moran. On their next recorded collaboration, perhaps Cherry will bring his flutes and a composition or two.

Jon Butcher Axis will be appearing Thursday night at Pearl St. The Jon Butcher Axis, from left to right, is Jon Butcher (singer/songwriter/guitars), Derek Blevins (drums/percussion), Thom Gimbel, and Jack Lambert. The Jon Butcher Axis' debut on Capitol Records is the 11-track album titled Along the Axis. Tickets are $6 in advance.

BLACK AFFAIRS

Ways to cut black teenage unemployment

By C. RON ALLEN
Collegian Staff

Black teenagers represent 41.6 percent of the unemployed, making them the largest group in the jobless ranks.

In an effort to call attention to this problem, Essence magazine has published in its April issue an article aimed at helping black parents develop their teenagers for an aggressive job search.

Some of the tips offered by Beatryce Nivens, author of the Black Woman's Career Guide, include:

- Make sure your teenager has all the necessary documents needed for work. Check with his or her school or contact your state's education department for working paper forms.
- Know how much your child can expect to make. Most teenagers can expect to earn only minumum wage — $3.35 an hour.
- Know the types of jobs in which your teenager can expect to work: in recreational facilities; summer camps; fast food chains; summer camps; nonprofit agencies; private business; retail stores; and doctors' offices.
- Contact your child's school and talk with his or here guidance counselor about referals to summer employment programs for teens.
- Check with your local, state or federal government agency. In some cities agency run special summer employment programs for minority and or disadvantaged youths. Ask about eligibility requirements and deadlines.
- Locate your local Private Industry Council by looking in the telephone directory or asking your local employment or job search program. The 592 PICs across the country have summer youth employment programs for the economically disadvantaged.
- Check with your local YMCA or YWCA. Many throughout the country have summer-camp programs that hire teens.
- If your teenager is 18 years or older and wants to work at a summer camp, contact the American Camping Association at 43 West 23rd Street, New York City, 10010, which offers free placement service.
- Compile a list of black businesss and organizations from local black newspapers.

Contact each one and enquire about a summer job. Black business owners may need temporary help and may be concerned enough about the unemployment problem to make the commitment to give your son or daughter a job.

Former black affairs editor will be director of BMCP

Kimberly Burge, former editor of Black Affairs, has been appointed as music director of the Black Mass Communication Project (BMCP). As director, her responsibilities will include: writing up play lists and sending them to record companies; purchasing the records for disk jockeys; and getting in touch with record companies about publicity — posters, contests, etc. Burge will be starting her position next fall.

Burge, a sophomore, is a journalism major, minoring in Afro-American studies.

She has been a member of BMCP for a year and a half.

BMCP is a student broadcast training organization which was started in 1968 in space that was donated by WFCR-FM educational radio system.

In the fall, Burge will have six members of the BMCP organization to help her in her tasks.

Burge will be replacing Marc Elliot Giles, who will host the "Marc Elliot Show" on WMUA every Saturday. He will be graduating with a degree in sociology.

team played 12 games. "We're at the point now when if next Fall, a kid comes in who is a defensive phenom, we'll start him above somebody else who is a better hitter," said Bergquist. "Gary DiSarcina is a good shortstop and Rob Holiday is a good fielder at second, but outside of them, you can't be sure of anything."

This afternoon, a Dartmouth team that is 19-15 this season, but coming off a four-game split this past weekend, comes to Lorden Field for the final home games of the season for UMass.

The Green split doubleheaders with Cornell and Princeton and used most of their best pitching. With a conference twinbill on Saturday against Harvard, coach Mike Walsh (a UMass graduate) plans on using a variety of pitchers a few innings each.

Dartmouth is led by Tom DeMerit, a senior right fielder who is hitting a team-high .361 with team-highs in runs batted in (35) and home runs (eight). Freshman second baseman Jack Strauch is at .360.

Bergquist said that sophomore Matt Sheran (2-2, 5.06) will start the first game if his jammed wrist is healed. If not, second-game starter John Martin (4-4, 6.87) will work with Telegheder (0-1, 9.82) starting game two. Should Sheran pitch, Telegheder will be the first in relief, as Bergquist said he doesn't expect two complete games.

Minuteman Mutterings: Sheran has a 23-game hitting streak on the line. He has set a school record. Sheran is the only UMass player to start all 35 games. Jay Zerner has played in all 35. Sheran leads the team in at-bats (132) and stolen bases (16). Zerner is first in average (.395), hits (45), runs (36), walks (30), doubles (10), total bases (70), slugging percentage (.614) and on-base percentage (.517).

UMass track notebook

Men, women second in regionals

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's track team took second of 25 teams in the New England championships over the weekend, while the men's team was second in the Eastern Championships.

The UMass women trailed only powerful Boston University in the New England meet, highlighted by a 1-2 finish in the 400 meter race by Kayla Morrison and Sue Goldstein.

Morrison won the event with a quick 59.16. Goldstein was second with a 1:01.76.

The other UMass winners were the 4 x 100 meter relay, which turned a 48.05 to easily beat Northeastern's 50.20 and the 4 x 400 relay, which beat Northeastern with a 3:57.93.

"The whole team ran well," said UMass coach Kalekeni Banda. "I'm a little suprised we came in second, but that shows what we're capable of."

Other UMass scorers included a second by freshman Carla DeSantis in the javelin with a toss of 138-2 1/2. Hughes was also second in the long jump (17-7) and the 200 (25.45).

The 800 meter saw Barbara Cullinan and Sonja Vaughan go 2-3. Cullinan had a 2:15.49 with Vaughan turning a 2:15.61.

The 200 meter saw Hughes take second with a 25.45. Wendy Marshall was sixth. The 3,000 saw Sarah Kitchell get fourth with a 10:15.93.

The 4 x 800 team was fifth, Helen Balaouras was fourth in the discus and fifth in the shot and Mary Caulfield and Becky Martin went 4-6 in the 5,000.

"Everybody we took to the meet did well," said Banda. "It was an excellent meet for us."

The men tok second in the Eastern championships in New Britain, Connecticut.

The meet included Southern Connecticut, but none of the other traditional New England powers (BU, Northeastern, Boston College, Harvard, Tufts etc.).

Southern won the meet with 135 points. UMass was a distant second with 79 points. The University of Maine-Orono was third with 68. New Hampshire was fourth.

Winners for UMass included Mark Themea in the 1,500 with a 3:52.63, Rick Dow with a 14:47.32 in the 5,000 and Munroe in the 10,000 meters with a 31:38.86.

Other UMass scorers included Ferdie Adoboe with a second in the triple jump, Larry Cuddy was second in the 400 meter hurdles and Craig Moburg was third in the 800 meters with a 1:57.66.

Wayne Levy was fourth in the steeplechase with a 9:41.14 while the 1,600 meter relay team took third with a 3:25.95.

Gorillas fall to 11th, but are still in playoff hunt

Two points separate UMass from ninth place

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts lacrosse team, following a 7-4 loss at Rutgers on Saturday night, fell to 11th in the weekly Division 1 poll released yesterday.

The Gorillas fell from the top 10 for the first time in a month. The top 10 teams, selected by a committee and not according to the poll, will make the NCAA playoffs.

The poll saw some radical changes from last week's version. Rutgers moved from ninth to seventh after beating UMass, Loyola came from 11th to eighth, New Hampshire, with their seventh straight victory, moved into ninth position after being unranked all season while C.W. Post fell from seventh to 10th. UMass was 11th and the Army, after losing to New Hampshire, dropped to 12th from eighth the week prior.

However, two points separate the teams in ninth, 10th and 11th. New Hampshire has 57 points, Post has 56 while UMass totaled 56.

So where does this leave the Gorillas? To begin with, UMass plays at second-ranked Syracuse on Friday night. Beating the Orangemen will put UMass in.

A loss, if it's close, could also put UMass in as Post has two tough games left to play. Army will invade Post on Wednesday while Hofstra and Post will square off in a regional rivalry over the weekend. Should post lose to either team and UMass put in an impressive at Syracuse, the Gorillas could sneak in.

What of Army? The Cadets would be 7-5 with a win at Post and can claim they should be over UMass after their 8-7 overtime win in Amherst. A team with five losses, however, will have trouble being selected.

Loyola, in eighth, is done with its season and should have a berth secured. It comes down to New Hampshire, Post and UMass for the final two spots.

"The poll is really a tough thing to figure out, and it will probably be tougher next week," said UMass coach Dick Garber. "If we beat Syracuse, that will solve all our problems although we could still get in with a loss. Who knows?"

The Poll: 1. Johns Hopkins (all ten first-place votes) 9-1, 150 points; 2. Syracuse 13-2, 136; 3. Virginia 10-2, 132; 4. Maryland 9-2, 122; 5. North Carolina 8-3, 107; 6. Navy 8-3, 101; 7. Rutgers 11-3, 91; 8. Loyola 7-4, 67; 9. New Hampshire 8-3, 57; 10. C.W. Post 9-3, 56; 11. UMass 9-3, 55; 12. Army 6-5, 39; 13. Duke 11-4, 28; 14. Delaware 8-6, 22; 15. Adelphi 6-4, 11 and 15. Towson State 8-5, 11. (tie).

In yesterday's lacrosse article, Garber was accidently misquoted. Garber did not say "we did not play the second half without any desire." The coach said the team played a better first half then the second half. This error was due to an editing mistake and the Collegian apologizes for the mistake.

Senior defenseman Tom Aldrich was pulled from the Rutgers game midway through the third period with a painful back injury. Until that point, the co-captain had shut-down Rutgers' leading scorer, junior attackman Ed Trabulsy. Freshman Matt Woods replaced Aldrich, and according to Garber, played a strong game.

UMass did miss Aldrich trying to clear the ball out of its end and this hurt UMass play in the second half.

Junior defenseman John Jordan missed his third straight game, still suffering the effects of a bone bruise in his leg. Jordan can walk, but is unable to run. Garber said yesterday that it is "doubtful" Jordan will play. Aldrich, a native of Syracuse who has played some of his best lacrosse against the Orangemen, will probably attempt to play on Friday.

The ballots are in for post-season honors and several UMass players will be given hard looks by the both the North-South game committee and the All-American selection game committee.

The North-South game (a senior all-star game) could see Aldrich, defenseman Gerry Byrne or midfielder Greg Fisk selected. Junior attackman Tom Carmean (34 goals, 20 assists, 54 points), Aldrich and freshman goalie Sal LoCascio (6.2 goals-against, .682 save percentage) have a shot at either second or third team All-American or honorable mention. Aldrich, LoCascio, Carmean, attackman Greg Cannella, Byrne and Fisk are all good choices for the All-New England team. Carmean and Aldrich were chosen for that team last season.

"It's hard to say who has a shot at what," said Garber. "Sal is a fine goalie, but they usually go by how a team does, so a player from one of the top teams may be in better position."

Minutewomen rule league all-star team

Five UM players chosen

The season might not be over for the University of Massachusetts softball team, but the honors continue to roll in for the Atlantic-10 champions.

The A-10 All-Conference team was announced yesterday, with five spots occupied by head coach Elaine Sortino's 19th-ranked Minutewomen.

Selected to the All-Conference team for UMass were senior first baseman Beth Talbott, senior center fielder Sally Maher, senior pitcher Lynn Stockley, junior second baseman Carol Frattaroli and sophomore catcher Ilene Freeman.

Talbott is currently batting .263 with 17 runs batted in and 30 runs scored. She leads the team in extra-base hits with 16, and owns the UMass single-season record for triples with nine. Talbott owns a .988 fielding percentage with four errors in 335 chances including two double plays and is slugging at a .451 pace.

Maher, who was also named All-Conference in 1984 and 1985, is batting at a .309 clip with a team-high 23 RBI's (tied with sophomore shortstop Paige Kopcza). The senior co-captain also has 22 runs scored and leads the team in homeruns with two. She is slugging at a .424 pace and is seven-for-eight in stolen base attempts. In the field, Maher has a .979 fielding percentage, committing just one error in 47 chances and was named to the All-Tournament team over the weekend.

For Stockley, this is also her third consecutive selection to the All-Conference team. She is having a banner season with a 20-2 record and 0.23 earned run average. Three of those victories came in the A-10 tourney, as she also recieved All-Tournament honors and was named the tourney's Most Valuable Pitcher. Stockley has struckout 147 batters over 152.7 innings while walking only 29 this season.

Frattaroli, who was also named to the All-Tournament team, is second on the team in batting with a .350 mark. The junior co-captain leads the team in at-bats (140) and hits (49) and is currently involved in a four-game hitting streak. In addition, Frattaroli was named tournament Most Valuable Player and scored the game-winning run in the 3-2 championship game victory over Rutgers University. Frattaroli is sporting a .966 fielding percentage, with six errors in 178 chances. She joins Maher and Kopcza as the only Minutewomen to start all 43 games this year.

Freeman, a first-time member of the All-Conference team, is batting at a .304 clip with 21 RBI's and 20 runs scored. She is second on the team in extra-base hits (15) an leads the team in slugging percentage at a .496 mark. Her bases-loaded double in game one of the A-10 tournament propelled the Minutewomen to a 3-2 victory over Temple. Freeman has committed not a single error in 215 opportunities and was also named to the All-Tournament team.

Baseball hosting Dartmouth

Slumping Minutemen in search of a .500 record

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

Don't tell University of Massachusetts manager Dick Bergquist how important hitting is to baseball.

"We can hit, no doubt about that," said the coach. "But our pitching and defense is mediorce and look where we are, struggling to get to .500."

The Minutemen, at 15-20, have five games left this season, starting this afternoon at Lorden Field with a doubleheader against Dartmouth College. UMass has lost five of its last six games, including three straight.

"You could make a lot of excuses, but there really aren't any," said the veteran coach. "After losing at Rutgers, we were out of the Atlantic 10 race, but we still could've got to second in the New England poll, then we lose to Amherst and twice to Northeastern."

With five games left, the obvious goal is a break-even 20-20 season. After a 1-14 start, this would be a good accomplishment for a youthful Minuteman team.

"I know we're better than a .500 team, we can hit with anybody in New England, but we're proven again how important pitching and defense is. Last season, our pitching was mediorce, but we were great hitters and our defense did the job. Look how we did (26-19). This season, we can hit, but our pitching and defense is way off. Look where we are."

The Minutemen, traditionally, have been a strong team at the plate. Until the last few seasons, they had been a decent pitching team as well. This season, the staff earned run average is 5.78. Last season, it was 5.61 and 6.56 the season before that. UMass hasn't had a pitching staff with an ERA below four since 1980.

"I think hitting has passed pitching in college baseball," said Bergquist. "There is a lot of emphasis on the hitters in the off-season and of course, there's the aluminum bat. As a team, we still get the hitters, but we can't get the Mike Flanagan type of pitchers like we used to. All the good pitchers go down South."

But UMass still had a corps of pitchers, that before the season anyway, looked good.

"Some of the freshman didn't develop like we wanted them to. Then, Dave Telegheder got hurt, and he was one of the top three. He's just coming back. I don't think the seniors pitched well either. Pitching was a big disappointment.

"But the defense didn't help the pitching any. Outside of a few players, we really couldn't be sure what would happen to a ball in play. It wasn't just mediocre, it was atrocious," said Bergquist.

UMass has committed 88 errors this season and sport an awful .929 fielding percentage, the lowest since UMass began keeping that statistic in 1950, when the Town moratorium has exemptions

Low-income housing plans will be preserved

By DANIEL MILLER
Collegian Staff

A two-year moratorium on development in Amherst passed Monday by Town Meeting prohibits new building construction, but provides exemptions for some projects, including low- and moderate-income housing.

The Selectboard Monday night said it had been pressured that afternoon in a meeting in Boston with the state Executive Office of Communities and Development not to impose the moratorium on subsidized housing, according to Richard Minear, board chairman.

The moratorium was proposed April 17 after studies found that the town's water supply is becoming scarce and contaminated.

Barry Del Castilho, the town manager, warned of a worst-case scenario in which the town, without the moratorium, would eventually have the Atkins reservoir as its only water supply. The North Amherst reservoir is being chemically treated for trihalomethanes, cancer-causing chemicals.

The moratorium takes effect immediately, retroactive to April 17, as a zoning bylaw. Town Meeting passed it 154 to 63 after two hours of debate.

One section of the moratorium warrant exempts construction of low- and moderate-income housing subsidized by the state or federal government.

Minear said the executive office said it would no longer subsidize public housing construction in Amherst unless the section was included.

The executive office has recently funded six duplexes for low-income families and one duplex for mentally retarded persons to be constructed under the auspices of the Amherst Housing Authority, according to an AHA memo. The authority projects construction of 70 low- and moderate-income units in the next two years.

Minear said the office stressed that it is "not committed to any specific project. The EOCD insists that any project ... not be ruled out by a moratorium."

Other exceptions to the bylaw include: construction of accessory structures, such as signs, sheds and fences; repairs to existing structures; renovations that do not create additional dwelling units; replacement of sewer lines and septic tanks; public utility delivery systems; facilities to pump or treat water or sewage; reconstruction of structures destroyed by fire or flood; and some subdivisions of property.

Selectboard members estimate that 200 to 300 units will be built under the exemptions, and that as many as 2,300 units would have been built without the moratorium.

Although Amherst residents have expressed fears that a moratorium would boost rents, Joanne Levenson, director of the Off-Campus Housing Office at the University of Massachusetts, said the moratorium is responsive to "a land grab" by developers which is raising property values.

Police were 'looking for trouble' at concert

By PATRICK JOHNSON
Collegian Staff

Members of the Southwest Area Government yesterday charged University of Massachusetts police officers with "looking for trouble" during Sunday's outdoor concert because they used stricter security measures than at previous concerts.

Joel Rabinowitz, student security coordinator for the event, said the actions of the police were "extremely inconsistent with the Eastside concert [held a week before]."

He said he would be surprised to see police security at the Union Program Council concert this Sunday.

At the Southwest concert, 20 police officers roamed the concert area and arrested 17 minors for being in possession of alcohol. Police also videotaped the crowd of about 9,000 people.

Director of Public Safety Gerald T. O'Neil last month told the Collegian that police would ask those carrying alcohol into spring concerts for identification but would not check IDs inside the concert areas.

"The concert was so far overrestricted, it was pathetic," Rabinowitz said. "They [the police] were looking for trouble."

He asserted that police were searching for a reason to cancel all future Southwest rock shows.

O'Neil said the police went into the crowd and made the arrests because the University is liable for student safety and the police must enforce the University alcohol policy.

He defended the change in policy, saying, "If persons are obviously underage, our officers have no choice but to arrest them."

Bill Collins, the SWAG president, said the number of police Sunday was twice the number present at last year's show. "If the police had time to videotape the crowd, photograph men relieving themselves in the woods and look for easy marks [minors with alcohol], then we had too many police at the concert," he said.

"They were out to bag us ... There were no arrests made for fighting or disorderly conduct," he added.

Robert G. Joyce, chief of the campus police, responded, "Let Bill Collins claim what he wants ... if we didn't do our job, we would be violating an oath."

O'Neil said the videotapes would only be used to "show what it looks like ... Not to identify people in future court cases."

Joyce said his department will keep the tapes for future reference but will supply them to the administration upon request.

Sri Lankan student seeks jailed brother's release

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS
Collegian Staff

A Hampshire College student yesterday said he has initiated several petitions to seek the release of his brother, whom the government of Sri Lanka has arrested for suspected terrorism.

Sudarshan Manikkalingam, 21, a native of Sri Lanka who is a first-year Hampshire student, said his brother Ram was taken into custody March 28, but the English-language government newspaper, the Daily News, failed to report the arrest until April 23.

The newspaper report, which Sudarshan said was the first official recognition of the arrest, reported that Ram, 23, was arrested April 19 after being listed as missing since March 27, Sudarshan said.

Sudarshan said that Saturday his mother in Sri Lanka, accompanied by three police officers, spoke to Ram in Colombo, Sri Lanka's capital, for the first time since his arrest. Ram told his mother that he was arrested March 28 in that city, Sudarshan said.

A Sri Lankan embassy official in Washington, D.C., yesterday said Ram was arrested April 19 in the Eastern Province of the country under "suspicion of being involved with terrorist activities."

The official, John Gooneratne, would not elaborate on the case, but added that Sri Lankan officials are investigating under the provisions of the Prevention of Terrorism Act.

The act permits the Sri Lankan government to hold prisoners up to 18 months incommunicado and without trial, according to a 1985 report from Amnesty International, the London-based human rights organization.

A governmnent-decreed state of emergency has been in effect in Sri Lanka since 1983.

Sudarshan said his brother's arrest was initially covered up, and that he is being used as a "scapegoat" by the government because he is a Tamil, a minority sect in Sri Lanka.

Tamil separatists are waging an anti-government guerrilla war in the northern and eastern parts of the island nation. Sudarshan said that most Tamils in the southern city of Colombo, however, do not support the insurgency.

"My brother has not been involved in any violent crime," he said. "He is a prisoner of conscience.

"It is very simple. If they have any evidence against him, they should charge him and bring him in front of a court of law. If they don't, they should release him."

Detective's son charged in bookstore blaze

SOUTH HADLEY (AP) - A detective's son was charged yesterday with setting the second fire in five months that destroyed a popular bookstore across from Mount Holyoke College, police said. Karl W. Schenker, 21, pleaded innocent in Hampshire District Court in Northampton to a felony arson charge, which carries a possible 10-year sentence.

Schenker is the son of Police Lt. William L. Schenker, second-in-command and chief detective of the South Hadley Police Department.

After the arraignment, Schenker was ordered to undergo a psychiatric evaluation. No pre-trial conference date was set.

Schenker was not charged in the Dec. 14 fire that destroyed six stores in the 203-year-old College Inn complex, including the Odyssey Book Shop. Schenker was a cook at a restaurant in the complex and had reported the fire.

Fire officials at first attributed that fire to a faulty furnace, but state Fire Marshal Jay Bowman said yesterday the earlier blaze remained under investigation.

Bowman said William Schenker was not directly involved in that investigation but "was extremely cooperative."

Bowman declined to discuss evidence that led to the charge and the arson determination. Bowman said no other arrests were planned in connection with Monday's fire, which destroyed the reopened bookstore bordering the town common.

Karl Schenker worked for a year as a cook for Mark and Elaine Avgoustakis, operators of the College Inn, until the December fire. Mark Avgoustakis said Schenker was hired at their Adelphia Restaurant in January and worked there until about three weeks ago, but he would not say why Schenker left.

"Oh my God," he said when he heard Schenker was being charged in connection with the Odyssey fire. Avgoustakis said he never had any problems with Schenker. "He's a hard worker, always on time. He was all right."

Odyssey owner Romeo Grenier said he didn't know Schenker well.

"If he did that to us I wouldn't know if it would be vindictive or not," Grenier said.

Joan Rivers will get her own talk show this fall

LOS ANGELES (AP) - Comedian Joan Rivers will challenge longtime late-night kin~ Johnny Carson with her own talk show this fall, the new Fox Broadcasting Co. announced yesterday.

Miss Rivers will be host of the one-hour, five-day-a-week program, which will kick off the Fox Broadcasting Network's plans to gradually introduce a fourth network of regularly scheduled series to compete with ABC, CBS and NBC. Her contract with Fox is for three years.

Since 1983, Miss Rivers has been the sole guest host on NBC's "Tonight Show." According to Fox, Miss Rivers' contract to fill in for Carson lapses in August. She has two stints remaining on that contract, Fox said.

Plans call for Miss Rivers, who has made her comic reputation lampooning such well-known figures as Elizabeth Taylor and Britain's Queen Elizabeth, made a stir last June by saying she wasn't on an NBC list of 10 candidates to replace Carson when the host retires.

NBC said such a list didn't exist, but Miss Rivers said it was an internal memo from an NBC vice president. She didn't name the executive.

Tokyo summit closes; progress is made on terrorism, trade

TOKYO (AP) - Leaders of the industrialized democracies ended a "smooth summit" yesterday voicing satisfaction that they confronted terrorism while moving toward new trade talks and a revamped world monetary policy—two principal goals of the economic conference.

Although the United States, Britain, Canada, France, Japan Italy and West Germany failed to come to grips with the divisive and volatile issue of farm export subsidies, they did agree to a host of other initiatives, including coordinated efforts to improve nuclear safety in the wake of the Chernobyl reactor accident in the Soviet Union.

But for world leaders newly committed to fighting terrorism, the summit closed on the same raucous note that marred its opening: Japanese radicals seeking to sabotage the proceedings descended on subway and train stations with smoke bombs packed with firecrackers, crippling rush-hour traffic, but claiming no casualties, in a city turning weary under a welter of unprecendented security restrictions.

And for President Reagan, there came a threat from Palestinian radical Abul Abbas, in a broadcast report, to target America for terrorist attacks.

"Let him try," Reagan declared, responding to reporters' questions.

The president's top aides declared that the Reagan administration had come away from the summit with much of what it had sought, including a statement of unity against terrorism, which singled out Moammar Khadafy's Libya "in particular."

Britain's prime Minister Margaret Thatcher declared "mission accomplished." US Treasury Secretary James A. Baker said, "It was a smooth summit," West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl proclaimed: "We were able to achieve good results." And Italian Prime Minister Bettino Craxi said he came away from the summit gathering "with full satisfaction."

Greed may have been the motive in Boston beating death of homeless man

BOSTON (AP) - A homeless man found beaten to death in a parking lot yesterday may have been attacked by other destitute men who thought he had some money because he was "a new face on the streets," a shelter official said.

Investigators said Stanley Osnoe, 50, was living at the Pine Street Inn, a shelter for homeless men and women in the city's South End, several blocks from the parking lot where his body was found shortly before 5 a.m.

But police, shelter officials and homeless people at the shelter yesterday said they know little about the man.

"We haven't been able to find anybody that knows him," said Randy Bailey, assistant director at the shelter. "One of the things about Pine Street is we don't ask for names at the door and chitty forms. Someone could come in here and probably be pretty anonymous before one of the staff gets to know him." That, he said, could take up to a month.

Bailey said it was likely Osnoe was new to town, and as a new person was subjected to additional dangers.

"A new face on the street is more prone to violence," Bailey said. He said other street people think: "New guy on the street; nobody's seen him before; maybe he has money."

A medical examiner's report said Osnoe died from a "blunt force" to the head. No arrests were made and no weapon was recovered, police said.

Police spokesman Jack Kervin said Osnoe's pockets were turned inside out and he had no money on him, according to the police report.

Louis' Foods bids farewell to downtown

By JEANETTE DeFORGE

For many food shoppers, yesterday was a day to reminisce as Louis' Foods supermarket, a landmark of Amherst Center, sold the last loaf of bread at its North Pleasant Street location.

"We're giving them [the last customer] a $63 gift certificate because we've been here 63 years," said owner Richard Vincent.

Natalie Roach Drake, who has shopped at Louis' since she was four years old, was awarded the the gift certificate after buying a can of tomato soup, among other items.

"I probably bought more tomato soup here than anyone has ever," she said. "This is my memorial can of tomato soup. They put it all away but I grabbed the last lone can."

Louis' Foods is scheduled to reopen at 10 a.m. Saturday at its new location, the corner of University Drive and Amity Street.

A CVS pharmacy will open in Louis' former location, leaving downtown Amherst without a supermarket.

"There was the basic need to expand our business, we're not able to do it here," Vincent said.

Vincent's father, Joseph Vincent, said he started to work at Louis in 1935. He bought the business in 1948 with his brother Wally and recently retired.

"I work summers and I rest six months [in Florida]. I work six months here because I know everybody and everyone knows me," he said, as he packed food remaining on the shelves into cardboard boxes to transport to the new store.

"There isn't much to my story but a lot of hard work and sweat. I used to work 13 to 15 hours a day, but I loved it," he said.

While father and son popped the corks of champagne bottles, a straggler walked though the door. "We're closed," said Melissa Lainchill, a Louis' cashier. "Very closed."

1 Grad Senate vote deadlocked

BY SEAN CASEY
Collegian Staff

One of the two contested races for officers' positions in the Graduate Student Senate resulted in a tie last night and will be decided in a runoff election next week.

The election for senate vice president, which is being sought by public health student Ralph Sbragia and history student Jonathan Frank, ended in a 40-40 deadlock with 26 abstentions.

The senate will hold another general meeting for graduate students next Tuesday night to break the tie.

In other votes, Nancy Muller-Milligan defeated Antony Zografos in the race for senate executive officer.

Senate president George Claxton, who was running unopposed, was reelected to his post, while current executive officer Gary Jakacky was elected treasurer. Jakacky also ran unopposed.

Graduate students also approved by a wide margin a $3 waivable fee to support the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group, identical to the fee approved by undergraduates two weeks ago.

The MassPIRG fee appears on graduate students' bills, but they were not allowed to vote in the undergraduate referendum.

Muller-Milligan said that she wants to use graduate student positions on various University committees to "shape university policies affecting the graduate community.

"I am committed to recognition of graduate student input and [I will] deepen this commitment to the quality of life for graduate students on this campus," she added.

Claxton said he will seek to establish graduate student positions on the Board of Regents of Higher Education and the UMass Board of Trustees, and to make the Authority Fee more equitable for graduate students.

Jakacky said he aims to rebuild the depleted senate monetary reserve funds and will also examine the funding arrangement for the University's proposed athletic and convocation center.

Graduate voters also approved a constitutional amendment which clarifies the senate's authority to speak for graduate students.

The amendment was suggested by the senate's lawyers as a more supportive mandate for the body which may help avoid future problems with administrators, Claxton said.

Veto of motion on Coors beer ban is withdrawn

The Student Government Association campus president, Bill Bennett, late Monday withdrew his veto of the Undergraduate Student Senate's rejection of a motion on Coors beer.

The motion, defeated by one vote at last Wednesday's senate meeting, would have urged that the Campus Center Board of Governors reconsider its decision last spring to ban the sale of Coors in the Campus Center/Student Union complex.

Bennett vetoed the rejection of the motion, saying the vote was too close. But yesterday, he said, "I withdrew my veto motion because I went to the BOG last Thursday to express the concerns of other senators. I will also be going to the meeting of the [BOG] executive board Wednesday night to ask them to reevaluate the decision in September."

John Hayes, BOG chairman, said, "I think it [the withdrawal] was smart. He recognizes the relationship between the SGA and the BOG.

"If we can't work constructively we will respect each other's separate powers," Hayes said.

Alex Zucker, who was chairman when the board decided last spring to ban Coors from the Campus Center, said, "I think it was a very smart thing to do politically ... He [Bennett] is playing mediator and doing a good job."

The BOG decided on the ban after hearing arguments that the Coors brewing firm practices union-busting, subjects workers to demeaning lie-detector tests and surveillance and discriminates against women, minorities, gays and lesbians.

Students who want the board to reconsider have noted that in a subsequent referendum, 70 percent of students who voted answered "yes" when asked whether the BOG "overstepped its bounds."

Men charged with assault, disturbance after fight

A 21-year-old Arlington man was charged with assault with a knife and a 23-year-old Amherst man was charged with disorderly conduct in connection with an incident at 12:10 a.m. yesterday outside an Amherst Center bar, Amherst police said.

A community service officer called police after he broke up a fight between the two accused and two other men, ages 24 and 25, both of Amherst. The two Amherst men were attacked by the other two men outside The Pub, police said.

In other police reports:

A 14-year-old Amherst boy received facial scratches after he was reportedly assaulted by two men yesterday at 8 p.m., near a sandwich shop on North Pleasant Street, police said.

The boy, who was with his 15-year-old uncle when the alleged assault occurred, told his mother the men pushed him down and scratched his face after accusing him of "looking at a woman," police said.

The boy described the men as having blond hair, in their twenties and about 5 feet 9 inches tall. His mother reported the incident to the police at about 10 p.m.

A 22-year-old University of Massachusetts student told police she was kicked in the abdomen by one man and had beer spilled on her by another at 10:15 p.m. Monday on East Pleasant Street, police said.

A $200 watch, a $130 35-millimeter camera and a $50 pair of ski gloves were reported stolen at 4 p.m. Monday from a room on the 10th floor of Washington Tower, which was broken into with a screw driver, police said.

A $180 gold watch and $120 gold chain were reported stolen from an unlocked room at 1:40 p.m. Monday from the 22nd floor of John Adams Tower, police said.

A wallet with $190 was reported stolen at 8 p.m.Monday from Andy's Pizza on University Drive, police said. The wallet was owned by a 30-year-old man from Greece.

A woman was struck by a bicycle rider and attended to by paramedics at 3:18 p.m. Monday on the sidewalk near Memorial Hall. She apparently was not seriously hurt and sought treatment on her own, UMass police said.

An adding machine worth $150 was reported stolen at 8:32 a.m. Monday from the first floor of Draper Hall in the Labor Relations Research Center, police said.

Sudarshan also said that at 6 p.m. yesterday an aide from US Sen. Edward M. Kennedy's office pledged support in working for the release of his brother.

No one on Kennedy's staff could be reached last night to confirm this.

The brothers' father, now deceased, once served as Sri Lanka's ambassador to Indonesia. "If my father was alive this wouldn't have happened," Sudarshan said.

The petition, dated April 23, states: "It has been confirmed that Ram is in custody. We ask that he be promptly charged in court, allowed legal counsel and visitation by his family and his family doctor, or that he be released."

Sudarshan said more than 1,000 students and faculty have signed the petition at Hampshire; about 2,000 at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, from which Ram was graduated in 1985; and 1,500 at Wellesley College, where Ram's girlfriend is a student. He said he also wants to circulate the petition at the University of Massachusetts.

Fun in the sun; studying too

For University of Massachusetts students who like the idea of spending the summer in the Caribbean but need science credits, the UMass Puerto Rican Exchange Program is offering students a five-week course in ecology in Puerto Rico.

"Tropical Ecology through the Natural History of Puerto Rico," a field-oriented four-credit course, will take students through different areas of the island to explore tropical rain forests, mangrove swamps and coral reefs.

Gloria Bernabe-Ramos, director of the program, said the course, taught in English, is open to any student who has taken two biology, botany, zoology or ecology courses and has a grade point average of at least 2.5. The course runs from June 6 to July 9.

"There is no way you could get that experience here at UMass," Bernabe-Ramos said. "We simply don't have the environment."

"The University of Puerto Rico at Cayey in the mountains is the base but students will be spending half their time in the field. They will see it first-hand, not in a book," she said.

Bernabe-Ramos estimated the cost of the program, including transportation, at about $900.

"Because of the University of Puerto Rico exchange with UMass, the course is very inexpensive," she said. "Similar programs without the airfare cost about $1,500."

The exchnge office is located in E-21 Machmer Hall.

Analogy distorts truth

This is in response to the May 5 letter by Nicole Vuillemenot. I feel I must comment on how she approached the issue of abortion.

I am not an abortion advocate. However, I am not against it either. The purpose is not to discuss the pros and cons of abortion.

I was extremely disheartened and disturbed at the vulgarity in the way Vuillemenot approached this issue. It was truly an ugly analogy to compare abortion to rape and murder. My best friend from childhood through grade school was not just raped, but also murdered. For someone to even think of comparing abortion to either of these two things is not only distasteful, it is utterly disgusting.

Come on, Vuillemenot, you must be a fairly educated young woman. Can't you think of a more tactful or diplomatic way to get your point across? There are other more persuading ways to discuss this issue than the repulsive analogies of rape and murder.

Abortion is indeed a difficult issue for both the parties involved and the unborn child. But let us keep things in perspective, please. Analogies like those are distorted and do nothing but turn a lot of people off.

Spewster alert

I am a spewster. There are many of us wandering around campus, talking endlessly on issues of questionable importance, such as Nicaragua, Randy Donant, Coors, Reagan, South Africa, and anything else which may effect our lives.

There are two classes of spewsters: the "in-class" and the "actives." The in-class reserve their hot air attacks to classroom discussion. They tend to be Poli-Sci majors, but English and Journalism make up a good proportion. The in-class spewster has a big mouth, fueled by theCollegian or the front page of the Boston Globe. When there is actual work to be done on an issue, this breed of spewster is nowhere to be found.

Tim Kress

The other category of spewsters, the "actives"; are the maniacs you see hanging posters in the Campus Center. They sit at the concourse tables and make up the majority of the RSO's and student governing bodies. These people have a petition or two with them at all times and are always happy to enlighten you on their perspectives. Active spewsters are the subject of many a Collegian article and constantly haunt the ED/OP page. They build altars to themselves, pinning up their Collegian clippings in their rooms (you should see mine). These spewsters represent every ideology, although some create their own as they go along.

The active spewsters are the folks we are all so tired of reading and hearing about every day. I wish I could name a few of the heavies but the list runs into the hundreds. This will disappoint those wishing to see their names once again in print (spewsters live on recognition the way vampires live on blood).

Most people dismiss spewsters as a bunch of loudmouthed idealogues. This is largely true, but the other side of it is that the vast majority of students who actually play an active role in the workings of this University are the spewsters. We may act a bit silly at marches and rallys, but we spend many long and thankless hours in unseen offices, meeting rooms, and at typewriters, fighting the administration and each other on matters that effect our lives as students. Spewsters make possible the large amount of student input that exists at UMass. We have one of the most active and influential student bodies in the nation.

Before condemning the UMass spewster, try to imagine a University where there is no diversity or exchange of opinion. The only effective administrative watchdogs at UMass are the students who care enough to involve themselves. Thanks to them we have a balanced institution, rich in culture and diverse viewpoints. The annoying and obnoxious spewsters serve a valuable public service. If you see me lurking about the Campus Center with papers in hand, do not be afraid. I am practicing the art of spewing. It is in my nature and I wouldn't have it any other way.

Taking a ride down memory lane

Andrew Wolff

As I write this, I break a promise made to myself when I began college almost four years ago. I said I would never write a farewell piece because the audience would not care much about my school experiences. Now, with only a few hours left in my formal education, I have reconsidered and decided that I must produce this nostalgic prose if not for everyone, then at least for myself.

I bought a bicycle two weeks ago and, although it was the best thing I could have done for my health, I have learned that it will make leaving the Valley much tougher.

During my daily bike rides the past two weeks, I have seen mountain ranges and midnight stars like I never have before. I have crossed the paths of young fathers and mothers carrying infants in neat and cozy papoose sacks slung over their shoulders. I have pedaled past senior citizens clipping hedges and raking leaves in their small yards and I have listened to an elderly woman express her excitement over budding spring flowers to me.

I have raced a young kid in my neighborhood who I have always seen playing alone, but have never met. This day, he was on his three-speed, banana seat bike and I was on my ten-speed, finishing the final downhill stretch of a 7-mile trek. He bolted out from behind a parked car where his dog was tied and flashed a toothless grin at me while quietly revving his imaginary engines. Then, he joined me on the pavement. I let him lead by a few feet before he told me that if he had his speedometer, he could show me that he was going "like 60 miles a hour."

On the darker side, I have carefully plotted how to avoid angry dogs chasing me and nipping at my toe clip straps. I have survived "bicycle-blind motorists" trying to beat a red light. I have had to swerve around crowing roosters, smashed skunks and foot-deep potholes. I have survived Belchertown Road everyday during rush hour and been shoved mercilessly by the gusting winds there.

The point is, I have spread myself beyond our cement block campus and notice-splattered bus shelters. I have abandoned my obsession with getting drunk and sleeping late (temporarily) and have seen things in Amherst, Leverett, Pelham and Belchertown that, once I am part of the working press, I may never get to appreciate again.

As a result, I have tried my hardest to stop the clock but my unsuccessful effort is wearing me down. I have refused to do so much as glimpse at a calendar. Just wake me when my parents arrive, then I'll know it's May 25 and time for commencement.

I have contemplated tossing aside my anticipated career as a grimy reporter for a much cleaner and calmer life. What I could do in that life I have not yet decided. But one thing is for sure: the prospect of living in a six-day-on-one-day-off work world is too depressing even to consider.

So, for the next 18 days, I'll be trying to bottle this Valley, so that when I take to the road as a graduate, I'll have a little something to remind me that not only was my time in the classroom important, but seeing what was outside the classroom was equally vital. And, when I start my job, I will find solace in the fact that I appreciated this Valley, and that writing a farewell piece was worth breaking a promise.

Andrew Wolff is a Collegian staff member.

Extremely hazardous behavior

Tuesday morning, several minutes after midnight, four or five irresponsible individuals triggered false fire alarms in four of the five Southwest Towers. Over 2,000 students were evacuated, and the Fire Department with responded nearly their entire firefighting force, stripping the Town of Amherst of its fire protection.

These false fire alarms represent a continued pattern of increases in malicious alarm activations that began last year. The mature adults that comprise 99% of the student body learned long ago that fire alarm systems are to be utilized only for emergencies.

When a $100,000 fire alarm system is abused,it cannot do it's job — provide early warning and adequate escape time for residents in a building confronted with a fire emergency. Why? Because after a number of false alarms, residents no longer react to the warning horns, and place themselves in jeopardy if a real fire emergency were to occur.

In addition, responding emergency personnel are placed at risk should they be involved in a traffic accident en route. A local firefighter was killed several years ago responding to a false fire alarm. False fire alarms commit fire apparatus and manpower to what turns out to be a non-emergency, when they may be needed and thus delayed in responding to a real fire emergency on the other side of town.

It is a shame that a handful of children can tarnish the image of an otherwise concerned and responsible student body.

Wrong

This is in response to Rusty Denton's puritanical May 6th column on women and his interpretation of the messages people send by their mode of dress. First of all, I would like to know what kind of a native he is referring to by his phrase "going native." If he means native Northeast American, I am certain they were fully clothed (considering the climate in New England) during most of the year. If he means Pacific Islanders, Asians, Africans, etc. then he is being insulting to some of the oldest civilizations in the world.

Secondly, I am amazed that Denton seems to be familiar enough with the innermost thoughts of a woman's mind to presume to know the type of messages they intend to give off by their manner of dress. Men who assume that a woman dresses entirely for their benefit are ignorant and misguided. We women are not responsible if narrow minded people like Denton get a "vicarious thrill" by seeing us in scanty attire, then he has a problem that needs psychiatric evaluation. It is true that small children are beautifully uninhibited until people like him spoil their innocence and make them feel ashamed of their bodies.

Finally, it is interesting to note that he overlooked the most obvious reason for wearing less clothes in hot weather: Comfort.

Students know

In the May 6 Collegian, I was quoted as saying "I am just trying to represent the student's best interest." I never made such a statement. The reason I brought the motion about Coors back into the senate is because the students voted to keep Coors on campus, yet it is no longer available. I feel that nobody represents the "best interests" of the students. The students are smart enough to know their own "best interests."

(Editor's note: The reporter stands by her story.)

The peculiar evil of silencing the expression of an opinion is that it is robbing the human race: posterity as well as the existing generation; those who dissent from the opinion, still more than those who hold it. If the the opinion is right, they are deprived of the opportunity of exchanging error for truth; if wrong, they lose, what is almost as great a benefit, the clearer perception and livelier impression of truth produced by its collision with error.

ZAMI-A New Spelling of My Name
Audre Lorde
Crossing Press, 256 pp, $8.95

Known by most as autobiographies, Audre Lorde calls her tale about herself, Zami-A New Spelling of My Name, as biomythology.

The book is a series of Lorde's recollections until around her twenty-third birthday. Growing up in New York, being black and a lesbian in the fifties was no mean feat. As Lorde grew up she experienced the different things that life threw at her, including the suicide of her first true friend, her first lesbian experiences and an interesting trip to Mexico.

"Zami. A Carriacou name for women who work together as friends and lovers."

A poet from a very young age, Lorde, who is now a well known poet gradually came to realize what the difference between friends and lovers is. She shows her path to finding and loving and respecting yourself.

Zami-A New Spelling of My Name is an interesting and satisfying story of a women's young life. It is similar, in a strange way, to Simone DeBeauvoir's Memories of a Dutiful Daughter. While I question Audre Lorde's ability to remember things so clearly from when she was two, the memories which are written in a most sensual, ethereal style. I found the book to be rather touching. When she is down and out, the reader really hopes she will get through. There are many books around about women dealing with adolecence but there is something more to this one (perhaps her insight) which makes it all the more worth reading.

THEATRE REVIEW

Sleepless Night: Drama in a bed

By PAUL LOUIS
Collegian Correspondent

As part of Southwest week, the Southwest Community Theatre put on Three More Sleepness Nights last week. A one act play, Three More Sleepless Nights is a delightful insight into relationships between women and men, and the distance that can result from intimacy.

It examines the lives of three sets of bed partners, and through their tossing and turning turmoil we see the love and hate inherent in each relationship.

The play uses only one bed, which the four characters get in and out of. In British accent they duke out their grievances, and though the arguments cover a spectrum of complaints, such hilarious moments as "We don't have any money because you buy frozen food", it becomes clear as things roll along that most of the conflict is due to the jealousy caused by extramarital relations.

In the first scene we discover that Margaret (Megan Gerachis), though married to Frank (Sean Smith), is sleeping with Pete (Paul Di Dominico). The second scene opens with Pete in bed with a spaced out woman named Dawn (Linda Pazzotti). They argue over Margaret. In the closing scene Pete and Margaret are in bed and the situation involves understanding and love. Pete raves about the movies he loves and has some interesting thoughts such as "the microchip can complete 10,000 electronic processes in a second" and Margaret partly listens to him.

The play as a whole worked well. Each of the characters contained something human in them. Margaret and Frank are hagglers trapped in a hopeless marriage. Pete is the intellectual and Dawn the neurotic. The play ends on a positive note, with the implication that two people can find sanctuary together from the madness of the world. This happens when Margaret and Frank kiss and agree that their affair, though ludicrous is compassionate.

The individual performances of the actors was terrific, the highlight was Megan Gerachis who was wonderful at acting utterly disgusted. The show kept the audience aroused the entire 40 minutes with its hilarity, disarray and finally satisfaction.

The only problem with the show was its punctuality. Although play is complete in itself, it lacked fullness because the conclusion comes so fast. After the curtain, much of the audience stayed in their seats asking, "that's all?"

Three More Sleepless Nights was a remarkable performance for all those who were there to see it. The intensity of the acting and the closenes of the small audience to the stage brought it to life. Despite its brevity, it brought a twinkle of good drama to the fervor of Southwest week.

Miracle Legion, above, from New Haven, and two bands from Boston; The Nova Mob and the Visigoths will play a free concert at the Blue Wall tonight at 8 p.m. Influences range from R.E.M. to Joy Division though all three bands are entirely originall and thoroughly exciting live. Both Miricle Legion and the Visogoths have records out and Miricle Legion have recently received rave reviews in the British press.

Radioactive rain from Soviet accident not harmful to US

WASHINGTON (AP) - The United States has picked up its first ground-level radioactivity from the Chernobyl nuclear accident, the special interagency task force monitoring accident developments said yesterday.

A rainwater sample collected at 4:30 p.m. PDT Monday at Richland, Wash., measured 500 picocuries per liter of iodine-131, according to a report from Pacific Northwest Laboratories, the task force said in a statement.

The actual level could be anywhere between 250 to 1,000 picocuries per liter because of uncertainty in the measurement, the task force said.

"This level poses no danger to residents in the area," the statement said. "The radiation dose to an individual drinking one liter of rainwater about a quart at this level would be less than 1 percent of the average annual background radiation dose and is comparable to less than half the radiation dose received from a single chest x-ray."

The dose would be even lower from simple physical contact with the rainwater.

Iodine-131 has a half-life of 8.1 days—which means that every 8.1 days the radioactivity it gives off has been reduced by 50 percent.

Softball ranked 20th

The University of Massachusetts softball team fell to 20th in the NCAA Division 1 poll, despite winning the Atlantic 10 Conference Tournament in three straight games.

The Minutewomen slumped from 19th to 20th in the poll in spite of going 8-1 since the last poll was released.

UMass, with 11 points, trails Oklahoma State in 19th (13 points) and 18th-ranked Pacific (26 points).

California State-Fullerton leads the poll with 140 points.

In the Northeast rankings, UMass retained its top-seeding with a 36-7 record. Adelphi (27-18-1) is second and Connecticut (28-15-1) is third.

UMass will participate in the NCAA Regionals, one of 16 teams nationally to do so. Those bids will be released next Monday, May 12.

Haight 1st USFL pick

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK - When the Orlando Renegades made Iowa's Mike Haight the No. 1 pick yesterday in the USFL draft, he had not heard that the NFL's New York Jets had released their five-time All-Pro offensive tackle, Marvin Powell.

But his glee was evident as his voice crackled over the telephone line from Iowa City. "If they're cutting him, it must mean they're making room for someone else," he said. "I hope it's me."

He did acknowledge, though, that the Jets also drafted a tackle, Doug Williams of Texas A & M, in the second round.

A week ago, Haight had been drafted by the Jets in the first round, the 22nd player picked in the more-publicized NFL draft. Now, he was number one in the younger, struggling league.

"It's been a real big surprise," he said. And yes, he added, he would think about playing in the USFL.

So would big Tony Casillas, the Oklahoma nose tackle. He was the second pick overall in each league.

The Atlanta Falcons chose him a week ago, and the Arizona Outlaws picked him yesterday. Casillas made it clear where his sentiments lay.

The third pick was a surprise. Youngstown State wide receiver Robert Thompson, the 142nd pick in the NFL by the Philadelphia Eagles, was taken by the Jacksonville Bulls. Plymouth State running back Joe Dudek, ignored by the NFL, went to the Tampa Bay Bandits in the fourth-round, the 25th player selected overall.

Aldrich on WMUA

Men's lacrosse co-captain Tom Aldrich will the guest on WMUA-FM's (91.1) Sportstalk tonight from 6-7 p.m.

Aldrich will talk about the 11th-ranked Gorillas and their upcoming game at second-ranked Syracuse (on Friday night) with host Dan Leberfeld.

said Bergquist. "But I suppose we're playing at home and he's got that streak on the line, so you give it to him."

Dartmouth coach Mike Walsh, a UMass graduate from the mid 1970's, wasn't exactly true to his school yesterday.

In the first game, the umpires called two balks on Dartmouth starter Chris Hildenbrand, one that cost the Big Green a run.

Walsh fought with the umpires before heading back to the dugout. He then pulled out his rulebook and insisted that Bergquist, coaching third at the time, had to have at least one foot in the coaching box at all times. Bergquist had been standing three feet beyond the box.

Bergquist, a 27-year veteran of college baseball, laughed off the challenge from his younger counterpart, but stayed in the box. Walsh later called a suicide squeeze (that worked) when Dartmouth was ahead, 8-4, showing some true Ivy League class.

McKeowen's blast gives UM split

Junior second baseman Rob Holiday takes his cuts in yesterday's game against Dartmouth. The Minutemen split two games with Dartmouth.

Eighth-inning homer dumps Dartmouth, 8-7

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

Some 275-pound offensive lineman trying to take your head off while throwing a block. That's pressure. Trailing by one run in extra innings? Nah.

Freshman catcher John McKeown crushed a Jim White fastball over everything in left field for a two-run homer in the bottom of the eighth to give the University of Massachusetts baseball team an 8-7 win over Dartmouth and a split of their double-header yesterday at Lorden Field.

McKeown, an All-New England linebacker last fall for the Minuteman football team, was starting only his eighth game of the season, but made the most of his chance, going three-for-four with two extra-base hits (he also slapped a double).

"It's just like football I guess, I love playing under pressure," said McKeown. "I saw it was a fastball and I thought about practice yesterday when I hit one just as hard. I laid into it, and when I hit it I knew it was out."

With an 11-7 loss in the first game, UMass can not finish above .500. The Minutemen are now 16-21 with three games left. UMass plays a single game at Harvard this afternoon at 3 p.m.

"We looked awful in the first game, but we really came together in the second," said UMass manager Dick Bergquist. "We got some good relief pitching and, of course, we had John (McKeown). I didn't think about pinch-hitting him for a better bunter, but I did decide to let him hit the first strike before thinking about making him bunt. I'm glad I did.

In the first game, UMass scored four runs in the bottom of the seventh to make the score respectable, but looked bad in losing its fourth straight.

Big Green starter Chris Hildenbrand worked six innings, scattering seven hits while allowing three runs, two earned. He struck out two and walked three. Dave Hammond was beat on for four runs and four hits in the last inning, but survived."

Dartmouth scored three in the first inning thanks to Jim Lavery's three-run homer off of starter (and loser) Matt Sheran, 2-3. The Green scored one in the third before Bergquist pulled Sheran in favor of freshman Dave Telegheder.

The rookie started strong, but fell apart quickly. In three-plus innigs, he allowed eight hits, seven runs (all earned) and three walks. He struck out a pair. Jeff Richardson mopped up.

For UMass, freshman Mike Chambers ripped three hits: two doubles and one homer (a two-run job to the opposite field in the seventh). Jay Zerner, Sean Flint and Gene Dias also drove in runs.

The second game started badly for UMass. Senior right-hander John Martin allowed an infield single to lead-off batter John Hommeyer. Martin then threw past first baseman Mike Owens on a pick-off and Hommeyer took second. A passed ball put the runner on third before a Martin wild pitch made it 1-0, Dartmouth.

In the UMass half of the first, Chambers took Keven Griffin's first pitch over the fence in left for his second homer in as many pitches. Chambers was five-for-eight on the day with four extra-base hits and three runs batted in.

Martin dodged a threat in the second, but allowed three runs in the third. Hommeyer singled before Martin walked Todd Twachtmann. Mitchell then drilled the next pitch up the hill behind the right field fence, some 400 feet away, for a 4-1 lead.

But UMass answered right back. Chambers was walked on four pitches and Matt Sheran singled to extend his hitting streak to 25 games (see story). Zerner then belted a dinger to right to knot the score at four.

Dartmouth drove Martin off the mound in the fifth. Hommeyer walked, Twachtmann was hit by a pitch before Mitchell hit a blast to center that Sheran tracked down. Hommeyer tagged and took third. Another wild pitch put Twachtmann on second before Lavery walked. Bergquist saw enough, bringing in hard-throwing sophomore Steve Allen.

Allen was greet by a shot off his leg off the bat of Bob Jones. The ball deflected into left, scoring two runs. Shortstop Gary DiSarcina got the second out by cutting down Lavery at the plate after a grounder. Chambers ended the inning with a diving stab of a line-drive foul.

Allen, in three and two-thirds, allowed one run, (it was unearned) while striking out two and walking one. He surrendered four hits and went to 2-0 on the season.

UMass scored two in the fifth to tie the game at six as Steve Kern's double plated Sheran (walk and steal of third) and Zerner (single and steal of second). Neither team mounted a threat in the sixth or seventh, forcing extra innings.

Dartmouth scored in the eighth as Chris Bunker singled, took second on a ground-out and third on an error by DiSarcina. Hommeyer's single up the middle put the vistors up 7-6.

But Kern singled to lead off the UMass eighth, Dias ran for him, then McKeown ended it with his homer.

For UMass, Chambers, Zerner and Kern had two hits. The Minutemen ripped 12 for the game.

Sheran's streak now at 25

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts sophomore Matt Sheran extended his hitting streak to 25 games with a hit in each game of yesterday's double-header against Dartmouth College at Lorden Field.

Sheran started the first game on the mound, and was driven off after two and two-thirds innings. But at the plate, he reached on a bunt his second time up.

In the second game, Sheran was in center field and during his first at-bat, he ripped a line drive to right field that seemed sure to extend the streak. Dartmouth's Mark Mitchell made a great play, however, extending his body with a dive to snare the ball just above the ground.

The second time up, in the third inning, Sheran came up with Mike Chambers on first and one out. With the infield playing in looking for the double play, he hit the ball down the first base line.

The ball took a bad hop and hit first baseman Jim Lavery before bounding into right. The play, maybe, could have been made.

Hit or error? Official scorer Bob Donahue quickly ruled it a hit, extending the school-record setting streak. However both the umpire (who shook his head when the announcement was made) and UMass manager Dick Bergquist disagreed.

"I didn't think it was a hit, personally,"

Commencement security set

Seniors will face 'visual' booze search

By ANDREW WOLFF
Collegian Staff

Seniors will not be searched when they enter the University of Massachusetts stadium for undergraduate commencement May 25, but they will be required to carry their gowns into the stadium so that officials can detect any concealed alcohol, the director of public safety said yesterday.

"I don't think graduation is going to be something that requires a pat-down," said Gerald O'Neil, the director. "This isn't a concert."

O'Neil said all seniors will undergo a "visual search" before entering the stadium and will be told to store any alcohol in their cars, and signs will inform visitors of the ban on alcohol in the stadium.

He said Department of Public Safety staff and possibly students will conduct the alcohol checks, and that he will ensure uniformed officers are available if they are needed.

People found in the stadium with alcohol will be asked to take the container outside or may be asked to leave, O'Neil said.

"There's nothing wrong with the family getting together afterwards," he said. "We're not there to arrest people."

Administrators and commencement organizers have been considering ways to improve the annual ceremony, which last year was called "disastrous" because of a faulty sound system and what they considered excessive drinking.

The decision not to frisk graduates came after weeks of speculation that members of the Union Program Council, which runs rock concerts on campus, might be asked by the administration to search seniors. Lance Foley, UPC talent coordinator, said his group refuses to do so.

Other changes that will be instituted this year include a shorter ceremony, a separate ceremony for the graduate schools, a more reliable sound system and a more visible stage.

Also, in a break with tradition, faculty members will not be seated at the front near the stage. Rather, they will sit along the sidelines of the field, according to Daniel Melley, director of University Relations.

Melley said this may keep graduates from wandering during the ceremony and receiving alcohol from guests on the other side of the stadium's chain-link fence.

"It might be a deterrent and keep people in their seats," he said.

Two professors yesterday said they support the change, but another said he is opposed to the idea.

"I don't plan to act as a bouncer during the ceremony," said David J. Klingener, professor of zoology. "I don't feel as a faculty member it's my job to prevent people from drinking in there."

Faculty Senate secretary Roland Chilton disagreed.

Meeting on alcohol is inconclusive

By LESLEY CLARK
Collegian Staff

After two hours of arguments, the University of Massachusetts Residential Committee yesterday postponed voting on a motion to request that the vice chancellor for student affairs repeal the current residence hall alcohol policy.

The current policy, instituted in September, prohibits students from drinking alcohol in "common" areas such as lounges and hallways.

The motion, drafted by the Southwest Area Government, would "roll back the policy to allow residents of legal drinking age to consume alcohol in [all of] their living space," said Bill Collins, SWAG president.

The committee, composed of students, Housing Services officials and residence hall staff, will vote on the motion next Wednesday.

"It's a freedom and liberty issue," Collins said, directing his remarks to Housing Services director Joseph Zannini. "If someone came into your home and said you could only drink in your bedroom, I think you'd be concerned."

However, several resident assistants attending the meeting disagreed.

"We're quite satisfied with the alcohol policy as it stands," said Charles Walker, an RA in Cance House. "Our major problem with the SWAG proposal is enforcement. Is carding people the type of thing the University wants its RAs to do?"

Walker said he was afraid repealing the policy would force RAs to check the ages of students drinking in common areas.

"I'd love to see people of drinking age drinking anywhere but I just don't see it as feasible," he said. "I think the problems will just intensify."

Mark Frank, a residence director in the Sylvan area, concurred: "We feel it's more feasible to uphold the present policy. The SWAG alternative would be too difficult to enforce."

Joe Demeo, co-president-elect of SWAG, argued that repealing the policy would decrease confrontations between students and RAs.

"The present policy makes the RA a police officer and increases confrontation," Demeo said. "RAs must censure responsible as well as irresponsible drinkers. With the present policy you're telling people of a legal drinking age they can't drink."

Zannini said that while he would "entertain alternatives" to the present policy, "we have a duty to ensure there is an environment that is conducive to students reaching their academic best. That is our policy, that is our mission.

"That is what we should be talking about, not about the legality of what we are required to do," he added.

Scott Portentis, a student senator from Southwest, said, "I don't think drinking behind closed doors is in the interest of education, and that's what this present policy promotes."

Collins said, "To me it's the residents that know what's best for the residents. They don't want the policy you [Zannini] pushed on them.

Broadcast leader appears tonight

Dwight Ellis, vice president of the National Association of Broadcasters, is scheduled to speak about the search of leadership within media's new technology at 8 p.m. tonight in the Student Union Ballroom.

Joining NAB on May 17, 1978, Ellis served as coordinator of the NAB's Employment Clearinghouse and directed the Association's department of Community Affairs prior to his appointment to vice president of Minority and Special Services on March 3, 1980.

In a telephone interview yesterday from his Washington D.C. office, Ellis said there has to be a greater committment to excellence in learning the business of media.

"I'll be talking about the general perception on the part of minorities in particular that there are not enought minority role models [in media]," Ellis said.

Boston train wreck injures 200 persons

BOSTON (AP) — At least 200 people were injured yesterday when a train packed with commuters hit the back of an idle freight train, hurtling scores of passengers about the cars.

A parking lot next to the crash site resembled a battlefield as ambulance workers wrapped wounds and calmed passengers injured in the collision. Nearby, boxes of pineapples and computer television screens spilled from the freight train were strewn along the tracks.

"I was reading my paper and then, bang. There was no warning. People really went flying. Pretty much everybody was banged up," said Myron Feld, 38, of Wellesley.

About 50 people were taken away on stretchers and five were admitted to hospitals with serious injuries, officials said.

Deputy Fire Chief Kevin Mochen said another 150 people were driven to eight local hospitals in schoolbuses and that all of them appeared to have suffered only cuts and bruises.

It was not known how many injured people refused treatment.

"Many of the chairs were twisted, pushed against each others, people's belongings went all over the place," said Paula Herman, 28, of Natick. Herman, who is three months pregnant, was examined at the hospital and told she and the fetus were fine. She was one of four pregnant women who suffered minor injuries.

The four-car commuter train from Framingham was carrrying about 550 people when it rammed into the rear of a freight train that had just arrived in the Brighton section of the city from Chicago, railroad officials said.

Witnesses said the commuter train managed to slow down just before hitting the freight train in the morning fog. Witnesses and officials investigating the accident said they could not estimate how fast the train was moving at the time of the crash. Both trains stayed on the tracks.

"The whole cause of the accident is under investigation, but first indications are that fog did not play a part in the crash," said Peter Dimond, a spokesman for the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority, which owns the commuter train operated under contract by the Boston & Maine Railroad.

Tim Chattma, 34, a paralegal from Framingham, said "police were screaming, people were yelling for doctors" and then the scene calmed as people "got their bearings."

Rob Ball, 18, of Wellesley said the 8:40 a.m. crash pitched him forward, knocking his head against the seat.

"A lot of people couldn't move. They were stuck in the aisles," he said. "There was a lot of blood."

Reagan back, assails terrorism

WASHINGTON (AP) — A buoyant President Reagan returned home yesterday after a 15-day Far East trip, saying US talks with Western allies in Tokyo brought understandings which will make it "tougher from now on" for terrorists.

"Terrorists and those who support them — especially governments — have been put on notice," the president told a large crowd of White House aides, cabinet members and other supporters who, accompanied by a band from Martin Luther King Jr. High School here, greeted him.

Northampton skateboarders protest citywide ban

NORTHAMPTON (AP) — When they mayor offered a compromise between teen-age skateboarders who want the run of this college town and some of their near-victims downtown, city councilors shelved a proposed ban to consider limiting the skaters to the neighborhoods.

About 70 irate teens who showed up with their skateboards at a City Council committee meeting Tuesday night took the compromise in stride, Mayor David B Musante Jr. said.

And councilor Edward E. Keefe said a compromise would be acceptable to him too if it would keep skateboarders off Main Street, its sidewalk, municipal parking lots and a downtown park in the city of 30,000 people.

"I've been missed by inches by skateboards and I'm not getting excited because of my encounters," Keefe said yesterday.

Residents call him constantly, begging "'You've got to do something about those damn skateboarders. you can't even walk down Main Street. I almost got hit' or 'I almost hit a kid with my car,' " he related.

While he said police haven't had any reports of serious clashes between skateboarders and pedestrians or cars, Keefe said city officials were concerned about Northampton's liability if an accident occurred.

"It's the sue-happy society we live in, and somebody could get injured and decide the city is liable," he said.

The same liability concerns also make councilors reluctant to follow a penant's suggestion and designate city property for skateboarding, he said.

But Keefe said he and other councilors weren't curmudgeons waiting to prevent teens from enjoying themselves on skateboards.

"It's a lot of fun," he said. Another councilor, Paul D. Bixby, told teens at the meeting that he felty the proposed ban, which would have carried a $50 fine, was too restrictive and that the Ordinance Committee wanted to study the issue further.

"We didn't realize the depth of interest in skateboarding in the community," Bixby told teens who had hung a sign reading "Would you rather we do drugs?" on the City Hall steps before the meeting.

Skateboarder Andy Morini, 15, said, "There's hardly anything to do in this town."

WHY KEG BEER TASTES BETTER THAN COOKED BEER.

Ask most beer drinkers, and they'll likely agree: nothing tastes better than beer from a keg.

Ever since the days of Frederic Miller's original Plank Road Brewery, keg beer has always been fresher. That's because it isn't cooked to preserve it like most bottled and canned beers.

Well, now there's a beer that delivers that same fresh draft taste in a bottle. A beer specially cold-filtered instead of cooked, so it tastes like it was drawn straight from the keg.

Student senate ends with rule changes

By PATRICK JOHNSON
Collegian Staff

In the final meeting of the semester for the Undergraduate Student Senate, last night, the senate enacted one motion which gave the campus president a vote during meetings, and passed a motion outlining methods for disciplining senators.

Senator Joel Stanley of the Commuter Area Government proposed a resolution asking the senate to establish a task force which would draft a code of conduct for senators, in order to eliminate unruly behavior on the senate floor.

Stanley said it was "about time" for the senate to examine its behavior and follow rules of conduct similar to other state, local, and federal bodies.

Southwest senator Bill Collins motioned to amend the Stanley motion by having it read, "No senator shall recieve any penalty, including censure motions, unless given a fair hearing and the opportunity to appeal."

Collins said, "If there is one thing in the past that was most devisive, it's been the censure motions. . .The US Senate goes through a process, and we should have the same process right here."

When the amended motion passed by a voice vote, Collins said there would be no more censuring for the sake of censuring.

The senate also voted to restore voting rights to the campus president, Bill Bennett. This is the first year that the president has been a non-voting member of the senate. Since the positions of co-presidents were split into president and student trustee, Bennett has been without a vote, while Trustee Dani Burgess retained his vote.

Arthur Stephenson, from John Adams Tower, introduced the motion because the president has a more active role on campus than the trustee and should have a voice on the senate floor.

M. Lynne Murphy from Grayson House opposed the restoration of the president's vote because "It would give the president, who ever he or she is, two votes."

Murphy said the president would be able to vote on any issue in the senate, and then have the power to veto any vote he did not agree with. The most recent example of a presidential veto came last week.

The senate also passed by unanimous acclamation a motion requesting the physical plant speed up their effort to remove the "200 identifiable cases of asbestos on campus" and to make the removal in Arnold House and other areas in use by students "a number-one priority."

Pizza boxes, trash burned 'suspiciously'

A pile of pizza boxes and other trash ignited, causing a suspicious fire at 8:30 p.m. Tuesday on a balcony off the first floor of McNamara House, University of Massachusetts police said.

A resident extinguished the blaze and the Amherst Fire Department responded to the call, police said.

In other police reports:

A 1977 Pontiac Firebird valued at $2,800 was reported stolen at 10:50 p.m. Tuesday from a lot near Warren McGuirk Alumni Stadium, police said.

A 26-year-old woman was charged with operating an unregistered motorcycle without a license or helmet at 9:07 p.m. Tuesday on North Pleasant Street, police said.

A 10-speed bicycle valued at $200 was reported stolen at 11:30 p.m. from the Totman Physical Education building, police said.

Drivers reported wires were pulled out of the engines of two state trucks and the side mirrors were bent at 9:10 a.m. Tuesday near the Shade Tree Laboratories, police said.

Envelopes containing a "substantial sum of money" were reported missing at 2:29 a.m. yesterday from a desk drawer at Justin Ryan's nightclub. A witness said there had been a "suspicious person" in the club, Amherst police said.

A 14-year-old Amherst High School student said $100 had been stolen Tuesday from her pocketbook. She said she had the money at the beginning of a class but it was missing at the end, police said.

Samuel F. Conti, vice chancellor for research and the dean of the graduate school at the University of Massachusetts has been selected to serve on the executive committee of the National Association of State Universities and land-grant colleges.

The committee is made up of 140 members most of who are institute presidents. The members deal with issues that concern Colleges and Universities. They also fight student aid cutbacks.

Currently they are working on the revision of the Higher Education Act which defines the role of the government in education. "Higher education competes with defense, Medicare and Social security for funding," Conti said. But these opponents are not his only obstacles, he said.

"The office of Management and budget only sees the numbers, we have to show them the people attached to the numbers," he said. "To cut Pell Grants means nothing to bureaucrats but savings."

The narrow focus of the committee is out of necessity, "there are so damn many issues," Conti said.

"Sometimes legislation is filed and the politicians don't realize it will screw the students. No one wants to hurt the students," Conti said. The committee therefore would make statements before a bill is made into law, hopefully directing the political focus to the problem.

Not all the issues are clear cut, and it is difficult to say where the money should go, all the groups are worthy of funding. But they continue the struggle because, if the were not involved, the school would have to suffer through the unjust changes, Conti said.

When asked how he found the time to be on the committee since he had so many other University responsibilities, Conti said, "I have no choice. These aren't trivial matters, I have to do it."

Remembering the Holocaust

Rubenstein and Wyman try to place blame

By CAROL TANNENBAUM
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts professor David Wyman and University of Florida professsor Richard Rubenstein told an audience in the Campus Center last night that world governments and Christian churches did little to avert the Holocaust.

"Elimination of the Jews was met with almost universal approval," Rubenstein said. Hilter allowed the Christian leaders to believe that he was creating a "purely Christian state." The professors spoke as part of Holocaust Memorial Week on campus.

Wyman said that the United States' State Department and London's Parliment had a policy that "was not rescue, but fear of rescue." Wyman, a UMass history professor, is a special advisor to to the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Council and the author of Paper Walls and The Abandonment of the Jews: America and the Holocaust.

The speakers were introduced by Masha Rudman, a professor at the School of Education at the University. She began the evening by reading from a children's book about persecution called Terrible Things by Eve Bunting. The exerpt set the tone for the evening.

Rubenstein spoke first saying the church leaders did not give much thought into the implications of making a totally Christian state. He also said that after the, war some church leaders had "regrets as to the way of doing that, but no regrets in doing it."

Wyman began his speech by telling of the State Department's knowledge of the killings in August of 1942 and its making it public knowledge in November of that same year. "It stated two million (were) dead and (the killings were) moving rapidly."

The American and British government "didn't want rescue to occur in any numbers. It meant if the Jews came out the responsiblity would've fallen on Great Britan and the United States," Wyman said.

Richard Rubenstein

"British policy was to placate the Arabs," said Wyman. The professor said that Britain's main problem was Palestine. So for years they restriticted Jewish migration to Palestine, he said.

There was a parallel situation in the United States because "Congress reflected the feelings of anti-Semitism in American society."

Wyman summed up the lessons of the Holocaust into three different parts. Included are knowing "that genocide perpertrated on another is possible, what anti-semitism can lead to and that the Holocaust was not only a Jewish tragedy." Wyman said he was not taking away from the Jewish Holocaust, but it was also a terrible thing that Christians learned about themselves.

Dessert helps Blue Wall's comeback

By SHERYL JEAN
Collegian Staff

Since the Blue Wall coffee house added an ice-cream parlor this semester business has increased greatly, with ice cream accounting for over half of current sales.

William D. Ellmore, the Blue Wall manager, said that at the beginning of this semester sales there were doubling each week as compared to the previous week.

"We're doing as well as the Blue Wall bar did last year," said Richard Ellis, director of Campus Center Food Services. The bar closed last May in anticipation of the loss of liquor liability insurance for the University. UMass was without liability coverage from last July until January 1986.

Ellmore said the bar used to make good money on special events such as Friday afternoon "happy hours" and comedy nights, but overall he said the coffee house is more lucrative.

The coffee house was initiated last September as an "alternative to a bar operation" and only served coffee and small pastries, Ellmore said. Ice cream was added to the menu this semester because it was felt that it would be a good idea and it has proven to be popular, he said.

The coffee shop is crowded every night. Cookies and waffle ice cream cones are "by far" the most popular fare, with coffee and brownies close behind, he said.

David Pruskin, a civil engineering major, said he usually gets ice cream because he has "loved it since I was a kid" and the Blue Wall is the most convenient place on campus to buy it.

While ordering a milkshake, Eileen, a University employee, said the ice cream parlor was a "real good idea."

Gina Ruvido, a senior who always buys chocolate chip cookies before she studies, said, "The coffee shop is more functional than the bar was."

Richard Pryor makes his directorial debut with "Jo Jo Dancer, Your Life Is Calling," which he also produced, starred in, and co-wrote.

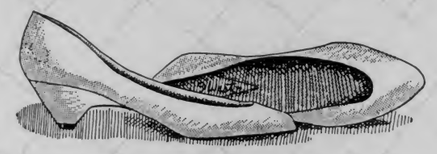
Richard Pryor creates a film about his life

Jo Jo Dancer, Your Life Is Calling
Starring Richard Pryor and Debbie Allen
Produced, Directed and Co-written by Richard Pryor

By DON LIPPER
Collegian Staff

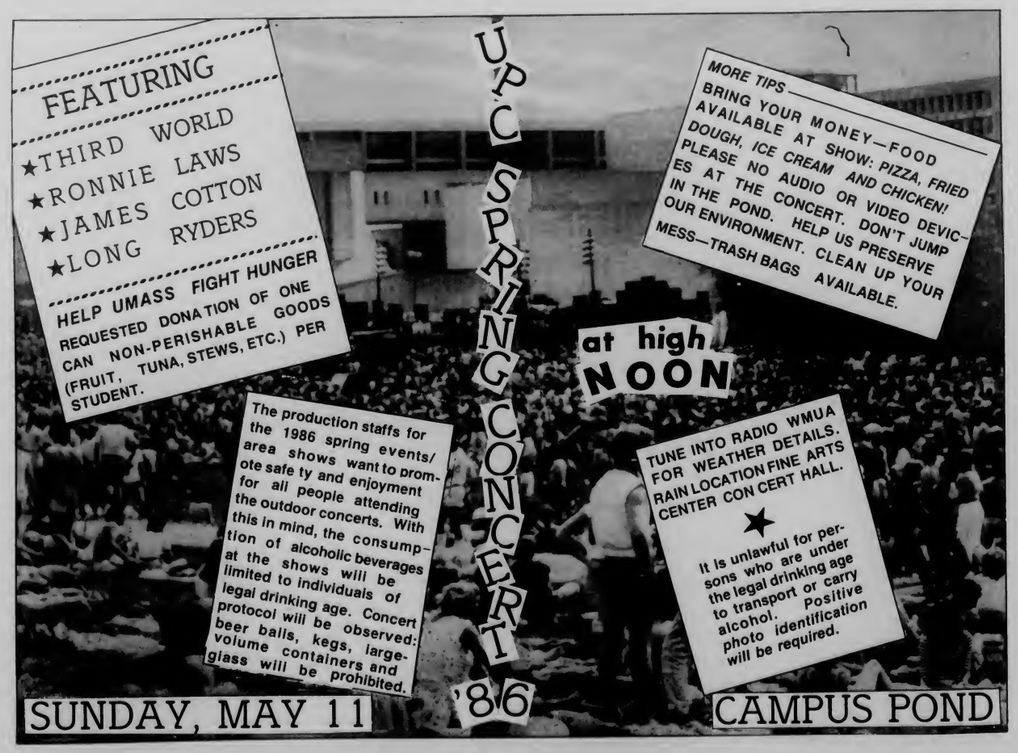
A famous black comedian with a drug problem is rushed to the hospital with third degree burns covering his upper body. On the emergency room bed, the comedian's spirit leaves his damaged body. The spirit then travels back to the comedian's past to try to discover what brought him to this state.

This is the beginning of Jo Jo Dancer, Your Life Is Calling Richard Pryor's autobiographical debut as a director. The story closely mirrors Pryor's life and struggles as a comedian although it does create some composite characters and makes other changes with Pryor's life for dramatic purposes.



Pryor is at his best as a performer. In the role of his life Pryor shows more of an emotional range and depth than in any of his previous roles. There are moments in the film that are funny and at the same time emotionally wrenching to watch.

Pryor as a director makes an impressive, if mixed, debut. There are touching moments that are handled with earnest honesty rather than with syrupy sappiness that another director might have tried. Pryor is pretty good at directing himself but he isn't as capable in handling the camera and the other actors. There are times when his inexperience shows.



The spirit of Jo Jo goes back to his childhood days as the child of a whore in a whorehouse. He calls the madam "grandma". This segment could be have been milked for a lot of pathos but Pryor handles the whole scene deftly yet warmly. The adult spirit of Jo Jo questions his younger self and his mother to try to find out what happened, and where he could have changed things.

The spirit then jumps up to Jo Jo's days as a nervous young comedian in a mob controlled club. He charts his own development as a comedian and as a human being.

We see how, by living with and loving a radical white woman, Jo Jo's black consciousness is raised, his comedy is liberated from the conventional stand up form and his success soars.

Tragically we know how this story is going to end up. And we begin to see Jo Jo's personal decline as he gets more and more into drugs and alcohol. As he begins to destroy himself and those around him, the audience already feels the foreboding that the incident that sent him to the hospital is coming. Jo Jo Dancer is a touching and funny movie now playing at the Hampshire 6 Malls.

Pryor plays a world-famous entertainer in an almost autobiographical "Jo Jo Dancer, Your Life Is Calling."

CORRECTION: Yesterday, the Collegian mistakenly reported that Miracle Legion would be performing last night at the Blue Wall, when the band was actually scheduled to play tonight. In fact, the band's lead singer, Marc Mulcahey, has since hurt his back and the band will not appear at all. Confused? Well, have no fear, Dumptruck, a Boston band will play instead. Dumptruck's second LP, produced by Don Dixon of R.E.M. fame, has recently been released on Big Time Records. The Nova Mob and the Visigoths will play as scheduled tonight.(Okay, Jim?)

LIVEWIRE
BY TOM MIDDLETON

Even though most of us are finishing term papers and gearing up for finals, there are still some decent shows on the agenda for this weekend, so you still have plenty of excuses to blow off studying.

Tonight: You can see The Visigoths, Nova Mob and Dump Truck for free at the Blue Wall. This is all part of WMUA awareness day or something like that. Anyway, The Visigoths have been described as The Beatles meet The Buzzcocks and Nova Mob is supposed to be Joy Division meets R.E.M. (How's that Jim?) This is the best deal tonight because it's free, you don't have to travel and the bands should be fun.

Jon Butcher Axis is playing at Pearl Street. The cover charge is $6, which isn't outrageous. This band puts on a good solid rock show, nothing really great but they are polished. If you're tight for money and not easily impressed, skip it.

The Cods will be at Sheehan's Cafe. No cover charge for this one. Although I've not yet heard The Cod's, we can give them the benefit of a doubt, after all it is free. So if you find yourself in Northampton wandering the streets, step into Sheehan's for a few tunes.

Five-O, a pop cover band, is playing at Justin Ryan's for only $1 at the door. They do decent replicas of The Police, English Beat, Del Fuegos and others. Justin Ryan's, Five-O, Police covers, I think you get the picture.

Friday: Behind Pierpont House in Southwest there will be a free show with Riddim Fit, Five-O, The Steadys, and Price of Progress. The show starts at noon and is supposed to go until 7 p.m. Riddim Fit does reggae and ska. The Steadys are rhythm and blues. Price of Progress mixes reggae and new wave.

Free Press is playing at the Central Spring Fling at 4 p.m. and again at the Student Union Ballroom at 8 p.m. This is definitely a dance band. (Bow to the Media)

At Sheehan's, No Regrets will play free of charge. This is an all woman band that's supposed to be pretty good. Can't hurt to check out the show.

If you want to get out of the vicinity you might want to hit the benefit show at The Zone in Springfield. For $5 you get to see Beat Therapy, Not Quite and P.O.T.B. The Zone is an art gallery which has bands and other artsy-type stuff. I have a soft spot for these kinds of places, so if you're in the area spend the five bucks.

Saturday: Wildcat 'O'Halloran will be playing at Sheehan's. This band is fun and there's no cover charge. Expect blues.

At Katina's on Rte 9, The Mitch Chakour Band will play. This band is real good with a smooth act. The charge is about $4 and I'd say it's probably worth it.

The Zone continues its benefit with The Bamboo Steamers, The Malarians, S. J. Stasinos and The Cods. So if you didn't contribute Friday night you can still redeem yourself.

Sunday: Elis Rodriguez y Su Conjunto Borinquen will be at Pulaski Park in Northampton. The show is only part of the whole event which starts at 2:30 p.m. and is free of charge. This is a Mother's Day Fiesta sponsored by Casa Latina, Inc. so it should be worthwhile.

See Spring Concert listing.

Musical Review

42nd Street:
Sold out, but not by students

By KELLY SIEGER
Collegian Staff

42nd Street tapped it's way into the University of Massachusetts Fine Arts Center, delighting a predominantly non-student crowd.

The professional group put on a glossy performance, the seriousness of which is evident by the five trucks needed to transport the sets that stood outside the theater.

42nd Street is a Depression-era "Chorus Line," complete with auditions, backstage competetion, and the girl from Allentown, PA making it big. Our hero fights the odds and the snotty over-aged star to lead the troupe in their show, "Pretty Lady."

The musical numbers were exciting and polished, although the orchestra often drowned out the performers voices. The costuming was extensive and colorful in such numbers as "Dames," and the show's well-known finale, "42nd Street."

The troupe included some recognizable names: Elizabeth Allen, as the washed-up ex-star, has worked with such actors as Paul Newman and James Stewart. Gary Marshal as "Pretty Lady's" director has been a regular on "The Days of Our Lives" and "One Life To Live."

Behind the scenes also lent some familiar names. Producer David Merrick has received the Tony and it's British counterpart, the Olivier. He has been inducted into the Theater Hall of Fame, and his productions have earned over 100 Tony nominations. 42nd Street is Merrick's 84th Broadway production.

Cathy Wydner deserves mention as the dreamer from Allentown, her voice was mediocre but her dancing a marvel to see. Marshal, a Robert Wagner look-alike, played Marsh to a T; he and Wydner providing the love interest. As for laughs, Bibi Osterwald playing Maggie Jones, the dancer's chaperone, brought them in.

The main complaint to be made is that accessibility for students was almost non-existent for this show. The show had been sold out almost entirely by season subscribers; tickets never went on sale for students. Unfortunately, it's one of the classic Broadway shows that young adults interested in theater should see, so if you're ever in New York . . .

Betrayal of South Vietnam

Peter Dow

The eleventh anniversary of the end of US military involvement in Vietnam came and went last week, without any hoopla or even passing recognition in the media. This is quite in contrast to the widespread media "celebrations" last year, during the 10th anniversary of the fall of Saigon. However, despite the rosy picture of Vietnam painted by the media last year, the war and killing in Indochina did not cease in 1975 when the US Congress buckled under the pressure from the anti-war movement and abandoned our allies. Indeed, the US betrayal of South Vietnam has made us indirectly responsible for the bloodbaths and plight of the Vietnamese boat people which followed our abandonment of Vietnam, Laos, and Cambodia to the communists.

The military situation was going fairly well in South Vietnam by the 1970s, as the Nixon administration began to see the results of its Vietnamization policy. Not only were American troops being brought home and American involvement being drastically scaled down, but the ARVN units were being successfully trained and were starting to fight their own war. The success of the South Vietnamese in the early 1970s is especially remarkable, considering: first, that Congress had begun to cut financial support for the South Vietnamese government; and secondly, that the Soviets continued to serve as an inexhaustible source of military hardware for the NVA and the Vietcong. Indeed, the fighting ability of the ARVN was no more evident than in 1972, when North Vietnam launched a major offensive in the South, using modern Soviet armor, rockets and, heavy artillery. The ARVN (with American air and naval support) held, and showed that Vietnamization could work — but only if the American defensive umbrella was maintained.

That umbrella was closed beginning in 1973, as Congress began to cut aid and gave the anti-war movement what it had always wanted — victory for Ho Chi Minh and the Vietcong, and communism for South Vietnam. In 1973, Congress appropriated $2.3 billion for the South; in 1974, this was halved; and by 1975, another third was cut.

As a direct result of the American cutoff of aid, the North Vietnamese began arming for a new offensive. Indeed, NVA strategist General Dung said that "The enemy became passive and utterly weakened...enemy firepower had decreased by nearly 60 percent because of bomb and ammunition shortages...its mobility was also reduced by half due to a lack of aircraft, vehicles, and fuel." In March 1975, the North Vietnamese began their offensive, outnumbering the ARVN 5.5 to 1 in infantry, and had seemingly unlimited supplies of Soviet armor and fuel. By April 30, the NVA rode into Saigon on their Soviet tanks.

Yet that day did not mark the end of the war. Indeed, despite the ignorant and naive claims of leftists, the cutoff of US aid did not "end the war" nor "stop the killing." The US betrayal of South Vietnam brought to power not only a ruthless Vietnamese government, but also the murderous regime of the Khmer Rouge in Cambodia and the Pathet Lao in Laos.

Since 1975, these communist governments have given the world the boat people, Cambodian genocide, and the Vietnamese "re-education" camps; and at the same time, they have destroyed the peaceloving image the peaceniks had painted of the communists. Yet it should bring us no joy to see the horrendous predictions of bloodbaths come true. What we should recognize is that our involvement in Vietnam was not immoral, nor was it criminal. It was one of the most idealistic wars we have ever fought — fundamentally for an abstract principle of freedom for some Asians halfway around the world. Despite all the military and political mistakes America made during the Vietnam war, and despite the efforts of the American left, we should never let ourselves be convinced that our involvement was wrong. Those who believe it was need only to look at the eleven years of communist tyranny which has followed the fall of Saigon.

Peter Dow is a Collegian columnist.

Sophisticated summitry?

Timothy Harris

When headlines this week declared that Summit leaders supported the United States' strike on Libya, I thought the entire world had gone insane. My hopes of some modicum of rationality persisting outside our borders withered, and visions of a jack-booted NATO leapt into view.

The headlines, however, were more wishful thinking than fact. What the world leaders had actually done was to condemn terrorism; little to argue with there. They called for "determined, tenacious, discreet and patient action combining national measures with international cooperation."

The strategy they outlined to combat terrorism was a strongly worded reaffirmation of the tactics our European allies had always employed; not a nod of approval for unilateral pre-dawn death raids.

America's bombing of Libya, you see, was anything but "discreet and patient," and unilateral airstrikes are hardly in the spirit of international cooperation. Particularly when West Germany had called for restraint just hours before the bombing.

In the text of the Tokyo statement on terrorism, the use of the United Nations, the International Civil Aviation Organization, and the International Maritime Organization is counseled to "improve and extend" countermeasures against terrorism. The US, who could have taken their "eveidence" of Libya's role in the bombing of the Berlin nightclub to the U.N. or the World Court has still not done so. Nor was U.N. article No. 52, cited by Reagan to justify the bombing as an act of defense, meant to apply in cases such as this. The actions of the US imply disdain for international law.

It is particularly revealing that in the Summit statement's list of six recommended measures for countering terrorism, an alternative glaring in its absence is the military solution. It would appear that surgical air strikes are a uniquely American approach to international diplomacy.

While the Summit statement fell short of supporting the American action, that did not stop George Schultz from belligerently crowing, "The message is: 'You've had it pal,'" in reference to Libyan leader Muammer el-Qaddafi. It is also disturbing to hear Schultz interpret the document as expressing "a resolve to combat this threat by every possible means."

Equally disconcerting is the news that the boys in the Navy have taken the US war on terrorism as a solid argument for more aircraft carriers. The New York Times quotes Naval expert Norman Friedman as stating, "When you use a carrier you can operate unilaterally. The attitude of our allies shows that this is valuable."

According to the May 6 article, due to controversy in Britain over their role in the Libya strike, it is not likely that the US will again ask them permission to launch strikes from British soil against targets "the United States Government decides are 'terrorist associated.'" The beauty of the aircraft carrier is that it eliminates the bothersome formality of obtaining international support for American military actions.

The debate within the Pentagon does not center upon the desirability of unilateral action, but rather, whether sufficient firepower may be mustered from carriers alone to launch an efficient attack. Pentagon officials have learned that Americans will support short, violent bursts of aggression, but are not as likely to support more protracted conflicts with American casualties. The Pentagon's cynical exploitation of American apathy can only lead to more violence.

Headline, story inaccurate

One duty of the press is to do its homework and keep up with the issues. So it is with dismay that I read Tuesday's front page article on Coors. first of all, the Collegian failed to contact either the BOG or SGA to find out if the situation had changed since last Thursday. If so, they would have found out that Bill Bennett had withdrawn his veto after discussion with the officers of the BOG. Therefore, the motion to ask the BOG to reconsider its position toward Coors will not be coming up on the senate floor Wednesday, which means the entire article is irrelevant.

Further, the headline of the article reads "Coors may get a second shot on campus." The whole point of the debate between the SGA and BOG concerning Coors is that a vote by the SGA to bring Coors back will do nothing to advance that "cause." A motion to rescind the ban has to be introduced on the BOG floor by a BOG member. The headline was completely misleading.

Position of civility

In 1980, Chancellor Koffler appointed a Commission on Civility in Human Relations to help "foster a high level of discourse and behavior on this campus regarding civility, mutual concern and responsibility, appropriate to an academic community." The Chancellor specifically asked commission members "to assist in the formulation of campus policies and public statements...opposing anti-social attitudes and actions," and to do everything in their power to help "make the entire campus aware of the need to respect the dignity and rights of others." Accordingly, we are compelled to draw campus attention to two fractures in civil human relations that have occurred in recent weeks.

By far the more serious was the speech against homosexuality and homosexuals by Dr. Paul Cameron from the steps of the Student Union Building on the morning of April 11 during Gay and Lesbian Awareness Week. Will anyone claim that this exercise was educational or even that it was undertaken in the spirit of controversy? Surely, it was designed as an attack and deliberately situated in the place and at the time where that attack had the chance of inflicting the greatest damage. Cameron's talk may well have been lawful; however, we believe that, in the profoundest sense, it was immoral, because its purpose was to do violence, directly in words and, however indirectly, by incitement to actions, to people as people, not because of a disagreement about beliefs but because the fundamental rights of those people as people were being denied.

It is possible that Cameron had the right to make even this argument. Indeed, we recognize and respect the University's constitutional obligation to tolerate and protect intolerant speech. But the Commission believes that, as individuals and as an educational community, we are obliged to respond affirmatively to speech we belive is immoral, to protect members from threatening assault and our standards of discourse and ethics from violation.

We are a community and the bonds that connect us are (or should be) more substantial than those defined by law. We need to resist the feeling that whatever cannot be litigated is morally trivial or relative to the point where we can ignore or suppress our awareness that people are being brutalized. Such brutalization has no place in our community, let alone in a place dedicated, through its commitment to learning, to mutual respect and understanding.

Whatever hatreds and fears are inevitably present in our community, it is the responsibility of the community as a whole, and perhaps especially of an academic community, to establish an atmosphere where the behavior of hate and fear is channeled into pathways free of the hurtfulness that such behavior must inflict if unchecked by some agreed ethical standard. The Commission hopes that we can all learn from these events and believes that the University has the obligation and power to respond constructively to destructive behavior, whether the destructiveness lies in lawfully protected speech or in an attempt to disrupt such speech.

The Southwest Area concert last Sunday was designed to provide a chance for UMass students, caught in the end-of-semester academic blitzkrieg, to have some time to relax and have fun. SWAG worked hard to put it together in this spirit and it should have come off without a hitch.

However, there were other non-student forces doing their best to dampen the enjoyment of one and all. Faceless administrators, in conjunction with the UMass police, chose this event to go on an all-out security binge with the obvious intent of discrediting the whole idea of outdoor music on campus.

They videotaped the crowd for purposes as yet unrevealed. They photographed people relieving themselves in the woods. Our brave boys in blue even made a few arrests for the heinous crime of underage drinking.

Every year, students have to put up with more and more of this harassment. It is becoming increasingly clear that the bureaucracy created to fight the "ZooMass" image is desperately fumbling for ways to insure their continued employment. They have long been given a free hand to do anything they please with virtually no accountability to the people they are here to serve — the students.

The case for an Alaskan summer

Rob Skelton

Summer is close by, and for those whose plans lack substance, may I suggest what may be the best situation imaginable—a stint in America's last frontier, in the literal goldmine of opportunity, where people of young blood abound, and where a healthy money-minded individual can earn an honest grand after expenses—Alaska.

No, I'm not on their Chamber of Commerce payroll, and in fact I may be doing a disservice to those who've long appreciated Alaska's allure, but as one who gained much from the 12,000-mile round-trip journey, I feel I must at least inform others about this exciting land.

I'll skip the history; the main point is that work opportunities abound, and although the cost of living is higher there than in the Lower 48, the pay rate is proportionally increased, if not more so. The work is often hard and monotonous, but at least one person I know carried $2400 out after 8 weeks of pain.

Alaskans know this, and for their pleasure they often jaunt out to Hawaii or the Far East on the slightest of whims. Young people from all over the world are discovering this American frontier and finding it a place they'd like to call home.

It sounds kind of fishy to those unversed in Alaskan knowledge—we whose beliefs have been formed by a decade of TV tripe. The truth is, Alaskan summers are not much colder than here. On the coast, there are incessant sunshowers—make no mistake—and inland be prepared for mosquitoes, but the majestic mountains and midnight sunlight makes it a very special place indeed.

Like most of the good things in life, this one will not come to you. Forget about setting yourself up beforehand with the most comfortable situation that you can arrange. If the unknown scares you, don't bother thinking about this one, or anything else, 'cause you'll never make it far anyway.

I don't mean to sound caustic, but Alaska was settled in the same kind of independent spirituality which characterized the romanticized taming of the American west. What I mean by that is—don't dream it. do it. I happened to have hitch-hiked, so that's a possibility. If the money's available, fly; bus lines have $100 specials across Canada; groups of students carpool from almost every college, including UMass.

There is cannery and fishery work, firefighter work, forestry work, fishing boat work, restaurant work, and any other kind of labour which people are willing to pay money for, including gold panning. Experience is helpful, of course, but bullshit goes a long way also. Best of all, many towns have a Youth Employment Service which assists you in finding employment, and even getting food stamps if you're in hard luck times.

Many students end up camping for the summer, as I did, on the outskirts of the settled areas, unhindered for the most part by the authorities and other animal pestilence. Since most places of employment provide shower and cafeteria facilities, and the expense of renting accomodation can cut seriously into earnings, vast tent cities pop up in the late spring near Homer, Seward, Kodiak and the other locales where work-seeking students end up.

Alaska to me symbolizes America at its best. It's conservative (as we all are deep down inside) with its aura of unconquered horizons and its hard-working, independent-minded citizenry, but it's progressive also, not simply distrustful of centralized governance but enlightened by liberal marijuana laws and programs which aim to help ease joblessness and enhance the cultural identity of the indigenous peoples, of which there are many.

Alaska is too intense for some people, pardon my saying so, but if it has caught your fancy, check it out while you can.

Bon voyage!

Fear of academic failure

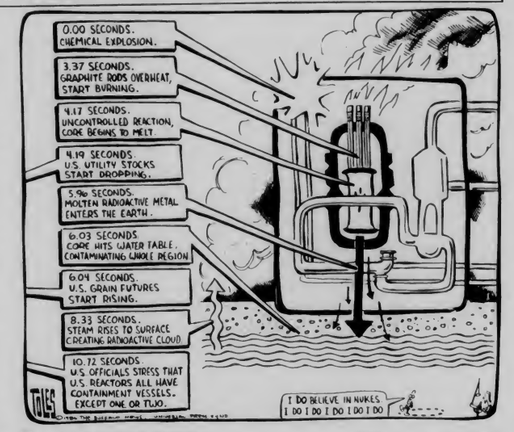
Daniel Sobel

I would like to address a new term, which is actually a timeless problem, that I have dealt with throughout my collegiate career, but that I have recently overcome, again. It is called AcaFears.

AcaFears is short for 'academic fears,' or the fear of academic failure. There comes the morning in every semester when I wake up and realize that there are two weeks left of school and I've got two months worth of work to do. Another four months have gone by and I've achieved what so many college students, either consciously or unconsciously, have achieved — the 'procrastinatory, [shit I'm in trouble] blow-off-your-studies syndrome.'

Mind you, not everyone can garner this status. It takes careful planning and strategy because, in this learning institution called UMass, we're hear to study hard, get good grades, jobs, wives, husbands, white picket fences and two-car garages. So don't think the blow-off syndrome is easy to achieve.

But I'm getting off the track. When I was a freshman I was cruising. I studied minimally, partied maximally and got by marginally, academically speaking of course. My AcaFears were in some nether world, out of reach and rational thought. I was having fun and loving it — I didn't care about my macroeconomics class; GNP meant Genuine Nonstop Partying. While most students were in Goodell, I was at Amherst College frat parties, swimming in four inches of keg beer that carpeted the basement floor [why did they have to close those frats down?]



Suddenly, I was into my sophomore and junior years. I had a major [journalism], and A LOT of papers to write. AcaFears were emanating from some unknown black hole and overtaking my sense of priority. I was doing my work, actually getting B's and even some A's. Eeegaad!!! My grade point average rose from the murky depths, my professors were satisfied, my family was happy — how far off could that first mortgage payment be? Yes, ladies and germs, I became possessed and the evil demon within my helpless frame was the sinister AcaFears.

After acquiescing to AcaFears for two years my junior year ended. This past fall I interned at a newspaper and was lambasted with responsibility, as I had to produce articles daily, regardless of apathy. That brush with the the harsh reality of the working world must have acted as an antedote to my AcaFears because I have been a different, may I even say a changed man this spring.

I have bravely faced my AcaFears this semester. I attended about half of my 8 a.m. poli-sci classes, overlooked several reading assignments, owe [wicked] overdue papers to two professors and I haven't even broken a sweat. And you know what? I feel maahvelous. My daily activities inlclude buying boxes of #2 pencils and breaking them, leaving my books on westbound Trailways buses and taking Quaaludes before classezzzz.

AcaFears, or the fear of academic failure is a problem we all face, but the problem is not insurmountable. With all the pressures to succeed in today's world, I must admit it's an uphill struggle. But, to borrow some famous words and to let you know that if I can do it, anyone can, "I have been to the mountain top and I have seen the light." Amen.

Disappointment with coverage

I would like to express my disappointment with the Collegian for its lack of coverage of the May 1 dedication of Hampden Court. I sent press releases and left notes with the news editors regarding this event. Chancellor Duffey and Kitty Dukakis delivered keynote addresses, and over 400 people attended. Channels 22 and 40 were on hand to cover the festivities, as well as two radio stations. It was also surprising that the paper did not cover the event since it has featured a number of articles and photos on the project through its various stages of implementation over the past one and one-half years.

Disturbing religious movements

Jeffry Bartash

Where did god come from?

That's the question I have asked many priests and religious people for many years, but I still have not received a satisfactory answer. They all tell me god has existed forever and that I must have faith. That's nonsense.

Being of the practical sort, I believe everything has an origin. And I am wary of the word faith because it is a word often used by leaders of masses to create blind following. For those two reasons I question the validity of god, any god.

That's why I am a supporter of the separation of church and state. There is no proof a god exists, and if so, of what religion? Is there a christian god or a moslem god or animism god? Fortunately, some great American minds recognized these questions and others and inserted the separation of church and state into our Constitution.

So I am disturbed by the growing religious movement in our country today. Already, one religious leader, Pat Robertson, has entered the 1988 Presidential race and more religious leaders might also. Robertson has, with religious overtones, talked of miracles and promised to stop the moral decay of America.

I am disturbed because some religious leaders want us to accept the mixing of church and state. They want us to abandon one of the most sacred parts of our constituion. And above all, they want us to rely on faith, not fact; they want us to believe legends of religions that began hundreds or thousands of years ago that lack any sort of reliable documentation or material proof.

I call that foolish.

I have given the topic of religion much thought; I have not blindly believed what was programmed into me as a youngster. Thus, I have concluded that all the religions and gods on our planet do not exist. I also believe there are four major reasons why religions developed:

First, major religions of the world developed hundreds or thousands of years ago when humans lacked the knowledge we have today; thus, religions were created to explain anything humans could not understand or feared.

Second, religion satisfies and acknowledges human's ancient quest for immortality. Humans have always been afraid of death and religion can allay that fear.

Third, religion is a method of creating a a society in which people can peacably exist through the fear of a supreme god. Most religions teach good moral values and love, and these qualities are most responsible for peace.

And four, religions are created by persons who desire power and wish to retain it. These persons instill fear into believers to frighten them into docility (e.g. Jim Jones and the Guyana tragedy). The persons in power then use the believers to peacably or violently subdue other societies with different religions (the Holy Crusades or the White Man's Burden).

The battle over the validity of religions is far from over. Recently, we have witnessed a massive surge of Islam in the Arabic world; and in the United States, along with the growing religious movement, we have a President who credits god a dozen times a speech.

I am not concerned by people who want to practice religion. They have every right. I choose not to believe a god exists. I may be wrong. But I am concerned by people who want to mix religion and state.

The separation of church and state must remain. Religious and non-religious people must unite to honor the right to practice the religion of one's choice, or no religion at all.

That right is as basic as the right to live.

"I don't think I see it as being a buffer," Chilton said. "I see it as a virtue of faculty sitting with the graduates."

Past ceremonies have run as long as two hours, but this year's is scheduled to last about 75 minutes, according to Mary Spellicy, a commencement organizer.

The keynote speaker will be Gov. Michael S. Dukakis.

The student address will be delivered by senior Elizabeth Luciano.

To shorten the ceremony, speech times have been reduced and winners of the Distinguished Teaching Award will be honored during the graduate school ceremony May 24 at the Fine Arts Center, Spellicy said.

Yet another chance for Billy Martin?

CHICAGO (AP) — The slumping Chicago White Sox may need a spark to move them out of the American League West basement, and the spark may come from firing Manager Tony LaRussa, co-owner Eddie Einhorn hinted yesterday.

"It's not a question of whether Tony is a good manager or a bad manager," said Einhorn.

"When you get off to a start like this, everybody is having problems," said Einhorn. "The fans don't believe in you and the players don't believe in you."

Asked when a decision on LeRussa's future would be made, Einhorn said, "We haven't put any night on it."

Veteran managers Billy Martin and Dick Williams, neither of whom is now managing, have been mentioned as possible replacements for LaRussa, who has managed the team since 1979.

General manager Ken Harrelson said Tuesday that he had met with Martin.

"You know what we talked about," Harrelson said Tuesday.

"I certainly think that the journalism schools should utilize more of the professionals as guest lecturers," he said. "Also students should do more of their own to get out and find out more about the media."

Ellis served as president of the Capital Press Club from 1979 to 1981 and presently serves on its executive committee. He also is a member of the National Association of Black Journalists, a commissioner of the National Commission on Working Women, an officer of the National Communications Club in Washington and a director of the National Press Foundation.

A Summer You Can't Afford To Miss...

We wanted to write a great Summer Session ad. But we couldn't decide whether to tell you about all the WONDERFUL OUTDOOR FUN STUFF you can do in the summer in New Hampshire, or about our FIVE SHORT SUMMER TERMS that let you finish class in FOUR OR SIX WEEKS and still earn up to FOUR CREDITS PER COURSE.

Or maybe you'd like to know that tuition at UNH is less than many summer schools - ONLY $67 PER CREDIT (585/credit graduate-level). And because of all the summer tourists in this seacoast area, you have a good chance at SUMMER JOB OPPORTUNITIES.

Well, then we thought: Why not tell them about our over 500 COURSES, DAY AND EVENING, OUR QUALITY REPUTATION, AND OUR ACCREDITATION...after all, summer students care about transfer credits.

In the end, we decided just to give you the facts!

Choose from five convenient terms:
May 20 - June 20
May 20 - July 3
June 23 - July 18
June 23 - August 1
July  - August 15

Call (603) 862-3183 today for your free UNH Summer Session Catalog or mail the coupon below. Register now... by mail, phone or personal visit.

Join us. It's a summer you don't want to miss!

school, he was recruited as an outfielder/pitcher by Maine, Sienna, and UMass.

"I chose UMass because I knew it had a good baseball program," said Sheran, who was awarded a partial scholarship. "A lot of my friends went here, as well as some guys I played baseball with back in Pittsfield."

Sheran hit .304 and was nine-for-nine in stolen bases last season, before missing the last 14 games due to a shoulder injury. He appeared in seven games as a pitcher, recording a 2-1 record and 2.59 earned run average.

This year, he is the only Minuteman to start all 37 games and is fifth on the team in hitting. He also leads the club in stolen bases with 17 and is tied for the lead in triples with three.

"I think my speed is the key thing," Sheran said. "It enables me to bunt for hits and steal some bases."

The lefty also has a 2-3 record on the mound with a complete game. He also pitched the lone shutout for the UMass this year, beating Rhode Island with a three-hitter..

Sheran, a business major with aspirations in that field, said he would not turn down an offer to play in the major leagues.

"I'd love to play," he said. "It's been a dream of mine ever since I was a kid. I'd also really like to hit .400 in one of my last two seasons at UMass."

What's the story with the softball team?

Confusion reigns as UMass awaits its bid

By ROGER CHAPMAN
Collegian Staff

Whoever came up with the age-old proverb not to "count your chickens before they hatch" must have had in mind the situation the University of Massachusetts softball team is currently in.

While one would think that the 20th-ranked Minutewomen, a team that has won both the Atlantic 10 regular season and tournament championships, would be a cinch to qualify for the sixteen-team NCAA Division I national tournament, the opposite could remotely be true.

In yesterday's Division I poll, UMass, 36-7 on the season, was ranked 20th, a spot that the Minutewomen have occupied for most of the season. This creates a bit of confusion as to what chance the Minutewomen have of making the tourney, if only sixteen teams are accepted. Based strictly on face value, it would seem that UMass would be left out in the cold.

But this isn't neccasarily the case either. According to Sally Garette, Chairman of the Northeast Region selection committee, the team that finishes in the top spot in the Northeast, although not automatically, traditionally receives a bid to the tourney. That team happens to be UMass.

In addition, the selection process would usually mean that the top seed in each region would get a bid. But, according to Garette, other regions in the nation are currently involved in tight battles for top seeds. Therefore, until those regions have decided its seeds, bids cannot be officially sent out.

Tournament bids, along with pairings and first round sites, will be announced on Monday at noon. At that time, coaches will be notified of their acceptance.

So where do the Minutewomen stand from a regional standpoint? UMass has several factors working in its favor. First, the Minutewomen are the only East coast team ranked in the Top Twenty. Indiana University is ranked 11th, but is considered to be a mid-western school.

Second, the only other schools in the region that could stand an outside chance of getting into the tourney are Adelphi University (27-18-1) and the University of Connecticut (28-15-1). The Minutewomen took three-out-of-four from Adelphi this season and split with UConn.

What could also be considered is the fact that the Minutewomen have a better record, in terms of winning percentage, than 16 of the other 19 teams. The loophole in this theory could be the strength of schedule, as teams west of the Mississippi have been said to have tougher competition.

What makes the tournament situation doubly confusing is the fact that, of the 19 other teams in the poll, nine are exclusively from what could be considered to be the Western region. Based on the fact that another national poll will not be released before the bids are announced, what seems to be evident is that if UMass is to receive a bid, another team that may be ranked higher might not go to the tourney.

A messy situation? It certainly seems that way. The Minutewomen gained a national tourney bid in 1983, with this season being the best chance UMass has had since. While it doesn't seem fair that, like other sports such as volleyball and lacrosse, regional proximity will probably determine the fate of the Minutewomen, it remains a sad part of college athletics that has to be dealt with.

Special to the Collegian

CAMBRIDGE — Senior co-captain Bob Kostro was shelled for seven runs in five innings as the University of Massachusetts baseball team fell to Harvard University, 7-3 yesterday.

The Minutemen fell to 16-21 on the season, losing their seventh game in nine starts. They close out the season next Tuesday with a doubleheader at Providence College.

Kostro fell to 4-4 on the season, allowing 10 hits in five and one-third innings. He allowed seven runs, all earned, and walked four. He struck out six. Kostro also hurt his own cause with two throwing errors on attemped first base pick-offs.

Sophomore outfielder Matt Sheran went two-for-five on the day to extend his school-record hitting streak to 26 games.

UMass took a 1-0 lead in the top of the first. Darrin O'Connor led off with a single, advanced to second on an error and to third when Sheran grounded out to second. Jay Zerner walked. O'Connor and Zerner then executed a double steal attempt, with O'Connor scoring and Zerner getting thrown out.

Harvard struck back with one in the second and three in the third. The Minutemen put a run across in the fifth. Shortstop Gary DiSarcina walked, went to second when Rob Holiday walked, and took third when O'Connor grounded into a 6-4-3 double play.

Sheran ripped a single, scoring DiSarcina and UMass trailed, 4-2.

Harvard touched Kostro for another run in the fifth, before UMass manager Dick Bergquist went with freshman Ken Greer with runners on second and third.

Mike Pakalnis greet the rookie with a shot, doubling to the gap in left-center, scoring two runs and icing the game.

In two and two-thirds innings, Greer allowed three hits and struck out one in a solid effort.

UMass added a run in the sixth as Jeff Cimini walked, took second when Steve Kern walked and scored on Sean Flint's RBI single. On the game, Sheran was the only UMass player with two hits, going two-for-five.

Harvard was led by Paul Vallone with three hits. Pakalnis also had three hits plus two RBI. Frank Caprio has three hits, an RBI and two stolen bases. Ed Toland (2-0) took the win with three strong innings.

For the game, UMass managed only seven hits and committed three errors.

Harvard tagged UMass pitching for 13 hits, but the Crimson were even more stone-handed than the Minuteman defense, committing four errors.

Sheran sets record

By MATT GERKE
Collegian Staff

Regardless of how the University of Massachusetts baseball team finishes this season, Matt Sheran has had himself a year.

The sophomore went into yesterday's game against Harvard with a .324 batting average while pitching and playing the outfield. But, by far, his biggest accomplishment has been a school record-setting 25-game hitting streak, a huge feat for a Division I player.

It started way back on April 5 when he got a hit against St. Joseph's University. Since that time, he has not failed to hit in a game going into yesterday's contest.

"I didn't really think about the streak at the beginning," said Sheran. "But once it got up around 20, it was on my mind."

"It's a great streak," said UMass manager Dick Bergquist. "That is one of the most difficult feats in college baseball. Matt is a good all-around athlete and a great competitor."

Sheran played varsity baseball for three years at Taconic High in Pittsfield, and was MVP of his league as a junior and senior.

Manganaro, Kaczorowski captains

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

Seniors Paul Manganaro, a linebacker, and Stan Kaczorowski, an offensive lineman have been elected co-captains of the 1986 University of Massachusetts football team.

Manganaro, from Winchester, Mass was selected as second-team All-Yankee Conference last season after making 43 unassisted tackles in 1985 as part of the nationally-ranked Minuteman defense.

He had five sacks, recovered two fumbles and caused two others. In 1984, he missed the entire season due to a knee injury, but proved he totally recovered last year with his consistently high level of play.

Kaczorowski, a native of Scotch Plains, NJ, was named second-team All-ECAC (Division 1-AA) and was second-team all-Yankee Conference. An offensive guard, the big (6-2, 250 pounds) man also kicked five extra points (out of six attemps) and four field goals as a placekicker. He is a two-year starter on the line.

Don't be shocked, but Lorenzo Sutton was selected as the most valuable player on the UMass basketball team at their annual banquet.

Sutton, a Sporting News honorable-mention All-American and second-team all-Atlantic 10 selection, averaged 17.8 points-per-game on .501 shooting from the field and .750 accuracy from the line. The junior shooting guard also pulled down 4.1 rebounds-per-game and received the team's academic award.

David Brown, a 6-4 freshman guard from Baltimore, was named the most improved player. The A-10 all-roookie team member scored 9.1 ppg and hauled down a team-high 5.2 rpg.

Point guard Carl Smith was named the team's best defensive player. Smith, who has several school assist records, led the team in steals this season with 40. Freshman Fitzhugh Tarry was named the Unsung Player-of-the-Year. UMass finished 9-19 last season.

The UMass women's soccer team will be honored at a University function tonight at Memorial Hall.

The Minutewomen, who were 15-0-0 in the regular season before losing in the Final Four to eventual national champion George Mason. Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey and coach Kalekeni Banda will speak.

Less strict drink policy? Possibly ...

Officials: would consider it

By LESLEY CLARK
Collegian Staff

Two top University of Massachusetts administrators yesterday said they would consider modifications to the residence hall alcohol policy, but did not specify what those changes might include.

"I'm not going to make a commitment that we'll change it," said Dennis L. Madson, vice chancellor for student affairs. "But we are open to suggestions."

The current policy, instituted in September, prohibits students from drinking in "common areas" such as hallways and lounges. A motion drafted by the Southwest Area Government and discussed at a Residential Committee meeting Wednesday urges that students of legal age be allowed to drink in common areas.

Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey, reached late yesterday, said, "The proposed policy is appropriate and seems to have widespread support. I know Mr. Zannini [director of Housing Services] will be glad to review any suggestions."

Madson, who said he discussed the SWAG proposal in a meeting with Duffey, said the administration has "not ruled it out, but we haven't ruled it in yet either.

"It's difficult to balance the rights of people over 21 with those of people under the drinking age," he said. "We will consider and debate the proposal."

Bill Collins, president of SWAG, said a change in the

Seniors split on the Duke

University of Massachusetts students' opinions appear divided on the selection of Gov. Michael S. Dukakis as the commencement speaker for the class of 1986.

In a random poll of 50 graduating seniors yesterday, 18 agreed that Dukakis would be a good speaker while 17 opposed his giving the main address. Fourteen of the students surveyed said they didn't care and five were unaware that Dukakis was chosen.

"Yeah, I'd like to see the Duke here," said Mike Zarbo, a political science major. "What other options are there?"

Senior Minda Gold said, "I agree with Dukakis speaking, but I think we should have had Bill Cosby." Cosby was mentioned by a number of students.

"It would've been nice to find an alumni from UMass who has done something," said Heather Dunkers, a wildlife and fisheries major. "It shouldn't be political."

Some who favored the choice said Dukakis represents common people. "I like his style," said Thomas Dimmock, a hotel, restaurant and travel administration major. "He represents a whole lot of people, not just a few interest groups."

But others noted the governor is up for reelection and said he lacks a commitment to public higher education.

"I think it's a bummer that he is speaking because of all the educational cuts and the fact that he didn't [support UMass] in the way of funding," said Chris Allen, another HRTA major.

"I respect him," said Andrew Gould, a journalism student. "I just hope our graduation doesn't turn out to be a platform for his candidacy."

"I don't want to listen to campaign rhetoric at my graduation," said Peter Themistocles, a communications major.

Victim knows assailant in most cases of rape

But coercion is often not seen as crime

By CAROL TANNENBAUM
Collegian Staff

They were at a party. He approached her, and they started talking. He invited her to his room. They were having such a good time, and he was a nice guy, so she went with him. They talked for a while and then he kissed her. She did not resist, at first. But when she told him to stop he did not...

The above scenario is an example of acquaintance rape, in which the assailant and the victim know each other.

Statistics indicate that acquaintance rape, not attacks by strangers, accounts for most rapes in the United States. According to a recent article in The Boston Globe, nearly two-thirds of rape victims know their assailants.

Kathy Alexander, coordinator of the educator/advocate program at the University of Massachusetts Everywoman's Center, defines acquaintance rape as "forced intercourse by somebody the victim knows." It is often referred to as "date rape" if it occurs in an ongoing relationship or social setting.

It does not matter if the couple has had intercourse before, Alexander said — "No means no.

"There is some element of trust, some entrance into a woman's space, in a way that she's not suspecting violence. It's as frequently premeditated as any other rape," she added.

Acquaintance rape is often more traumatic than rape by a stranger, and more difficult to report since the victim is made to feel partly responsible for what happened, noted Pat Barrows, also of Everywoman's Center staff member.

"In many ways, being victimized is 'better' by a stranger," Barrows said. "If a man jumps out of a bush and rapes a women, it is less likely she will be asked how she provoked the man. If she is raped by someone she knows people ask what she did."

Karen, a senior who was sexually assaulted in her room numerous times last year by her roommate's boyfriend, said she did not press charges because "it would have been my word against his. Everything pointed against me.

"He is not violent. He's quiet until you get to know him. He is not aggressive, except sexually. He is a good student who does not drink much. You'd never think he was [a rapist]," she said in an interview.

"I'm sick of having the victim blamed," Karen said. People "don't understand the fear, the threats he made.

"I never pressed charges; all it would have done was kick him out of the dorm. I still regret it."

Karen said she had believed rape should be reported, but that she now understands why many victims stay silent.

Barrows said, "Look at any other violent crime, such as murder. If someone is murdered people will come forward and talk about it. If someone is raped no one says anything."

Mary Dumas, community relations officer for the UMass police department, said the many many victims do not report acquaintance rape because "people don't believe the issue will be thought of as important ... it's not a 'true' definition of rape. There is confusion in terms of the definition."

Was it rape?

Did rape occur in the scenario described in the accompanying article? Students polled in the Hatch cafeteria and a residence hall in the Orchard Hill area expressed a variety of opinions.

"You lose control. If, all of a sudden, she decides no, and she's led him on, then no it's not rape. She has turned him on. But if she gets a conscience attack, says no and pushes him away, then he turns violent and attacks her, then yes, it's rape."
— Sarah F., sophomore HRTA major.

"If she says no, then, hell, yeah, it's rape."
— Elissa G., junior chemistry major.

"She's going to be called [a tease] if she says 'no.' She might be playing a game."
— Jim R., junior political science major.

"Did she scratch, bite, and scream?"
— Jeff S., sophomore pre-med major.

"Anytime she doesn't consent, that's rape."
— Andrea D., sophomore.

If they have been dating, then, "No, [it's not rape] because they have mutual relations."
— Ken W., senior political science major.

"It shows no respect to the woman."
— Chris D., junior.

"It's always rape unless both parties are willing."
— Ed W., sophomore.

"She has a right to leave. She can do more than that. If she's done everything possible to stop him, yes, it's rape."
— Amy M., sophomore Russian major.

Nazi hunter says allegations help Waldheim

By JEANETTE DeFORGE
Collegian Staff

The campaign of Kurt Waldheim, who is accused of being a Nazi war criminal and will probably be the next president of Austria, is being helped by publicity, said a former trial attorney for the United States Government Office of Special Investigation last night.

Waldheim was elected Secetary General of the United Nations in 1971 and was later accused of being a participant in the slaughtering of thousands of anti-Nazi fighters and in sending about 60,000 people to concentration camps in 1942, said the attorney, Eli Rosenbaum.

"We [discovered], for 10 years the human rights officer of the planet is an accused Nazi war criminal," Rosenbaum said.

He said the General Counsel for World Jewish Congress, of which he is an employee, was looking at a United Nations list of Nazi war criminals and they discovered Waldheim's name.

"We found he was wanted in Yugoslavia under one word: Murder," Rosenbaum said.

He said the United States is the only major country which is working on exposing war criminals from Hitler's regime.

"We try to rebuke their ill-gotten US citizenship and then deport them," he said. Rosenbaum added that many cases take years to prosecute. One case involving a man who had been living in the United States since 1951 on a 45-day visa took 35 years to prosecute.

"There was no widespread conspiracy to bring Nazi war criminals into the United States," he said.

The reason so many criminals were brought into this country was that US immigration did not investigate their backgrounds fully before allowing them to immigrate and later granting them citizenship, he added.

There was an effort to exploit the information the Nazis could supply about the Soviet Union, which the West Germans know the most about, and a need for the technology they possessed to build missiles quickly, he said.

"What we must do is balance the need against the background of the person," Rosenbaum said, "but no one sat down and agonized over the decision."

Report urges changes to avoid enrollment drop

By JOHN C. SHEEHAN
Collegian Correspondent

A report recently released by the Campus Planning Council predicts that if new admissions strategies are not adopted, the University could see a 27 percent decline in the enrollment of first-year students in the next 10 years.

The 47-page report compiled by the council of administrative, faculty and student representatives said the decline could result from the end of the "baby boom," which lasted from 1946 to 1964.

Provost Richard O'Brien, the council chairman, said, "Because we are steadily improving the quality of education here, my guess is we will see a modest decline [in first-year enrollment] if the proposals are adopted."

The report recommends the University immediately take four steps to counter the expected decline: Raise the quality of education; adopt a floating limit between 10 and 15 percent for out-of-state enrollment, instead of the current 15 percent; create post-doctorate teaching fellowships to relieve demand for crowded classes; and increase the recruitment of minority and low-income students.

Asked how the council plans to improve the quality of education in light of Gov. Dukakis' reduced funding recommendation for UMass, O'Brien said, "Many of the things we requested have not been received but a number of other funds for fiscal year 1987 were given. We have to keep trying year after year."

The report also said the University could keep enrollment levels constant by dipping into the admissions waiting list, a strategy not recommended because it would reduce the average Scholastic Aptitude Test score for incoming students.

According to the report, SAT scores of those accepted to UMass increased from 1981 through 1985. For the first time in 10 years, the average combined SAT scores for first-year students was more than 1,000.

The report has been sent to the Undergraduate Student Senate, the Graduate Student Senate and other campus bodies.

Art and music rule festival today at SUB

By MARGO MULRENIN
Collegian Correspondent

"Now's the Time: An Arts Experience," a multiarts festival designed to display local and student talent in art, dance, music and crafts to the five college community, will be held today in and around the Student Union Ballroom.

"It's a big mix of campus and community talent," said Maria Writesel, director of publicity for the event.

Starting at noon, exhibits will feature local artists Neal Backman and John Root and student artists Giovanna DeMarco, Dave Brown and Helen Guran. In addition, there will be a student sculpture exhibit by Tess Bruhn and a show of photographs by Hampshire College student Jude Peterson.

Dance pieces, jewelry crafts, a ceramics booth, jugglers, a wandering pantomime and saxophonist, video exhibition and t-shirt painting are scheduled for throughout the day.

University of Massachusetts alumnus Scott Kepnes will be exhibiting children's art from local day-care centers and performing puppet shows and sing-a-longs for children.

In the evening, five bands — One Seed, Free Press, Liquid Lesson, Thanks to Robert Brown and Circle — will perform from 7 p.m. to midnight in the Student Union Ballroom.

Writesel said the event was the brainchild of third-year music major Larry Berger.

"The project was inspired by my interest in arts administration," Berger said. "This way I can work on my skills as arts administrator while exposing local talent."

The festival is sponsored by the Student Government Association, the Governor's Program Council, the Arts Council, the Commuter Area Government and the University Committee on Alcohol Use.

University issues guidebook on disability issues

By SHERYL JEAN
Collegian Staff

Intended to educate UMass community

A guide to understanding people with disabilities has been created to educate the campus community on the regulations protecting handicapped students and the services and resources available to them.

Ron Sinacore, director of the University's Affirmative Action Office, said, "There is a lot more confusion and misinformation associated with the handicapped on this campus than other issues of protected groups."

The guide is being issued under Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, which protects the rights of persons with disabilities and guarantees them access to colleges and universities which receive federal funds.

It outlines resources, services, and contacts available to the handicapped, as well as civil rights such as "The University may not limit the number of handicapped students admitted" and "No student may be excluded from any course of study solely on the basis of a handicap."

A "handicapped" person defined by federal regulations in the guide is any person with "a physical or mental impairment which substantially impairs one or more major life activities; has a record of such an impairment; or is regarded as having such an impairment."

The guide lists 16 handicapping conditions including alcoholism, drug addiction and specific learning disabilities.

Sinacore said it is a very timely issue for learning disabled students. He cited the class action suit filed in United States District Court in Springfield against the University by Carol Reis in March appealing for a foreign language requirement waiver. Reis, a student with the learning disorder, dyslexia, was allowed to substitute history, literature or linguistics courses for the language requirement.

He said there are no statistics that give a clear indication of how many students with disabilities attend UMass. The Office of Handicapped Student Affairs puts the number at more than 300.

Paul Appleby, director of that office, said the guide is "a formal way of letting University staff, faculty and students know what our responsibility is in responding to the rights of handicapped students, as well as letting disabled students know what their rights are."

Fern Johnson, associate vice chancellor for academic affairs, said the guide is "a consciousness-raising effort for the campus community."

policy would "demonstrate that the University is listening to and addressing student concerns."

Collins said the current policy is "strongly opposed by students ... and has increased tension between residents and staff."

He said he was pleased by Madson's and Duffey's remarks and added, "Most reasonable people would agree that the rights of legal-age students should not be denied."

The Residential Committee, on which Zannini sits, tabled the SWAG proposal this week and is expected to vote on it next Wednesday.

The proposal, written in February, says the current alcohol restrictions do "not advance the development of mature thought and behavior," because they encourage students to drink in their rooms.

Tow operator gets hot surprise

A 1974 Ford Mustang caught fire after a tow truck operator tried to start it unaware that the carburetor was missing, at 9:18 p.m. Wednesday in Fraternity-Sorority Park, University of Massachusetts police said.

Police and the Amherst fire department extinguished the blaze, they said.

In other reports:

●A 37-year-old man was committed to Northampton State Hospital by the District Court in Northampton after he was arrested on trespassing charges at 1:18 p.m. Wednesday near the east side of Berkshire Dining Commons, police said.

●A 24-year-old non-student was put in protective custody after he was found allegedly drunk and "face down on the floor" at 12:40 a.m. Wednesday on the third floor of Machmer, police said.

Pentagon sails trimmed in House committee vote

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Democratic-controlled House Budget Committee pushed aside Republican complaints yesterday and approved a fiscal 1987 budget that would slash military spending, freeze or trim most domestic programs and embrace a tax increase to reduce the deficit.

By the party-line 21-11 vote, the panel agreed to the $994.2 billion spending plan proposed by committee Chairman William H. Gray III, D-Pa. It would reduce the deficit next year to $137 billion, $7 billion below the Senate budget passed last week and well within the statutory limit of $144 billion.

Action by the full House is expected within two weeks.

As a series of GOP amendments to sharply alter the plan were defeated, Rep. Delbert L. Latta of Ohio, the panel's senior Republican, complained, "We were getting rolled all day" by the Democratic majority.

However, Gray defended the plan saying, "It would result in a lower deficit than the Senate plan, and achieves this by spreading the cuts more equitably. Spending cuts are divided almost equally between defense and domestic programs."

"Contrast that with the Senate budget, which places 86 percent of the cuts on the non-military side of the budget," said House Majority Leader Jim Wright, D-Texas, a member of the committee.

The Democratic plan would cut military budget authority next year of $285 billion, $1.8 billion below the current level.

Spring fever's collegiate dark side: stress

By KATHLEEN MOYNIHAN
Collegian Staff

May is a time for fun in the sun, spring concerts, looking ahead to summer. But for students it is also a time for final exams and papers — and stress.

Though some stress is beneficial and can spur better performance, there comes a point at which it is harmful and pushes students' grades down, according to Lynn Bechtel, a counselor at the University of Massachusetts Mental Health Services.

Bechtel said the symptoms of stress vary from person to person: "It ranges from the person feeling more irritable, jumpier, or becoming angry more easily.

"Sometimes [students complain of] headaches, tightness in the neck, lower back problem and stomach upset," she said. "If people have physical symptoms that they think are stress-related, they should get them checked out medically."

Most students just want to get their exams over with and go home, said Rich Francey, a first-year student.

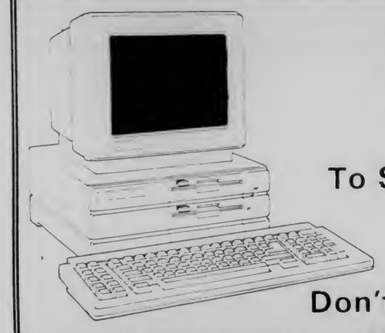
"I only have two this semester and they don t intimidate me one bit; it depends on how many you have. You have to manage your time. It's the end of the year — all you want to do is get out of here," he said.

Chris Farrell, a sophmore communications major, sounded more worried: "It gets down to 25 or 30 percent of your grade. All the work you've done all semester could go right out the window. Finals scare me because I'm not a good test-taker."

A main cause of exam stress, Bechtel said, is students' unrealistic expectations of themselves. "It's one thing to do the best you can, and another to try to be perfect," she said.

"The tendency is to forget about eating balanced meals. Eating the wrong foods does not help [stress management]. You should take care of yourself—cut down on junk food, eat less suger, limit caffeine and alcohol intake, and get enough sleep. If there's a choice between one more hour of studying or an extra hour of sleep, use it to sleep," she said.

She emphasized the importance of study breaks — for at least 10 minutes every two hours. "Get up and do something. Move around and stretch, go for a run or walk," she said; do not just sit around and drink coffee.



Those most vulnerable to exam stress are perfectionists and procrastinators, she added.

Sal Frontiero, a first-year natural resources major, said, "One thing you realize about finals week is that all your procrastination has finally caught up with you. For me it's so easy to blow off work if I'm not under pressure."

A common complaint of students is the too short reading period. Dasha Baker, a psychology major said "I think it's too bad we don't have a longer reading period. I'm lucky I only have two finals. I feel sorry for people who have four or five. The fact that you only have one reading day adds to stress."

Students have many methods of diffusing stress. "Bowl wars" 30-the Orchard Hill Residential Area and "tower wars" in Southwest are traditional end-of-semester events in which students let off steam by screaming at each other from windows and balconies.

Some have quieter solutions. Mike Ward, an engineering major, said, "eating is a very good outlet for anxieties caused by exams."

On realizing our interdependence

Mark Caldeira

"Should a giant and a dwarf walk on the same road, every step they both take will give fresh advantage to the giant," said Rousseau. So it is today in our society. We all travel on the same road — we all are subject to advanced capitalism. Yet, because of the infinite and complex determinations which constantly create who we are, every one of us necessarily begins at a different starting point. And in this society of institutionalized competition, we cannot walk; we are forced to run. Because capitalism does not positively address our differences and inequalities (in fact, takes advantage of them) those who run fastest win, and those who don't lose. The justification for this is, "Well, that's just the way it is." But this injustice is not just the way it is. It is merely the way people have created society — a way that is far from our human potential.

In this society, we all are unequal economic contenders in an unjust economic rat-race. By no virtue of our own are we born into the unique and specific position we occupy; each one of us had no influence in the determination of our initial sex, race, religion, class position, cultural traditions, physical features, and genetic make-up, nor in the powerful consciousness derived from these that effects us throughout our lives. Yet this society, this specific economic system, in its declaration of "equal opportunity" presumes precisely that — that every competitor is equally equipped. But, there is another way of conceptualizing the human society.

At the very moment of birth, we are initiated into the world as an interdependent member of our species. With the grasp and the slap of the doctor or midwife's open hand we are bonded into the human social family. We are not yanked out and dropped to the floor. We are cooperative, not competitive, beings. As our parents or guardians have an intrinsic obligation to provide a living, loving environment for us, so are we obliged to cooperate and interact positively with our human siblings in return. Our interdependence is manifest in the very nature and duration of our complete dependence upon our parents after birth. In no other species are the new-born utterly helpless for so long. It is the structure of society which poisons our cooperative involvement with destructive competition. If we were (as social Darwinists profess) a truly "competitive species," would it not be a contradiction to assist, care for, be friends with, or love another human being? Because as a "naturally competitive" species, everyone would be our enemy.

It may be argued that there is an inherent aggressive instinct/drive characteristic of the human species. Perhaps there is. But when it is argued that "competition in the capitalist system allows for the healthy and natural exercise of this aggression," we have to vehemently oppose and reject this argument. Is it not illogical, immoral and irrational to spend, as a species, incalculable energies and resources in the unfathomable reproductive, rearing, educational and life-continuing processes as we do, while at the same time expending and exhausting a significant portion of the developing human lives of these life processes in the maintenance of an unjust, destructive, economic system? "Aggression" does not, and must not be released at, focused upon, or exercised towards other human beings through an inescapable institutionalization. With the infinite challenges of the universe breathing in our faces, "aggression" can be, must be, productively and benevolently redirected toward these challenges with human intelligence and compassion.

Unfortunately, the structure of our society does not allow for this. We are taught to be 'individuals' and to compete with one another. We learn to "look out for numero uno" without regard for others. Competition is assumed to be productive, healthy and human. But under capitalism, it is not. As vastly different people with vastly unequal capabilities, aspirations, knowledge, skills and handicaps, we do not have the "equal opportunity" we are assumed to have.

How can a dwarf compete with a giant? It cannot — unless we change the system and stop the race.

Mark Caldeira is a Collegian columnist.

Correction

Due to an editing error, the following paragraph was left out of a letter from the Chancellor's Commission on Civility in Human Relations that appeared in yesterday's paper:

The Commission also believes that, though the incivility was far less threatening and a far less fundamental assault on human rights (than the Paul Cameron speech), the harassment on March 31 of the pro-"contra" speakers (who were advised to cut short their event and had special need for police protection) represented an articulation of opposition grounded in intolerance and disrespect.

Dignity or neurosis?

A few things will be different at this year's commencement ceremony. In addition to being greeted with a new, improved sound system, seniors will undergo "visual searches" for alcohol. They will be asked to carry, not wear, their graduation robes into Warren McGuirk Alumni Stadium.

Perhaps our first reaction should be gratitude that the Commencement Task Force has apparently abandoned the idea of frisking graduates. But the commencement crackdown is one more manifestation of Whitmore's fortress mentality; any leniency which could lead to news reports of "rowdiness" makes administrators twitch and squirm.

One University official earlier this semester dramatized the public-relations obsession to Collegian editors by noting that commencement takes place around the time the Legislature examines the state budget — as if lawmakers care more about whether we drink at commencement than what we learn in the four years preceding it. Thus this year, the effort to keep graduates silent, sober and in their seats smacks of more pandering to Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, who was chosen as the main speaker although — or more likely because — he has been fiscally unkind to UMass.

Another commencement change, seating faculty closer to graduates of their schools, is a good idea. What is disturbing is the spirit in which it seems to have been arranged — as a ring of instructors to keep parents from passing champagne to their sons and daughters. Why not mingle faculty and seniors more thoroughly, so that no professor feels thrust into a chaperone role, and simply send letters asking parents to save alcohol for later?

Director of Public Safety Gerald T. O'Neil, in outlining the security measures, said, "I don't think graduation is going to be something that requires a pat-down. This isn't a concert." Hopefully, this at least means his department will not contradict its declared policy as it did at the Southwest concert.

There, O'Neil had said persons would be asked for identification if they carried alcohol into the concert area, not once they were inside. But last Sunday, police officers waded into the crowd and made 17 arrests. They also videotaped the audience and will keep the footage on file "to see what it looks like."

For our parents, commencement is a return on an investment and, in many cases, the ultimate "flying the coop." For us, it is a joyous, melancholy, confusing, nostalgic rite of passage into the "real world." Controlling anyone who is stinking drunk and disruptive does not necessitate turning it into something that resembles passing through customs.

Nightmare of a weekend

Herb Ramy

Before I start this column, let me say that I do like my roommate. This is my sixth semester living with him and, for the most part, he's been great. In fact, I don't think we've ever had a real argument. Even the nicest person, though, does something that really bothers you every now and then. Last weekend he bothered me.

It all started innocently enough on Thursday when my roommate informed me that four friends were coming up for the weekend to see John Cafferty and The Fools play. Although these people were a fairly loud bunch, I knew he would be around to entertain them. Little did I know what cruel trick fate had in store for me.

The next day my roommate asked me to give him and his girlfiend a ride. I didn't think much of the request until I saw him piling dufflebags into my car.

On the way into town, he told me that he was going on a boat trip for the entire weekend. He was sorry that he hadn't mentioned this fact to me earlier. He said that it must have slipped his mind.

Even after hearing this news, I wasn't very depressed. It would be difficult keeping an eye on four drunks for a weekend, but not impossible. Besides, how much damage could they really do?

The roof began to cave in once I made it back to my dorm. As soon as I walked into my room, the phone began ringing. When I answered it, my ears were assailed by a burp of gargantuan proportions. It was Joe, one of my roommate's friends who would be at UMass in a few hours. He told me that the number of people coming up had blossomed to nine, and that they would be there at approximately eight o'clock. Before I could protest, he'd hung up the phone. I bowed my head in defeat. My roommate was off on a little Love Boat cruise, and I was stuck with nine semi-literate men who were mentally still in puberty.

I sat in my room sipping a drink, waiting for the dreaded moment to arrive. Eight o'clock came and went though, and still they were nowhere to be seen. Just as I was about to start believing in miracles again, my door was flung wide open, and in walked nine of my worst nightmares in various stages of drunkenness. One of them made the motions of a person about to be sick. I have to give him credit though, he almost made it to my garbage can. From here, the weekend went downhill.

The next two days are a blur to me. Several of my friends found me in a corner of the bathroom babbling in a childlike voice, "Have they gone yet?" over and over again.

Nearly a week has gone by now, and I'm completely healed except for an occasional nervous twitch in my right eye. The doctors say that it may never go away, but I don't think it's too high a price to pay for my roommate to have a good time. Besides, this weekend my old soccer team is coming over, and I'll be far away from this place. Thank God I didn't get a bad roommate.

Letters from the editor

Larry Bouchie

With the gradual full reutilization of the Tower Library, physical plant and library administrators are examining the possibility of placing a snack bar in the Tower. The proposal came about as possibly being the best way to contain the problem of people bringing food and beverages inside the Tower.

One preliminary proposal is to put the snack bar on the floor below what is now considered the main floor. Apparently, all space on this main floor has been committed, but some room is available below the sunken terrace facing the Old Chapel. Administrators are awaiting information from several colleges to study how other schools accomodate food in their libraries, while retaining the true purpose of a library's space.

Sweeping through several local bars last weekend checking "of age" liquor identification, Amherst police appear to be serving a not-so-subtle notice to area bar owners that underage drinking will not be tolerated this spring.

Two uniformed officers went person by person through Mike's Westview Cafe and Charlie's, among others, checking IDs, but didn't really hassle anyone holding suspect identification. If you find it harder to get served in the next few weeks, it's not because of the bartenders' new, stricter policy, it's just their response to the Amherst cops.

This week's Boston Phoenix contained an unusual story about House Ways and Means Chair Richard Voke. According to anonymous politicians and Beacon Hill sources, members of the House are becoming quite upset by what some perceive as personal attacks on budget requests submitted to Voke.

Simply put, the message is that if you're feuding with Voke, or he has a personal dislike for you, don't be surprised to see your budget proposals hacked and slashed. A few weeks ago, the University lost about $6 million in proposed deferred maintenance monies after our budget went through Voke's office.

Pressed for an explanation by the Collegian, a Voke aide said that it must have been some sort of oversight. Pressed for an explanation of House complaints by the Phoenix, Voke said he doesn't understand the anonymous complaints and fears.

A Boston Globe update last Sunday on the choice of twelve finalists for former Regents Chancellor John Duff's position included the name of University professer Randolph Bromery.
However, Bromery, a former University Chancellor and the first black to hold the job, didn't even apply for the position. I'm not even going to guess what is going on with this story.

Well, I don't want to write a "Goodbye UMass" column, but I will take my last two paragraphs to say goodbye. Primarily, I can only hope that some people have enjoyed reading this column as much as I've enjoyed writing it. I'd like to thank those who read what I had to say and also contributed in their own way to providing me with the information to get each column off the ground.

In closing, I'd also like to thank the Collegian business, graphics and news staffs for putting up with my foolish antics, questions and requests. There's no way I could have put this page together, written my column, and worked with the diverse UMass community without the unqualified support of Collegianites. I'm going to miss a lot of people on this campus. Thanks.

The mysteries of Emily Dickinson

By CHARLES FRANCIS CARROLL
Collegian Staff

Emily Dickinson died one hundred years ago this Thursday. Died? Better say "called back," for that is what is inscribed on the headstone at her grave. These were not Emily's last words, as many believe; rather they were contained in a note to her cousins two weeks before her death.

The grave is located behind Ren's Mobil in town, where a house once stood in which Dickinson lived for a short time during her youth. Her home for most of her lifetime, where most of her poems were written and found, and where she died, is on Main Street and will be open to the public from 2:30 to 4:30 on April 15.

Is it not strangely appropriate that, as a girl, Emily Dickinson looked out at her future grave? For, Emily Dickinson, as a poet, was fascinated with death.

No doubt the faithful will make mecca to this sacred ground and leave flowers and anonymous notes in greater numbers than usual. Perhaps, there will even be a seance to attempt to call her back. For nothing less than a seance could solve the mystery of Emily Dickinson. Mystery? It should be in the plural, for her life is full of mysteries.

That she was a private person we know: like Thoreau, she has come to symbolize solitude for us. But why was she a recluse? Why did she attend Mt. Holyoke for only one year? Why was she so obsessed with death? Was there a great love in her life? Was there more than one? Why didn't she publish? Why did she not receive more acclaim?

That Emily Dickinson is one of our greatest poets is no mystery. But why did she write? What does her poetry mean? Why are there no titles? Why did she write only short poems? Why did she write in a more or less constant form? Why is her poetry so impersonal? Why aren't there references to the Civil War?

There are neither simple, nor certain answers.

Despite the mystery, there are ways in which we can become more aware of Emily Dickinson. We can familiarize ourselves with the canon of scholarship on Dickinson. We can take a class on Emily Dickinson here at the university with the eminent Dickinson scholar David Porter, or read Richard B. Sewall's biography, The Life of Emily Dickinson.

Next week there will be numerous displays and activities available to the public. The Jones Library will have an exemplary exhibit of the poet's material from actual manuscripts to family memorabilia. Amherst College will have a tribute to Dickinson called "In Her Own Words," at 8 p.m. on Wednesday April 14, at Johnson Chapel in which exerpts from her poems and letters will be read. Chancellor Duffey is scheduled as one of the speakers.

But there is only one way to truly get acquainted with Emily Dickinson and that is to read her poems. Visit a library or a bookstore and read through her poetry. If you do, I am sure you will agree, though her poetry was written more than a hundred years ago, Emily Dickinson is the greatest.

It is only fitting to close with a poem, one of the last poems she wrote before she died. It is about her friend, the poet Helen Hunt Jackson, but it could apply to her as well.

The immortality that she gave
We borrowed at her Grave —
For just one Plaudit famishing,
The Might of Human love —

Should art stay or should art go?

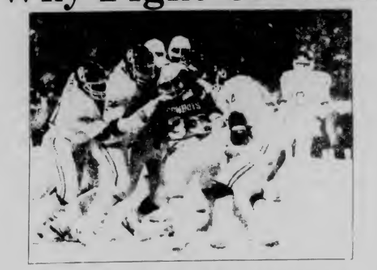
By CHARLES FRANCIS CARROLL
Collegian Staff

The black crystal jutting from the Fine Arts Center stairway has challenged the university community since it first arrived in the fall of 1984, eliciting as much contempt as adulation.

Perhaps, if we understood it more, we would disparage it less. We might even learn to like it enough to keep it here. For unless some special accommodation is made soon, this work of art by one of Europe's most renown sculptors, Mauro Staccioli, may be displaced and destroyed in order to carry out repairs to the Fine Arts Center plaza. According to Helaine Poisner of the University Gallery, there is no plan to remove the piece temporarily and replace it after the repairs are completed. Although this may not happen for two years, the work's presence is "hopeful of recieving a one-year extention."

"Good,' some of you say, glad to be rid of it. Without naming names, there have been repeated attacks in the press against this site-specific sculpture made especially for UMass. Why, one Collegian columnist even accused it of attacking her!

The question of whether we can keep the sculpture permanently depends on whether or not it deserves to be saved. Is it worth saving? Is it even art? It is not only art, it is great art, and must be saved.



If it is art, then why are so many people disturbed by it? Because it is intended to be disturbing. Staccioli has developed an art form which he calls "sculptura intervento," an art-of-intervention. Staccioli places minimal forms of monumental proportions in public spaces, e.g., spikes where there were empty walls and walls where there were empty fields. These works are not merely confrontational because of their obstructive mass. They are all the more obstructive because they confront our complacency with the environment by being structurally juxtaposed and unconventionally balanced.

The UMass sculpture is a case in point. Contrasted sharply against the stark backdrop of the Fine Arts Center, the alien black form seems ready to slide off the stairs at any moment. We can no longer walk through the Fine Arts Center without being made aware that it is indeed an arts center. Staccioli's sculpture is the exclamation point to an otherwise glib statement. It is without question one of the most outstanding public artworks in the entire valley. To take it away is to steal a masterpiece. Should it be removed, or worse, destroyed, consider yourself fortunate to have seen it. Mauro Staccioli's sculpture forces us to see a deeper meaning in our existence.

"Liberty means responsibility. That's why most men dread it." — George Bernard Shaw

FRIDAY FILM FOLLIES

By DON LIPPER
Collegian Staff

Exams: The thrill of caffeine, the agony of defeat, the human drama of academic destruction, this is Five College's wide world of frustration. If you are feeling the need to release the pressure of the "May crush," a few new movies might losen the vise grip.

The big movie news this week is that Akira Kurosawa's most recent film and according to many his greatest masterpiece, Ran is now playing at the Academy of Music in Northampton. Ran (which means chaos) is the aging master's version of Shakespeare's King Lear set in Japan's bloody and violent feudal period. The story of the movie depicts what happens when an aging warlord, wearying of wars and ruling over his conquered land, gives away all his land to his sons. Retirement has disasterous results for everyone. Kurosawa is not just one of Japan's greatest filmmakers, he is one of the greatest filmmakers in world history. This epic tragedy must be seen.

The other bit of movie news this week is a sneak preview at the Mountain Farms 4 Theater on Saturday at 7:30. Top Gun stars Tom Cruise (Risky Business, Legend) as a young Air Force hot shot who is assigned to an aircraft carrier. Cruise enters some kind of competition to become 'Top Gun,' in other words, the number one pilot. Kelly McGillis (Rachel in Witness) also stars.

I hear a new comedy from John Badham the director of War Games called Short Circuit is supposed to be pretty good. It's the story of a robot called Number Five who after being struck by lightning thinks its alive. Steve Guttenberg stars as a scientist from the defense firm that created the robots and Ally Sheedy also stars as the young woman who finds Number Five in her catering truck after it escapes.

Also in the rumored-to-be-good category are two movies presently showing at the Pleasant St. Theater in Northampton. Uforia is an extremely off-beat comedy in the tradition of Repo Man starring Harry Dean Stanton (Repo Man, Paris, Texas, Alien, Fool for Love, etc) Fred Ward (Remo Williams) and Cindy Williams (American Graffiti and Laverne and Shirley). The film is about a fake faith healer (Stanton) a country music loving drifter (Ward) and a supermarket checkout cashier (Williams) who believes that UFOs will land any day now near her trailer park. I hear this is a very weird yet funny movie.

Always*, a new film examining relationships, is now showing at the Pleasant St. Theater in Northampton.

The other rumored goody at Pleasant St. is independant director Henry Jaglom's Always. This is the story of separated couple who invite a long married couple and a newly involed couple over for a weekend. It is supposed to be a probing yet good natured examination of relationships. The Boston Globe went wild over this one saying it was better than Woody Allen's Hannah and Her Sisters. Gene really liked it, Roger didn't.

For those of you who haven't seen it yet Kiss of the Spiderwoman is now playing at the Amherst Cinema. Hector Babenco's film is the story of two cellmates in a prison in Brazil. One of the prisoners is a brooding, sombre revolutionary (Raul Julia) and the other is an apolitical effeminite homosexual played with flair and depth by William Hurt. Hurt's performance rightfully earned him an Oscar for best actor this year.

The Amherst Cinema is also showing Alan (Fame) Parker's Birdy. This is an oppresive film about a wounded army officer (Nicholaus Cage) who returns to the states when his high school friend named Birdy cracks up and just stares at the walls of the psychiatric ward he's in. When Cage knew his friend, all Birdy ever thought about was flying, about how to do it without an airplane. The film says a lot about friendships and I've known it to touch people's lives. At the same time I've known people who hated it or just couldn't understand it. I have to warn you that it is a strange movie but also a fairly worthwhile one as well.

BLACK AFFAIRS

Former UMass student becomes first black to own bottling co.

By C. RON ALLEN
Collegian Staff

A group of black investors led by former UMass student and basketball star Julius 'Dr. J" Erving and Bruce Llewelyn, a New York businessman, have completed a business transaction that provides for the first majority-held black ownership of a Coca-Cola bottling company — the Philadelphia Bottling Company— one of the country's largest and most successful soft drink bottlers, and the Coca-Cola Bottling Company of New York.

Erving, a member of the UMass graduating class of 1972, withdrew in 1971. In May 1983 he received an honorary doctor of arts degree from Temple University. He is thought to be the first active professional basketball player to be so honored.

Under the management of the Erving-Llewelyn investor group, Philadelphia Coke, acording to Black Enterprise Magazine 1984 annual list of the top 100 black businesses, will become the fourth largest US black owned business in terms of sales, behind Johnson Publishing Co., Motown Industries and H. J. Russell Construction Inc.

"Throughout the years we have sought to provide minority firms with a fair position in the US marketplace overall and especially within our own operations," Don R. Keough, chief operating officer of the Coca-Cola Co., said in a telephone interview.

"We are proud to extend the ownership of not only one of our largest soft drink bottling companies, but also one of the largest in the entire soft drink industry as well, to the Llewelyn-Erving investor group," Keough said.

Llewelyn, a New York attorney, has served as chairman of the board of Philadelphia Coca-Cola and a member of the board of directors of New York Coca-Cola since 1983.

He is also a director of the American Can Company, a former ambassador at large during the Carter administration and former chairman of the Overseas Private Investors Group.

Erving, star forward of the Philadelphia 76ers, became a New York shareholder of the Coca-Cola company in 1984. At that time, both investors represented the largest minority ownership position of a bottling company in the US soft drink industry.

With the recent acquisition, Erving, a commercial Coke spokesman, will be a significant shareholder while also supporting the Philadelphia company in a variety of marketing roles.

"Both Mr. Llewelyn and Mr. Erving have proven to be tremendous assets to the Coca-Cola system," Keogh stated. As well as respected business and civic leaders of the Philadelphia community."

Julius "Dr. J" Erving

"Mr.Llewelyn and Mr. Erving have contributed greatly to the growth in market share and volume Philadelphia Coke has experienced over the past three years," Keough said.

We expect those growth rates to reach even higher levels under their ownership."

Philadelphia Coke became a subsidary of New York Coke in 1983 when it was purchased from the Coca-Cola Co.

Under terms of the sales agreement with the Erving-Llewellyn group, which is subject to government approval, New York Coke will maintain a minority interest in the Philadelphia bottling company.

CCEBMS students receive awards

By C. RON ALLEN
Collegian Staff

Twenty-six-year-old University of Massachusetts junior David D. Moore and 23-year-old senior Thelma Hamilton are the 1986 recipients of the Shirley Graham Dubois Community Service Award.

Persented by the Collegiate Committee for the Education of Black and other Minority Students (CCEBMS) board of directors and the CCEBMS program, the award is given to a CCEBMS student who demonstrates in his or her works or deeds the ideals that Shirley Graham DuBois taught CCEBMS and Third World students while she was employed here at UMass.

According to Rick Townes, assistant director of CCEBMS, Moore and Hamilton demonstrated "superb scholarship and superb service to his people, and at the careful consideration of a number of individuals involved, it was determined that these two individuals deserves this recognition."

"I just want to make it clear that making such a choice was a tough one. There were a number of people who were truly capable of receiving the honor, which was a positive thing. It was also positive that they were selected over and above many other minority students who again in the eyes of Shirley Graham DuBois demonstrated superb scholarship and superb service to their community."

Moore, a fashion marketing major, served in the US Air Force for four years. Upon attending UMass, he got involved with the Third World Caucus where he was the internal coordinator for a year. He has also been an SGA senator for three semesters and is also a member of the Afrik-Am society. In 1984, he joined the staff of Nummo News, a black newspaper on the UMass campus, as business manager.

In March, Moore was appointed to the SGA Budgets Committee, making him the only Third World representative to be on such a committee at that time.

The Springfield native had been hoping to be the recipient of this award since last year. "I've always been looking forward to winning and keeping this award in the family," he said.

Moore's brother, Timothy, was the fourth recipient of the award in 1982.

Hamilton, a chemical engineering major, has also been actively involved in the community.

"She is not as visible a community service person as David is," Townes said, adding that "she is not a spokesperson...she never talks about it. It's a more kind of behind the scene type of community service."

Hamilton is a member of the National Society of Black Engineers, and has tutured for CCEBMS and in the minority engineering program. She is also a Diamond for Kappa Alphi Psi fraternity.

There comes a time when we all have to move...certainly it was fun..real fun. Looking back in the semester, I should say thanks to some people but as not to be selfish ..."Good luck and bye everybody."

Drum Magazine expected next week

By C. RON ALLEN
Collegian Staff

Drum, the black literary magazine published by students at the University of Massachusetts, is expected to be out for distribution next week, according to Nelson Stevens, advisor for the magazine.

"We have two issues coming out this semester; one will be out next week and the other one will be out soon after that," Stevens said Wednesday.

Drum, founded in 1969 by Robin Chandler, is published annually and distributed worldwide to correctional institutions and schools.

Recently Drum has faced attacks from some Student Government Association senators who accuse it of operating as a class while receiving student funding.

The SGA Budgets Committee said that since Drum was operating as a part of a class in the Afro-American studies department, it could not fund Drum or any other publication that is academically affiliated.

The future of Drum looks grim.

Treasurer Emily Guzman states that unless a miracle is performed she cannot see another issue coming out for another year because of financial problems.

She thinks that Drum has been maliciously treated in this manner because "our phones have been disconnected without our notification, and this is all being done to push Drum out of existence."

In a letter to Chancellor Joseph Duffey, Chandler said, "Drum has always represented the highest standards of literary and aesthetic thought and expression." She said that it boasts an international readership and has been a quiet but persistent emissary for national unity, thought and expression. Chandler is heading a group at Northeastern University which will participate in a letter writing campaign which hopefully will apply some pressure to the powers that be.

The letter cited "towering figures in the arts and politics which Drum has highlighted in its pages."

Duffey is credited as one of the contributors.

John Phillips, president of Drum, said that in his four semesters at Drum, he has never been as concerned as he is now, especially with the present financial situation.

"As the president, I am very relieved to know that Drum will be out after all that we have been against."

He said that the cries from people "about why wasn't Drum published for almost two years," were long overdue. The last two issues came out in 1982 and last semester.

Stevens said that "the final issue of Drum will depend on the energy and actions of the students who are involved...this can be the final magazine, if they decide that they don't want to do something about it."

Broadcast leader urges comradeship

By C.RON ALLEN
Collegian Staff

Dwight Ellis, vice president of the National Association of Broadcasters, last night urged those seeking jobs in broadcasting to "prepare to be a leader."

Discussing the search for leadership within the media's new technology, Ellis said, "Most people want to be followers because it's pretty hard to get out there and fight the fight."

Ellis told several dozen people in the Student Union Ballroom, "Try smaller networks and radio stations ... blanket your plan. Don't hurt yourself."

Ellis said, "Should you find a mentor in the industry of your choice, take a little initiative and write a letter to that person. Find out where they hang out, read credits as they roll and if you do this you're great."

Ellis said that "white women are a very powerful force in the nation and it's true they will probably take over and be the dominant population of broadcasters."

He urged white women to take a few blacks with them as they rise in the profession.

In Ellis' words, "The challenges of the '50s, '60s and '70s are still the challenges of the '80's for minority Americans."

Ellis joined NBA in 1978. Before that he was administrative assistant to Rep. Cardiss Collins (D-Ill).

He spent four years as producer and host of a public affairs program at WRC-AM in Washington, D.C., and a year as moderator of a community affairs show at co-owned WRC TV in the same city.

The lecture was sponsored by the Office of Third World Affairs, Black Mass Communications Project and the communication studies department.

Mass. court strikes union rule

BOSTON (AP) — The Massachusetts Supreme Court yesterday ruled unconstitutional a state Labor Relations Commission rule giving non-union workers only 45 days to challenge the fees they pay in place of union dues.

The high court said employees should be entitled to the same six-month period allowed for all other "prohibited practices" challenges.

In Massachusetts, non-union public employees may be required to pay "service" or "agency" fees to help cover costs related to contract bargaining and grievance procedures.

But they also have a constitutional right to challenge them to prevent the union from putting the fees toward political candidates or causes that aren't related to the union's duties.

The state Labor Commission gets about 75 to 100 such complaints a year, said attorney John B. Cochran.

Yesterday's decision renews a 1983 challenge filed by Joseph K. Lyons, a public school teacher with the Whittier Regional Vocational District.

Lyons complained about a $217 fee equal to union dues in the 1982-83 school year. The commission said Lyons filed his claim 17 days beyond the 45-day limit. It dismissed the complaint without a hearing.

Lyons appealed to the Massachusetts Appeals Court and then to the Massachusetts Supreme Court, which ordered the commission to investigate and hear the merits of the case.

"It means we can no longer apply the regulation," Cochran said. "We'll have to take a look to see if we need to adopt something in its place. The implication of the court decision seems to be that an identical six-month rule would be appropriate."

The justices' decision referred to an admonition by the US Supreme Court, which has said a non-union employee "must have a fair opportunity to identify the impact of the governmental action on his interests."

we're in a position to accomplish just that," noted Garber. "We realize the campus is behind us and we hope to come back winners."

Gorilla Grumblings: Aldrich, Carr, junior middie Neal Cunningham and injured sophomore middie Brad Carr are all from the Syracuse area and attended West Genessee High School. Nine SU players attended the same school. . .of the 10 action shots in the Syracuse media guide, five are from last season's game at Boyden. . .face-offs will be a key part of the game as SU has lost more then they've won and UMass' Seamus McGovern is over 60 percent for the season. . .SU's man-up offense is devastating (50-of-108) and Garber admitted that you almost have to concede at least eight goals to the Orange because of their talent in man-up, fast break and unsettled situations. . .SU coach Roy Simmons called UMass, "fundamentally sound and capable of scoring goals in bunches. I'm afraid of them, but not to the point where I'm afraid of losing. We're better than they are, we just have to play that way."

Last season, Simmons threatened not to play UMass again after what he then called, "just plain awful and biased," officiating at Boyden Field. .

.that game featured current SU graduate assistant and then All-American attackman Tim Nelson taking a penalty and throwing his stick at the scorer's table.

Post beats Army; pressure on UM

Tenth-ranked C.W. Post defeated twelfth-ranked Army, 8-7 in overtime on Wednesday, putting some pressure on the University of Massachusetts lacrosse team.

UMass, at 9-3, had hoped Post would lose and drop out of the top ten and out of playoff consideration. A good effort at Syracuse, even a losing one, then might have secured a playoff berth for eleventh-ranked UMass. Post must still play Long Island rival Hofstra on Saturday.

Ninth-ranked New Hampshire meanwhile, secured its berth with a 14-5 victory on Wednesday. "It seems we have to beat Syracuse now," said UMass coach Dick Garber.

Gorillas battle Syracuse today

UMass must beat no. 2 Orangemen to make playoffs

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

No more chances. The 1986 lacrosse season begins again, or ends, tonight for the University of Massachusetts.

It's simple. Beating second-ranked Syracuse (7:30 p.m. at Coyne Field) will put the Gorillas in the playoffs. Lose, no matter by how few goals, and the next game is next March.

"I'd like to think that our strength of schedule could put us in the playoffs even if we lose, but you can't count on that," said UMass coach Dick Garber. "So I'm telling the players we have to go in there and expect to win, not just come close."

The top 10 teams in Division 1 qualify for the playoffs. Currently 11th, UMass (9-3) trailed 10th-ranked C.W. Post by only a point in the latest poll and ninth-ranked New Hampshire by two points. But both those teams won their final games Wednesday, with Post downing 12-ranked Army 8-7 in overtime and UNH whipping Dartmouth, 14-5.

Post must still play Hofstra, but the unranked Flying Dutchmen don't figure to win, although it's possible in their rivalry. The Gorillas can no longer count on anyone else, it's up to them.

Coming off of a streak of six games during which they didn't play up to their potential, it seems unlikely UMass has much of a shot against the powerful Orangemen (12-2). But last season's UMass team entered the SU game with a 6-7 record and lost 12-11 in a Boyden Field war.

"I don't know what it is exactly, but we play our best games against Syracuse," said Garber. "I know one of the reasons is that they're always the first or second ranked team, but we play a lot of highly-ranked teams. We just always seem to play a good game against them. I don't expect this time to be any different."

You can divide the UMass season into two halves. In the first six games, UMass went 5-1 and averaged 13.3 goals-per-game. In the last six games, however, UMass has gone 4-2 and scored only eight gpp. Throughout the season, the defense has been excellent, allowing 6.7 gpp.

"We don't have good midfield scoring, we know that," said Garber. "But the attackman are capable of more scoring then they've done lately. We've been getting shots, we're just not making them."

UMass is led on offense by junior All-American attackman Tom Carmean (34 goals and 20 assists for 54 points). Junior Greg Cannella (19-17-36) is a key as the junior college transfer was scoring well in the opening half of the season, but as his scoring has dropped off, so has the team's. Sophomore attackman Kelley Carr (20-10-30) and senior middie Greg Fisk (19-11-30) are also capable scorers.

On defense, freshman goalie Sal LoCascio credits his close defensemen, but the rookie keeper has been outstanding, turning away 159 shots for a 6.2 goals-against average. His save percentage of .682 is among the nation's best.

Two seniors, Tom Aldrich (who has three goals) and Gerry Byrne (who says he tries not to score, because "going across midfield gives me the hives") have been outstanding one-on-one defenders. Aldrich will play Syracuse's second-leading scorer, freshman John Zulberti, while Byrne will draw high-scorer Tom Korrie. Expect them to play well.

With junior defenseman John Jordan missing his fourth straight game due to a deep bone bruise in his leg, three freshman defensemen will be called upon to cover the explosive Orangeman scorers. Matt Woods, Jeff Salanger and Adam Rodell are talented players, but will need to play their best tonight.

Senior defensive midfielder Mike Tomasello draws USA World Team member Todd Curry. Rodell will play Tom Nelson (24-27-51). Both have challenges ahead of them.

Syracuse will be looking to retain their current ranking (see story) while UMass is a program on the way up. It is a pivotal game for the future of the Gorillas, who have turned a 6-8 season around with the held of some scholarship players.

"No matter what happens, we had a hell of a year," said Garber. "There was a sense of excitement around the team this season, and that had been missing for a few years. I think we're at the point where we'll stay at the top 15 nationally.

"Our biggest goal all season was the playoffs, and now

Syracuse coach respects the Gorillas

But Simmons is confident

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

The Syracuse lacrosse team knows what it's like to be the Boston Celtics or the Dallas Cowboys.

Anytime the Orangemen take the field, their opponent is thinking of the prestige beating SU would bring. Since 1979, the Orangemen have been one of the powers of Division 1 lax, winning the national title in 1983 and taking second in 84 and 85, both times to Johns Hopkins. They are ranked second this season at 12-2.

"I'm not about to think UMass will come in here anything but fired-up to beat us," said Orangeman coach Roy Simmons Jr. "But we fell we need to play well and beat them by a decisive margin. We want to continue to stay in second. UMass is a good team, but I'm confident we can beat them pretty good."

The Orangemen are the most balanced, explosive team in the nation. Senior attackman Tom Korrie leads the team with 44 goals and 34 assists for 78 points. Freshman attackman John Zulberti is at 27-36-63. Junior attackman Gordie Mapes (30-26-56), junior attackman Tom Nelson (24-27-51) and USA world team member Todd Curry (29-8-37) at midfield are all potent scorers from anywhere on the field.

Add All-American defensemen Kevein Sheehan and Jeff Desko and SU is an outstanding team with more natural ability then anyone, anywhere.

Statistically, the Orange score 15.7 goals-per-game and allow 7.9. Syracuse plays an up-tempo brand of lacrosse that keys on drawing the double-team and making quick passes to the open man. As a result, over 75 percent of Syracuse's goals are accompanied by an assist.

Syracuse attackman Tom Korie has scored 44 goals and made 34 assists this season.

Syracuse has lost only to fifth-ranked North Carolina (9-7) and Division 3 national champion Hobart (16-13 in one of the biggest upsets lax has seen in years).

Hopkins (11-10), Army (13-7), Delaware (14-8), Adelphi (19-9), Brown (17-4), Cornell (22-7) and Rutgers (13-5) have all lost to SU. For UMass to avoid making that list, it will have to play at the top of its game. For when you talk lacrosse, you talk Syracuse.

Despite loss, Gorillas open playoffs here

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

It might not be a good idea to wear your "Garber's Gorillas" T-shirt around Loyola College for a few days.

The NCAA Division 1 Lacrosse Tournament Committee, in a surprising move, has made the University of Massachusetts the eighth seed in the national playoffs, putting the Gorillas at home on Wednesday to face the University of New Hampshire.

UMass lost 13-8 to Syracuse University in New York on Friday night, but learned Sunday morning that the committee dropped eighth-ranked Loyola out of the tourney and moved 11th-ranked Gorillas in.

The game will either be played in McGuirk Alumni Stadium or Boyden Field depending on the outcome of a conference call between both schools and the NCAA tournament committee this morning.

The weekly USILA poll of the top 15 teams does not determine what 10 teams make the tourney, the committee does, and based on a strong start and strength of schedule, the Gorillas snagged the unexpected berth into the tourney.

The reason for UMass' ascension to eighth, however, may be monetary. Once the committee decided to put the Gorillas in, the fact that a game at UMass would

In media, 'you need paranoia'

Boston Globe editorial editor, others address alumni

By REBECCA THATCHER
Collegian Staff

Martin F. Nolan says Ronald Reagan once told him he "got out of movies when they put all that realism in."

Nolan, editorial editor of the Boston Globe, amused an audience of Collegian staff and alumni with stories about journalism, cinema and politics Saturday night in the Campus Center.

He said skepticism is a necessary element for journalists, citing a conversation between two of his favorite actors:

W.C. Fields once took Groucho Marx to his attic where there was beer, gin and vodka as far as the eye could see. "Groucho said, 'Bill, prohibition is gone.' Field replied, 'Yeah, yeah, but it might come back,'" Nolan said.

Nolan said this story illustrated that "you need paranoia in this business."

He said his accomplishments include being included in President Nixon's White House enemies list list and being "the man responsible for bringing Zippy the Pinhead to the (Globe) comics page."

Nolan, a graduate of Boston College, said his political philosophy is based on that of the late Hubert Humphrey, longtime senator from Minnesota.

Nolan said Humphrey believed, "The best test of government is how it treats people in the dawn of their life ... in the twilight of their life ... and in the shadows," meaning how it serves the young, the old and the destitute of society.

Others who addressed current and former Collegian staff members included Chester Weinerman, who was editor in chief of the Collegian in 1967-68, when the newspaper was expanded from thrice-weekly to daily editions.

Weinerman called on the US press to end the "self-censorship imposed by the reality of profit." He faulted the press for providing a forum for extreme rightist views while ignoring the left, and for what he called deficient coverage of AIDS and nuclear power.

"We have nuclear insanity in this country not because it is necessary for our society ... but because oil companies can own it," Weinerman said.

He said the federal Centers for Disease Control, which are primarily responsible for AIDS research, are run by Mormons who believe that plagues are part of the second coming of Christ.

By not giving adequate coverage to AIDS the press may "be unwittingly contributing to the greatest plague of this century," he said.

The second Collegian alumni reunion, which may continue as an annual event, was sponsored by the Collegian and the University of Massachusetts Office of Alumni Affairs. More than 100 past and present staff members attended the day-long program, which included: a panel discussion of street reporting featuring *Boston Globe® reporters Kevin Cullen and Teresa Hanafin, both ex-UMass students and Collegian*ites; an address by Willaim Dunn, formerly of US News & World Report, on the current "mega-merger mania" in American news media; and a forum which explored "The Beats of the Future."

A semester of setbacks and divisions

News Analysis

By PATRICK JOHNSON
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate's final meeting of the semester Wednesday rounded out 15 weeks of turbulence and a widening of the gap between the factions on the senate floor.

Arguably the most divisive event of the semester was the ratification of the 1987 Student Government Association budget. This was the first semester in which the senate did not have complete control over the $1.8 million Student Activities Trust Fund. Randy Donant, the director of the Student Activities Office, assumed control over parts of the fund on Nov. 19, citing an SATF deficit he said was caused by irresponsibility in the SGA.

The senate Budgets Committee was determined to have a balanced budget this fiscal year, which meant reducing the funding of nearly all student groups. The all-white, mostly conservative committee drew fire when it attempted to eliminate funding for all "political" groups and Drum, a magazine the committee said was too closely tied to the Afro-American studies department, and reduce funding for a number of Third World-oriented organizations.

The budget debate came to a head during a meeting March 5 in the Student Union Ballroom. A coalition of progressive and Third World groups vowed not to allow the approval of the budget as it stood. After two hours of chaos, yelling and threats, the coalition staged a walkout to end the meeting. One senator shouted from the SUB doorway a phrase which was later quoted on joke SGA election flyers: "I don't want to be in your stupid senate. You suck."

When senate speaker John Ruddock declared there was no longer a quorum, the remaining senators swarmed around Ruddock, charging he was biased for ending the meeting before the senators who left could be assessed two absences. One week later, after negotiations, the

Last 'baby boomers' heading for real world

By JEANETTE DeFORGE
Collegian Staff

For the last of the "baby boomers" who decided to attend college ... this is it.

The majority of those Americans born between 1946 and 1964, during the post-World War II "baby boom," will be graduated from colleges and universities this month.

The 19-year period is referred to as the "baby boom" because the US birth rate topped 20 percent people each of those years, peaking at 25 percent in 1955.

Those entering the "real world" this year, most of whom were born in 1964, have different job prospects than those who were born soon after World War II and finished college around 1968.

University of Massachusetts seniors who are graduated May 25 will face a tighter job market and a different economic situation than their counterparts did 18 years ago, according to Ralph Whitehead, a professor in the UMass journalistic studies program.

"For the class of '68, America was still the dominant economic force on the planet and it was getting even stronger," Whitehead said in an interview yesterday.

"Today, just as the numbers have reversed, so hasn't the situation: We still are the dominant economic force but we're getting weaker," he said.

The best job prospects now are for teenagers, Whitehead said.

"If you're 16 and looking for a summer job, you've picked the right birthday. Food franchises are bidding for teenagers."

The kinds of jobs the teenagers of today will be looking for when they turn 22 will also be sought by thousands of people five years older, he said.

"For the baby boom generation as a whole, half of those people have gotten training (after high school) and fully half of those have a four-year degree," Whitehead said.

The GI Bill, created after World War II to help veterans find employment and education, the challenge of the Soviet Union's Sputnik which launched the space race, and the baby boom itself all drove up the number of college entrants, he said.

"The UMass campus was expanded in the '60s pretty much to compensate the baby boom," he said. "Few institutions in this state have had a closer relationship with the Amherst campus of UMass."

High school and college enrollments are now beginning to decline with the introduction of the "Baby Bust" generation, which Whitehead describes as those born from 1965 to 1978. The birth rate fell from 19.4 percent in 1965 to 14.6 percent in 1975.

The birth rates picked up in 1978, Whitehead added, with the "echo of the Baby Boom," when the baby boomers began to have their own children.

Support offered for women

By BARBARA DeLOLLIS
Collegian Staff

The goal of the educator/advocates at the Everywoman's Center is to prevent violence against women.

"We address the issues of rape, battering, campus violence, media violence, child sexual assault and incest," said Kathy Alexander who coordinates the group.

The group of 13 trained volunteers working to educate women on and off campus have been part of the centers Against Violence Against Women Program for more than 10 years.

Women who wish to volunteer for the program must undergo a free 50-hour training program which includes training in areas such as: public speaking, resume writing, how to teach women's issues, how to advocate these issues, and creating personal safety awareness, Alexander said.

Educator/advocates may earn college credit as well as letters of reference, she said.

"The biggest benefit is working against violence against women,"

—Kathy Alexander

"The biggest benefit," Alexander said, "is working against violence against women."

The center is recruiting volunteers from various majors for the summer and fall, Alexander said, adding that they are seeking women who will make a ten month commitment to the program.

Dianne Arico, a 21-year-old senior at UMass, is finishing up her 10-month commitment this semester.

"I was a counselor/advocate for a year," she said. "I wanted to concentrate on education."

"I feel like I've reached quite a few people through the workshop," Arico said. The educator/advocates do most of their workshops in the dormitories, she added.

As for the benifits Arico will earn from this, she said, "I'm doing it volunteer because I believe in the work."

'Foster Day' is declared

By MARY DIAZ
Collegian Correspondent

The Boston Gay and Lesbian Defense Committee has called for a state-wide show of opposition Friday to the Department of Social Services policy against "non-traditional" foster parents.

Committee member Sarah Holmes said they were launching a "massive campaign" on the first anniversary of the day Secretary of Human services Phil Johnston announced the policy which prohibits gay men and lesbians from being foster parents.

Statewide, opponents to the foster care policy will wear pink triangles saying "Foster Equality." Stickers will be available Wednesday at Womonfyre bookstore in Northampton, and Food For Thought bookstore in Amherst, Holmes said.

"We impose straight values on children who only need a warm loving environment..."

—Limor Inbar

In Boston, there will be a rally at noon on the State House steps and a "speak-out" and celebration at 8 pm in the Unitarian Church at 3 Church St. in Harvard Square.

Committee member and Hampshire College professor Margaret Cerullo said the purpose of the campaign is "to open up an opportunity for all of those who opposed the policy to take a public stand against it in a way that will open up discussion in the workplaces and neighborhoods."

Cerullo said the pink triangles were based on a World War II incident in which the people of Denmark all wore gold stars when the Nazis came for the Jews.

UMass sophmore Limor Inbar said she was opposed to the "non-traditional" foster parents policy because it is prejudiced.

"I think that a policy such as this buds from ignorance and homophobia, and it's sad that we have to be labeled and surrounded in myths. We impose straight values on children who only need a warm loving environment which many people of various sexual preferences can provide," Inbar said.

senate review

budget was passed, with monies for political groups and an agreement to find alternative funding for Drum.

One of the biggest surprises for the senate happened in the SGA presidential elections. M. Lynne Murphy was the first progressive candidate in a long time to lose a campus election. The progressive bloc got Dani Burgess re-elected, but Murphy lost to "moderate" Bill Bennett. Bennett won by eight votes initially, but the recount stretched it to 60. Murphy claimed that ballot box fixing by the governmental affairs committee during the recount process cost her the election.

It's Bennett and Burgess, baby. Both have said they can work well together, although a partition has suddenly appeared between their desks.

Murphy, an assistant to Burgess, shares an office with Bennett. Their gibes at each other on the senate floor indicate their differences did not disappear after the election.

A major factor in the new divisions is the progressive bloc's loss of a commanding majority. The progressive machine, which was a microcosm of Chicago politics, has lost a few teeth in its gears. By all counts, the senate is now evenly split between progressives and conservatives.

Upon Paul Wingle's election to speaker on March 13, everyone in the senate said Wingle could succeed where his predecessor Ruddock failed by keeping order during the senate meetings. And in the beginning, order was maintained.

However, after the thrill had run out, it was business as usual: Wingle started pounding his gavel nearly as much as Ruddock had. During the final meeting of the semester, Wingle abandoned the gavel and simply yelled, "Will you all shut the hell up?

Scholarship benefit planned

The University of Massachusetts Financial Aid Office is sponsoring an auction Wednesday to generate funds for a scholarship program.

The Ed Apodaca scholarship "is a program that we started about a year ago," said Arthur Jackson, director of financial aid. "It is awarded on the basis of need to an in-state undergraduate who needs the money to continue their education."

The event will be held in the courtvard of Whitmore Administration Building from noon to 1:30 p.m. and is supported mainly by donations from local merchants and University staff, he said.

Among goods to be auctioned off are gift certificates, donations from alumni and the athletic department and various household items contributed by UMass staff members.

Arthur Hacker, head clerk at the Student Employment Office, said, "The scholarship was originally set up at $1,000. We're trying to increase it to $3,000 to start an endowment, and the auction is just one of the things we've planned to raise money." Other fundraisers include sales of cookbooks and candy.

An added attraction will be guest auctioneer Jack Dennison, dean of the Stockbridge School of Agriculture, whose Yankee humor is well known in the Amherst area, Jackson said.

Donations to the scholarship fund may be made through the University Financial Aid Office.

Who works for whom?

This past semester, I have read articles and editorials from the Collegian staff about discipline, commencement, and now about the area shows that have been at best incomplete, if not questionable.

Over the last four years, the words of the Collegian have evoked a range of emotions. I have been hurt, confused, frustrated, and now, after the Editorial License in the May 8 issue, I am angry.

I am angry because I take this most recent attack very personally. I do so because I assume I am one of the "faceless administrators" mentioned. I want you to know that there is not a student on this campus that I have worked with that would not recognize my face. For anyone else who would like to see it, I work in 319 Whitmore.

Further, every student on this campus needs to know the decisions that are made by individuals within the Student Affairs Division are not made within a vacuum. Experience, education, long range implications for, and impact on the entire student body and campus community play a major role in our decision-making. Nothing we do is secretive or undermining. In fact, everything we do is done with valued and essential student input. I do not know of another campus that encourages, supports, and almost demands student input the way this campus does.

Finally, for the record, let me make it very clear that the members of the Division of Student Affairs are very committed to the work we do. Furthermore, let there be no mistake about who we work for. We work for the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. We do not work for students, nor are we here to "serve" anybody. We are here, however, to work with students to enhance their educational experience while attending the University of Massachusetts.

Learning to appreciate

David Valade

It is not often in life that one gets a second chance. When an opportunity is offered, it must be experienced. After the moment is gone, it is lost forever. All that is left is the memory. This past year I have been fortunate enough to have a second chance. It is something I will always remember and cherish.

In this age of a highly mobile societies, the role of the family has diminished. Instead of the lifelong closeness to brothers and sisters that once existed, most of us move along our own way and keep only memories.

I've been away from home now for almost seven years. Even though my family was only twenty-five or thirty miles away for most of these years, we became further apart as we went our separate ways, followed separate interests. I spent time with my brothers and sisters, but never as much as I had when we lived together. The same closeness was no longer there.

Instead of the lifelong closeness to brothers and sisters that once existed, most of us move along our own way and keep only memories.

This year gave me a second chance to be with my brother and sister. Seven years separate our ages but, for various reasons, we have all found ourselves here at UMass at the same time. It has been good to get to know them away from home. I've learned to see them as more than just a brother and a sister. Being here together has helped us become friends.

Of course, it has not all been fun and games. Some of the same conflicts that plague siblings while growing up followed us here. We all share a car, and sometimes this can be hell. Each of us is involved in long distance relationships. Many weekends have passed where one of us needed the car to go home, one to get away somewhere, and one to just do things in Amherst. Over the past year we have had to learn to compromise in ways never necessary while growing up. There has been no parent to mediate our disputes and to impose a solution when mediation fails. We've learned to work out these problems for ourselves. In doing this, I've found new respect for them.

Perhaps the best thing is having the chance to see how each of us has grown and changed. Spending so much time together has allowed us to know more about each other than dinner conversation at holidays or an occasional phone call ever could. It is amazing to realize that we come from the same roots, but have grown up differently. Even with these differences, we still have much in common.

I look forward to the next few years. Perhaps, sometime, I will get another chance like this. I have another brother and sister still at home and I hope that someday a similar situation arises. Everyone should have this chance.

Jim and Kathy...I love you both. You've helped make my last year here special.

Rape—no happy endings here

Carol Tannenbaum

I love happy endings. I had a very hard time taking American Realism last semester, because in American Realism no one lives happily ever after. That was the reason I had a hard time writing my article on acquaintance rape. Rape stories never have happy endings, but some can end happier than others.

The saddest rape stories are the ones where the person (men are raped, too) does not tell anyone.

Slightly less sad are the stories where the victim tells someone, a close friend, or perhaps a relative. She (can I say she without anyone being offended?) is admitting to herself she has been raped.

Getting to the happier end of the spectrum are the stories where the victim reports the rape and gets counseling. But the best stories are the ones where the victim presses charges, the rapist is convicted, and justice prevails. Unfortunately, this is the rarest.

There are many reasons why this is so. Fear is a predominant one. It takes a very strong person and a lot of courage to be able to take an acquaintance, a friend, a boyfriend, or the boy next door to court.

The point was really driven home after speaking with a victim. I found that one can speak with all sorts of experts, but until you speak with a victim you really cannot understand.

I thought I had my act all together. I write for the Collegian, I'm socially aware. Then I spoke with Karen. For those of you who missed my article, Karen was sexually harrased by her roommate's (now ex)boyfriend who lived, and still lives, in her building. When I finished interviewing her I just felt like crying.

The insensitivity she faced, the disbelief, really made my heart go out to her. She had no idea this man was capable of doing these things. How was she to know? How do I know that I don't know him? Maybe I do. Maybe you do.

She did not press charges for several reasons. I respect her wishes. But it also made me very angry for selfish reasons. Maybe I do know him and I am his next victim. But it does not matter, because if it is not him it could be someone else.

The problem is seeing rape for what it really is. People do not always see acquaintance rape as rape. Some people have problems in "placing all the blame on him." Maybe it is unfair, but once she says "no" whether she kicks, screams, bite, or does nothing, as long as she has made her point clear, it is rape.

Definitions do not bother me as much as attitudes. There are people walking around this campus saying, "She wasn't really raped," or "She asked for it," or "why should I care, it can't happen to me?"

But it can happen to you, or someone close to you. It's the same story of First they came for one group of people and I wasn't one of them, so I didn't do anything. Then the came for the next, and the group after that. By the time they came for me there was no one left to help me.

The only way there can be help is by reporting the crime. Report it to the police, mental health, the Everywoman's Center, the Ombuds office, to an RA, or an RD. Tell someone, anyone; shout it from the rooftops. Until we stand up and start making numbers and bringing this to people's attention, acquaintance rape will continue to happen.

It is true, there is strength in numbers. Unless we band together now and begin to believe one another, you, or I, can be raped. And until rape is considered as tragic and as violent as any other crime, there can be no happy endings.

Seek him

There is every reason to seriously question the validity of God and Christianity. The danger of power manipulation, false doctrines and blind faith has been revealed through the ages. The existence of God cannot be intellectually proven or disproven; there are just as many reasons to believe in God as there are not to believe. We all take "steps of faith" in every belief that we hold: philosophical "truths," scientific theories, etc. We believe in their validity, even though the evidence is not always seen. Yet for all our intellectual and technical advancements, we cannot even create a single blade of grass! Belief in God is anything but a "blind step of faith;" not only is it logical, it is backed by historical proof—the Bible—which is proven by historians to be the most historically sound document written.

In his article, Jeffry Bartash wrote of his concern of mixing religion and politics. True, some political leaders use Bible terminology to support and justify their cause. The millions of hypocritical actions done in the name of God are unjustifiable. However, it is not to these people that we should look. The only example we have is God himself, revealed through Jesus. Do not sit back and let others implant judgments for you. Seek Him out, read the Bible, study it, and question it in every way!

Firefighter Sammy Caison starts a backfire yesterday in an attempt to control a forest fire that has burned out of control in North Carolina for a week.

Crews move to quell forest fire in N.C.

HAMPSTEAD, N.C. (AP) · Firefighters intentionally burned thousands of acres in the path of a week-old forest fire in southeastern North Carolina yesterday, halting the progress of the blaze that has charred 70,000 acres and forced 5,000 people to flee their homes.

"We have broken the head and we hope to have it contained by tomorrow," said Tommy Thompson of the state Division of Forest Resources. "Things look real good" on U.S. 17 and state Route 210. Parts of the highways had been closed because of the unpredictable fire.

The backfire was started at 12:30 p.m., scorching 5,000 to 10,000 acres before colliding with the larger blaze several hours later, leaving it with nothing to burn in what had been its northwestern direction.

"If we had not, we'd probably have a 10,000-acre fire out of control," Thompson said. "There's no doubt in my mind that it would have crossed the Cape Fear River and homes would have been lost."

Fire lines were holding yesterday along the southwest, south and southeast sides of the blaze, said Chrystal Stowe, a spokeswoman for the state Department of Crime Control and Public Safety.

Officials called other states to find tractors able to navigate in the swampy soil of Pender County, Stowe said.

"We're also looking for some relief equipment operators," she said. "What we have found thus far is that South Carolina is sending three tractors and plows to the Sandhills region, to replace their lighter equipment, which they'll take back."

In addition, Georgia was sending a tractor plow and an equipment operator, officials said.

U.S. Highway 17 remained closed 25 miles in Pender County, as was North Carolina Route 210, she said.

About 5,000 people were asked to leave their homes, and while few used evacuation shelters, "when we call for a voluntary evacuation, people leave," she said.

SPRING CONCERT 1986

Paul Desmarais

Paul Desmarais

Thousands of students rocked—and clowned, and played, and relaxed—yesterday to the tunes of the Lone Ryders, James Cotton, Ronnie Laws and Third World, at the annual Union Program Council outdoor concert. University of Massachusetts officials this year decreed stricter controls on alcohol, but campus police reported only one arrest.

Spring Concert '86

Pre-summer weather, and four great bands make UPC's '86 swansong a success

By KELLY SIEGER
and ROB SKELTON
Collegian Staff

Beautiful weather and a good group of bands made this year's spring concert by the pond a memorable experience—the perfect Sunday afternoon excursion, on Mother's Day, no less.

UPC came through for us this year, as they've been known to do, with four diverse yet equally entertaining acts: The Long Ryders, the James Cotton band, the Ronnie Laws group and Third World.

The Long Ryders, who started out, played as people filed in past 5-college ID checks. They consider themselves "at the forefront of the bands putting a sense of integrity and pride back into real American music," according to a press release.

They were a pretty good opening act for an event this size. They show promise in the "contemporary consciousness" category of popular music; they've got some politics, and some groove.

The James Cotton band from Chicago piled on stage and whipped the crowd into an R&B frenzy, and then singer and harmonica player himself Mr. Cotton wailed his way into the soul of the crowd.

This band's ability to reach the audience in spite of its relatively dilapidated equipment deserves mention; in an age of electronic gimmickry and pretentiousness it is heartening to get so much enjoyment from such a straightforward sound arsenal.

Ronnie Laws is a singer/songwriter-hornplayer whose upbeat jam-oriented tunes sustained the crowd's musical momentum as it awaited the headliner.

Third World took a while to come out, but when it started, and William "Rugs" Clarke asked an ecstatic crowd "Are you ready?" the pond population exploded, leading no one to ponder in retrospect if Third World was ready.

The spliffs were fired up and everybody rocked, rolled, danced, and frisbeed to the roots reggae of one of the world's most well-known bands.

There were very few "incidents" to speak of, very little ammunition sacrificed to the concert-extinction forces; the police were well-behaved, and UPC security stood out as it always does.

There could have been more choice in food availability; a fresh fruit stand and more drink dispensers would well have augmented the fried dough and fast food itinerary which, while appreciated, left something to be desired.

Sunsational Fashion show turns out to be an unorganized wait

You all heard about it. Yes, the Sunsational Fashion Show that happened at UMass last Tuesday night. There were posters, flyers, and all kinds of P.R. promoting this thing, even articles in the Collegian, that misquoted the starting time as being at 8 p.m. rather that at the planned time of 7 p.m. The Collegian ran a correction apologizing for the mistake.

Those of you who went to the Campus Center Auditorium at 6:45 p.m. to wait in line, expecting the show to start promptly at 7 p.m., remember standing there, irritated, until the show started at 8 p.m. At first I thought, this is a fashion show, and perhaps they are trying to make a statement by being fashionably late, but when irate ticket-buyers were pounding on the door at 7:45, the whole thing took on a very unfashionable flavor. Production was still taping down wires when everyone had been seated, still ironing out kinks in the video equipment, all the time the slide projector was displaying an upside-down image, while the same two songs were being played over and over to entertain the fidgeting crowd until the show was ready to start. Very fashionable.

Well, after all the waiting, the show wasn't bad, but it's hard to expect a crowd that has just waited an hour or more to be overly receptive. Overall, some nice designs by students in the fashion marketing department. Next year though, start on time, huh?

Sox hold on, drop Oakland, 6-5

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) - Catcher Rich Gedmen went 4-for-4 and Dennis "Oil Can" Boyd and two relievers combined for a seven hitter as the Boston Red Sox survived four Oakland home runs to defeat the A's, 6-5 yesterday.

In winning their fifth-straight game, the Red Sox handed A's pitcher Moose Haas his first loss of the season. Haas, 6-1 on the season, entered the game with a 1.65 earned run average, but surrendered 10 hits and six runs in 8 2/3 innings.

Boyd, 3-3, scattered four hits over seven innings before needing relief work by Bob Stanley and Joe Sambito, who recorded the last out for his third save of the season.

In other baseball action, Oddibe McDowell hit a two-run homer to lead the Texas Rangers over the New York Yankees, 6-3 in the first game of a doubleheader. In New York, the Mets had their seven-game winning streak snapped and saw ace Dwight Gooden knocked out in five innings as the Cincinnati Reds were 3-2 winners.

Player-manager Pete Rose drove in all three Reds runs with a bases-loaded single off of Gooden.

UMass falls at Syracuse . . .

Orange break game open in 4th period

SYRACUSE, N.Y. - The despair over losing to Syracuse on Friday night has quickly disappeared for the now playoff-bound University of Massachusetts lacrosse team.

The second-ranked Orangemen opened the fourth period with four straight goals to snap a 7-7 tie and defeat the Gorillas, 13-8 on Friday night.

"We played a great game against a great team," said UMass coach Dick Garber. "For three periods, we stayed with them, then they got to us."

The Gorillas, 9-4, trailed 2-0 after one period and 6-4 at halftime after a good second quarter. The third period saw UMass outscore their rivals 3-1 and enter the final period conifident they could come away with a win.

But the Orange scored four goals in the first six minutes to run away with the game.

Freshman goaltender Sal LoCascio was tremendous in the UMass net. Making 20 saves, the rookie keeper frequently turned aside Syracuse's one-on-one chances. The Orange entered the game scoring over 15 goals-per-game, and were somewhat kept in check.

SU badly outshot UMass, 43-19 as Orange goalie Jim Gyory made only seven saves. The Orangemen also held a 53-41 groundball advantage. UMass was three-for-nine in extra-man situations, SU was three-for-six.

For UMass, junior midfielder Doug Musco played "the game of his career," according to Garber. He scored three goals to lead the team. Junior attackman Greg Cannella and senior midfielder Greg Fisk scored two goals and one assist. Junior middie Neal Cunningham, a Syracuse native, scored one goal. Senior midfielder Perry Seale had one assist.

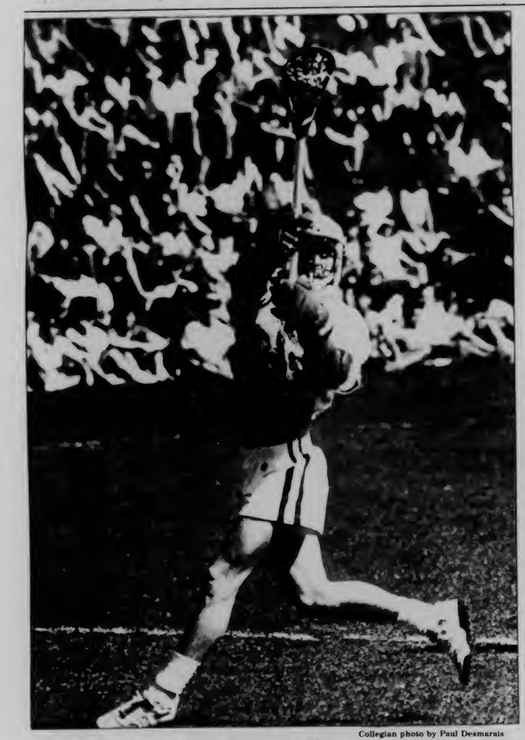
For Syracuse, senior All-American attackman Tom Korrie had four goals and two assists. Senior attackman Tom Nelson, another All-American had two goals and three assists. Senior attackman Gordie Mapes scored three goals and made one assist. USA World Team member Todd Curry scored one goal and handed out three assists. Freshman attackman John Zulberti had two goals and one assist. Junior middie Chris Baduini had one goal while defenseman Mike O'Donnell had an assist.

"Our defense was outstanding," said Garber. "Tom Aldrich did a great job on Zulberti, Matt Woods did a hell of a job and Mike Tomasello ate up Curry. He really played well."

The UMass offense, facing a good Syracuse defense, scored better than they did in their last few games, but didn't take advantage of a two-minute man advantage in the third period.

"When we were tied at seven, I decided to go into a 1-4-1 offense and go for the win," said Garber. "I probably could've gone for a slower pace and stayed closer to them, but I wanted to see if we could beat them, as it turned out we didn't, but I'm proud of the way our guys stuck in there."

Garber also praised his assistant coaches for developing a game-plan that threw the Orangemen off.



"Our changing defenses and movement on offense really paid off," said the coach. "Guy (Van Arsdale) Eric (Kemp) and Kevin (Campbell) really had the team ready."

SU, 13-2, opened the scoring with 1:40 gone in the game as Baduini scored, assisted by O'Donnell. Mapes then took Korrie's feed for a 2-0 lead with 3:27 left in the period.

The second quarter saw Seale score (assisted by Cannella) with 3:35 gone. Fisk then tied it up at two, taking Cannella's feed and beating Gyory.

But Zulberi made it 3-2. Musco then scored on a great unassisted move to tie the game again. Korrie scored twice more, but the 2,000 fans (many of them from UMass) knew it would be a good second half.

Curry (assisted by Nelon) scored and SU led 7-4. Not willing to fold, Musco (assisted by Fisk) and Cannella scored back-to-back goals to make it 7-6.

. . . but still gets playoff bid

draw more people than a game at New Hampshire or tenth-ranked C.W. Post pushed UM into a position as a host team. The Gorillas have averaged 5,000 fans a game this season. UNH, when they played Army on a nice day, drew under 2,000. This is UMass' first trip to the NCAA's since 1981. The Gorillas will be making their fifth appearance since the tourney's inception in 1971. The winner of Wednesday's game will play Sunday afternoon at top-ranked Johns Hopkins.

"This is a great thing for the team and our fans," said UMass coach Dick Garber. "I'm not really surprised because when I looked at the teams in contention, I really didn't think anyone was better than we are."

The game will mark the first time a New England team will host an NCAA playoff game in lacrosse. Only one playoff game has been played on New England soil, last year's national championship game at Brown University between Syracuse and Hopkins.

The other first-round game will see 10th-seeded C.W. Post (11-3) play at seventh-seeded Rutgers (10-3). The winner of that game will face Syracuse (13-2). In the other games, third-ranked Virginia (10-2) will play sixth-ranked Navy (8-3) and fourth-ranked Maryland (10-2) will host fifth-ranked North Carolina (8-3).

"I think we deserve to be in, the team is really excited about the prospect of being in the playoffs," said senior co-captain Tom Aldrich yesterday.

"We had a pretty tough schedule and despite the losses at the end of the season, we're one of the top teams in the nation," the defenseman noted.

If the weather cooperates, students celebrating the last day of classes could swell the crowd into a huge one. Over 8,000 saw UMass play Army at Boyden Field, and for a playoff game the crowd could easily go over 10,000.

One drawback, although it should be a minor one for any true sports fan, is that tickets must be paid for, due to NCAA regulations.

Student tickets will cost $2 and non-students will be admitted for $4. Seating will be probably be general admission and tickets should be available by Tuesday, although that information was not available yesterday.

"I know that I personally and the team really believe the crowd helps us a lot," said Garber. "We're thankful to be playing such an important game at home, because the support of the students is so important."

When UMass and New Hampshire earlier met this season, the Gorillas were an easy 15-7 winner. Scoring almost at will on the Wildcats, UMass opened its home season with a great effort before 5,000 fans.

Since that loss, however, UNH has been on a roll, winning seven straight games to vault into the playoffs. An added sidelight is that the UNH coach is Ted Garber, the son of UMass coach Dick Garber.

"Both teams are familiar with each other, that's for sure," said UM's Garber. "I don't expect such an easy time in this game. They're (UNH) a very good team."

UMass, at 9-4, is a good team, certainly one of the nation's top 10. But the Gorillas have also lost three of their last four games and, outside of New Hampshire, haven't beat a team in the top 10.

"I'm not going to try and figure out how we got in, I'm happy we did," said Aldrich. "It's a new season now, and we're in it. That's all that counts."

How did the Gorillas get in?

How did they get in?

Well, it's like this. The weekly United States Intercollegiate Lacrosse Association Poll, which had UMass 11th and out of the playoffs a week ago (before they lost to Syracuse) doesn't mean anything in terms of what teams make the national tournament.

A panel of coaches and athletic directors familiar with the sport do. Called the NCAA Division 1 Lacrosse Tournament Committee, this body is charged with picking and seeding the 10 teams in the tourney.

The top seven teams in the last USILA poll stayed the same in the tourney seedings. But from there, the committee threw eighth-ranked Loyola College out, and moved UMass in.

New Hampshire (ninth) and C.W. Post (10th) stayed the same. It was just a trade: Loyola for UMass.

The Gorillas' schedule strength, a good early start, coach Dick Garber's 32 years as a coach, UMass' strong lacrosse tradition, and the guarantee of a good crowd at UMass all combined to get the Gorillas a berth.

NCAA softball bids out today

Today's the day for the University of Massachusetts softball team.

The NCAA Division 1 Softball Tournament Committee meets at noon today to decide what 16 teams will make the national tournament.

UMass, at 36-7, is ranked first in the Northeast Region Poll and were winners of Atlantic 10 Conference regular season and tournament championships. But nothing, as is usually the case with the NCAA, is sure.

UMass coach Elaine Sortino, players, athletic administrators and the press have been told a variety of plots. One has UMass in, without a doubt, because they are first in the region.

A second has UMass probably getting in, because the committee usually takes the top team in reach region.

The worst scenario has the committee deciding the 19th-ranked Minutewomen aren't good enough, and putting a team like Oklahoma State into the tourney instead.

Tune in tomorrow for the conclusion.

Union votes remain undecided

A conference at state Labor Relations Commission offices ended yesterday with no decision on whether a second vote will be held to determine if professional employees at the University of Massachusetts will unionize.

A May 1 union election was a draw, with the "no union" option and the Office and Professional Employees International Union the top vote-getters. Neither won a clear majority. 64 ballots cast were challenged, most of them by the commission.

"The challenges were not resolved," commission information officer Diego Alvarado said yesterday. "They [representatives] will try to resolve them as quickly as possible. I'm sure they will meet again tomorrow."

If union and state officials agree, some or all the challenged votes will be added to the totals. If 35 or more support "no union," that option will have won a clear majority. OPEIU has said it will press for a runoff regardless of the outcome.

Alvarado said a decision may be reached by the end of this week.

Permanent fund panels urged

Commission on SATF management makes recommendations

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS
Collegian Staff

The commission formed to review the problems of the Student Activity Trust Fund last week recommended the establishment of two permanent student activities committees, and its co-chairman yesterday said the result is "critical and five years overdue."

Dani Burgess, University of Massachusetts student trustee and co-chairman of the commission, and Katherine Strickland, student government treasurer and a commission member, unveiled the recommendations yesterday to the Collegian.

The commission was charged March 7 by Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey and Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis L. Madson to examine the conflicts of managing the $1.8 million fund, to which each undergraduate pays $88 each year. The Student Government Association allocates SATF money to fund student groups and services.

Trey Williams, special assistant to Madson, said Duffey and Madson will give their final approval of the commission's report Friday afternoon. "He's [Madson] very pleased with it [recommendations]," Williams said.

Constant tussles between students and administrators for control of the fund came to a head last year after Madson and Randy Donant, director of student activities, issued a memo Nov. 19 declaring themselves in control over portions of the money.

Twenty-two students were arrested in two subsequent occupations of Whitmore Administration Building. Administrators cited a $120,000 SGA deficit, which they said was caused by student irresponsibility.

Burgess and Strickland said the most crucial recommendations are to form an SATF Planning Committee and, more importantly, a Student Activities Office Council composed of 12 students, faculty and staff members, which they said will improve communication throughout the process.

"I think that the output that will come about from the two committees will be productive and really benefit a lot of students," Strickland said. "In the long run, it will have an incredible effect."

Burgess, who called the council long overdue, added, "It is a great leap forward for students at the University."

The report states that the council's goal is to "maximize student input in the management of the SATF while adhering to [Board of Trustees] guidelines and policies," and to "facilitate an on-going rapport between the Student Activities Office and student agencies."

Burgess and Strickland said the council may make recommendations and also have input in the development of long-range planning for the SAO by reviewing the office's budget and evaluating the performances of office personnel.

Conduct code still focus of dispute

'Interim restrictions' under fire

By ANDREW WOLFF
Collegian Staff

Student senate speaker Paul Wingle yesterday said the revised Code of Student Conduct grants some administrators "czarist powers" by giving them the authority to restrict students accused of code violations before they have a formal hearing.

But administrators have said that compared to the current code, the changes do exactly the opposite by considerably reducing their power.

"I think it's been reduced markedly," said Dean of Students William F. Field. "Compared to now, it looks a hell of a lot better."

The code, originally drafted in 1967, governs all undergraduate disciplinary procedures. Some of its provisions include guidelines for formal judicial hearings for those accused of violating the code, residence hall regulations and enforcement procedures.

"I think what they're trying to do is unconscionable."
— Student senate speaker Paul Wingle

The revised document, now awaiting approval from the University president's office in Boston before receiving Board of Trustee review, has been updated to include extensive guidelines for picketing University buildings and offices, keeping private all judicial hearings and restricting the movements of students accused of code violations.

It is the "interim restrictions" and provisions for closed hearings that angers students. During the two-year revision process, student leaders have repeatedly charged that administrators seek powers that could violate students' rights.

"I think what they're trying to do is unconscionable," Wingle said. "When people come to campus they should deny their rights as citizens of the United States?"

The code empowers gives the dean of students and executive director of Housing Services to "impose restrictions upon a student pending disciplinary proceedings or health withdrawal."

Wingle said the new restrictions are officials' response to the Yvette Henry case of fall 1983. Henry, a resident assistant, was restricted from campus, suspended and fired from her University job after she was accused of arson. Charges against her were later dropped for lack of evidence.

In May 1984, Henry sued University and law enforcement officials, charging numerous rights violations that included illegal suspension. The twin lawsuits, each asking $6.5 million, were settled in February for an amount the University refuses to disclose.

The interim restriction provisions include:

- Assigning the accused to alternate housing.
- "Limitation of access to designated Unviersity housing facilities and/or other campus facilities by time and location."
- "Restriction of communication" with certain persons or groups on campus.
- "The requirement to secure advance authorization to engage in a specified activity."

Wingle said, "I think there is definite causal linkage" between the Henry case and the new rules.

But Robert Brooks, associate dean of students, called Wingle's statement "inaccurate."

"I would rather people deal with this document as opposed to ancient history," Brooks said.

The code also dictates that disciplinary hearing boards "shall be subject" to closed meetings, and that students accused of violations may not consult legal counsel during hearings.

Wingle said, "This pits the student who is obviously on the defensive against experienced administrators who have had background in cases such as this and are prepared."

Pending approval by the University counsel, William Searson, the revised code will be sent to the Executive Council of the Board of Trustees and then voted on by the entire board, most likely at its June meeting, Wingle said.

Reagan picks new Fed head

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan announced yesterday he was nominating H. Robert Heller, an economist at Bank of America, to a term on the Federal Reserve Board.

The president also announced his intention to elevate Manuel Johnson, currently a board member, to the post of vice chairman of the nation's central bank.

The spot on the board and the vice chairmanship became vacant in April when Preston Martin announced his resignation.

Since 1978, Heller has been senior vice president and director of international economic research at Bank of America in San Francisco. Prior to that time he was chief of the financial studies division at the International Monetary Fund.

Heller had been rumored to be the front-runner for the Fed post after William Gibson, a Dallas bank economist, reportedly turned the job down.

The nominations require Senate approval.

Johnson, formerly assistant Treasury secretary for economic policy, has only been on the board since February. He and Wayne Angell, a Kansas banker and economics professor, were appointed earlier this year, giving President Reagan a four-person majority on the seven-member board.

Amherst resident's literary life catches up with him

What should one do upon discovering, in one's room back home, a long-overdue library book? Perhaps it is a tattered copy of The Cat in the Hat that was borrowed years ago, making any time-related fine attached to it larger than the national debt.

Thomas J. Ferris, 24, of 514 Lincoln Apartments, discovered Saturday what can happen when one does not return such books on time. Police entered his home and discovered 132 books from the Smith College library and about two dozen others from the Jones Library, Amherst College library and Forbes Library in Northampton.

"Our security department had a tip from a UMass student that there were a number of books in the apartment," said Ann Shanahan, the director of public relations at Smith.

Smith security personnel, accompanied by University of Massachusetts police, knocked at Ferris's door and asked him if he had the books. They said Ferris let them in and showed them a book-filled closet.

"He said he was planning to return them," Shanahan said. The officers answered that they would take custody of the books, and "He said okay."

The door to the closet had to be taken off its hinges, because the key could not be found. The books, "most of (which) were classics, some of them are even about ethics," were found in various stages of disrepair, Shanahan said.

"A number of them were damaged, the spines were broken and [magnetic] book plates were ripped off," she said, adding that the value of the books was estimated at "well over $1,000."

Many of the books were checked out of the local libraries and other were allegedly stolen.

Shanahan said Smith College has not decided whether to press charges.

Ferris was also arrested on a warrant for failure to pay motor vehicle fines, said Gerald T. O'Neil, director of public safety at the University of Massachusetts.

"He was arrested, and he paid the [vehicle] fine" yesterday, O'Neil said.

Also, Ferris has reportedly lived in the University-owned apartment illegally since he withdrew from UMass in 1984. He was issued a trespass notice by the University, police said.

Ferris was not listed in the student directory or by New England Telephone and could not be reached for comment.

Chernobyl said to highlight danger of war

By PEDRO M. PEREIRA
Collegian Staff

The Chernobyl power plant fire has raised questions concerning the fate of the world were "nuclear winter" to occur, and a University of Massachusetts professor says the accident further shows nuclear war would be unsurvivable.

"There really is not much chance for survival" after a nuclear war, said anthropologist George Armelagos, who has co-written a report on the effects of nuclear war with Elizabeth Schueler, also an anthropogy professor at UMass.

"Nuclear winter" refers to scientists' predictions that a major exchange of atomic warheads would fill the atmosphere with radioactive debris, making much or all of the Earth cold, dark and uninhabitable.

Armelagos and Schueler have been calculating the radiation effects at Chernobyl, in the Soviet Union, in comparison to those of the bomb dropped on Hiroshima in 1945. One thousand square miles surrounding Chernobyl are now useless for production, which means nuclear winter would be far more devastating, Armelagos said.

Following a nuclear war, he said, biological survival would be possible, but not "human survival" — people would be incapable of adapting to the drastic environmental transformation caused by nuclear fires, radiation and diseases.

"You are not going to have the ground to grow [food]," he said, noting that social support systems would be nonexisting and most medical facilities would be destroyed.

Physicians, writing in the New England Journal of Medicine, have estimated that a 5,000-megaton exchange — about 500,000 times stronger than the Hiroshima bomb — between the United States and the USSR would kill 86 million people and injure 34 million. They also said 60 million Americans would survive.

Armelagos said policymakers and the military are aware of these consequences, "but they don't care."

President Reagan's projection of the "Rambo image," he said, suggests to Americans that "the best will survive [nuclear war]. It's an ultimate aspect of their macho image."

The US government sees the issue "as essentially a military decision," Armelagos said, adding that if Americans are convinced 60 million would survive, they "will think that is good enough."

An accident similar to Chernobyl's in the Western hemisphere, he said, is not inconceivable: "It shows the folly of building those plants near habitation areas."

Band assailed for defacing flag

By PHIL SERAFINO
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts student said that last week he called campus police to the Blue Wall coffee shop during a concert and asked them to remove a United States flag hung upside down with the letters "LSD" painted on it.

The student, Jonathan Kaufman, said he entered the Blue Wall Thursday and saw the defaced flag hanging behind the band Nova Mob, which was performing at a concert sposored by WMUA radio. He said he persuaded an employee to ask the musicians to remove it, but "I believe they told him 'no' in so many words."

Kaufman, business manager of The Minuteman, said he called police "because I have very strong feelings about my country. I'm willing to go to any lengths to protect the flag."

After the band refused to remove the flag, Kaufman said he approached Rich Glaven, a friend of the band. After a brief exchange, Kaufman said Glaven shoved him away from the stage twice before he told Glaven further contact would constitute assault and battery.

Glaven said, "I told him it [the flag] was supposed to be offensive to some people. I pushed him back three or four feet and told him to write a letter to the Collegian."

Glaven claimed he was arrested and charged with assault and battery but was not taken to the police station. However, Kaufman said he did not press charges and does not intend to.

Glaven also said the band members were charged with defacing the flag, which he said was confiscated. Nobody at UMass police headquarters last night would confirm or deny any of his claims.

Route 9 drinking establishment Katina's was the scene of an early morning fire yesterday, as an interior structure blaze began in the rear of the building and spread to the front bar area, according to Hadley Fire Chief Barnard Matula.

The blaze began at 1:25 a.m. and brought in four pumper trucks, 25 volunteers, and took three hours to extinguish, Martula said.

The blaze is under investigation by the Hadley fire marshall.

Knife-wielding visitor reported

An 18-year-old non-student was charged with possession and assault with a dangerous weapon after he allegedly threatened students with a "stiletto-type knife"at 11:08 p.m. Friday in Chadbourne House, University of Massachusetts police said.

A student security guard "pulled the knife away" from the man and he was caught by police running out of the building, police said.

In other police reports:

- A power failure occurred at 11:15 p.m. Friday in the Orchard Hill Residential Area after "a person or persons" broke into the underground power station and cut the wires, police said.
- A man whose cooler was confiscated by police at the spring concert was put into protective custody Sunday after he went to the police station allegedly drunk and demanded the cooler be returned, police said.
- A man was punched in the face and kicked in the stomach at 11:20 p.m. Friday in the Southwest Residential Area and sought treatment on his own, police said.
- Two men were charged with larceny after police found them near the East Experiment Station, which they had entered through an underground tunnel, with various items belonging to the station, at 3:25 a.m. Sunday, police said.
- A 20-year-old resident put his hand through a window at 9:08 p.m. Saturday on the seventh floor of John Adams Tower and received stitches at the UMass infirmary, police said.
- A 29-year-old-man was arrested and charged with possession of marijuana at 6:12 p.m. Sunday at the outdoor concert, police said.

to organize and plan courses of action. We are committed to keeping the level of input as strong and as necessary as it has always been."

Ericson, from the Southwest Residential Area, said, "There isn't going to be one side or the other. Next semester there'll be new people. I'm hoping the new conservative freshman will take over."

Collins, also from Southwest, where he is president of the area government, said neither the progressives nor the conservatives will control the senate next semester.

"The progressives and the conservatives are a small but vocal part of the senate. Most senators are very moderate, and can go in either direction," Collins said, adding that he thinks the number of conservatives in the senate "appears to have peaked."

In addition to Breslin, Ericson and Collins, the list of graduating senators includes former Budgets Committee chairmen Jordan Rosner and Joe Sparks, both of whom are conservative, and former SGA president Stacy Roth, a progressive.

Breslin said neither she nor Ericson "should be considered indispensable," although she said the departure of Collins will hurt the conservative cause.

"I don't think he has gone over to the conservatives. They came over to him. Bill Collins is so emphatically vocal, people just want to be affiliated with him."

Collins said conservatives appear closer to him because he and right-wing senators were all considered "outsiders" when they joined the senate.

Breslin does not see the senate as a representative of the student community. "A large number of students are progressive and see themselves as underrepresented in the senate," she said, predicting this will spur more liberal students to join the body.

All agreed that the senate must be more unified on student interests, but that diversity of opinion in the senate is healthy.

Ericson, a senator since the spring of 1983 and one of the first openly right-wing members of the senate, said, "It is good to have a lots of opinions, but it needs to be cohesive, to have a direction."

Summing up her SGA experience, Breslin said, "I think student government provides a forum for spewsters to serve their egos first, and, secondly to serve students."

★ Trust fund commission recommends two committees

"There was no forum for which to sit down and say 'these are our concerns,'" Strickland said. "It was basically that one person had to take the initiative and the other person didn't."

Burgess said the SAO council should begin its work as soon as the chair is ready — possibly June 1 — because of the importance of managing the trust fund.

Bob Jenal, the other co-chairman who is the former SAO business manager and now works for the University's budget office, said the commission's weekly meetings since March were productive.

"I think it was a very focused committee. Everybody stuck to the task at hand," Jenal said. "Now there will be less gray areas to dispute."

Departure of an editor

John Nolan

Anyone knowing anything about UMass sports knows that the reign of Peter Abraham, Collegian sports editor, is coming to a close.

A lot of athletes and students who have followed Abraham's two-year career as editor will be glad to see him go. To those critics, Abraham has been at the root of a prejudicial, narrow-minded, arrogant sports department that covers only what it considers important. The controversial Abraham has always hogged the most popular sports events on campus.

"Who covers football, basketball and the men's lacrosse team?" Abraham does.

"Who gets the most space and grabs all the glory?" Abraham does.

Abraham is in a powerful position--printing and withholding stories and results as he sees fit. Knowing that this power is within his control, his enemies have sworn at all that he embodies. They say that things should be different on the sports page, that Abraham should cover the successful women's teams with more gusto than he does.

"Hell, he doesn't cover women's sports, others do," they say.

"His staff does the work; he gets the dues," they say.

Yes, Peter Abraham, the selfish, hypocritical gloryhound will be gone in two weeks and someone else will finally replace him. Thank God.

What his critics do not know and understand is that holding the position of sports editor is not the beauty pageant that many people envision. Abraham walks on no red carpet and has never been given stories on a platter.

Abraham became the editor in the fall of 1984 and inherited the driver's seat of a page that had traditionally gained little credibility with this school's athletic department. He quickly transformed the staff's instability into a solid, respected Collegian department that has made great strides in gaining the necessary trust of the athletic department.

Abraham has been on the sports staff over the last two years. Aside from covering the more demanding "glory" sports on campus, he has had the unenviable task of trying to decide which stories and teams merit the most coverage. He has had to learn to say no in the face of others for the sake of a more professionally handled sports page. Stories have been cut, stories have been edited, but such actions have been done to improve the quality and not quantity of the page.

In addition, Abraham must cope with the tediousness of laying out as attractive a page as possible to the best of his abilities. He has travelled with teams, written game stories for the wire services and for other papers. He has followed the headline acts and recorded their performances without reward. Few people could handle the day-to-day pressures the sports editor must deal with and Abraham has handled the pressure admirably.

I do not need to harp on anyone's talents or drawbacks when I've got other things to do. But in two weeks an irreplaceable member of the sports staff will leave for parts unknown. His leadership and professionalism will be sorely missed. Like it or not, Abraham has single-handedly built the sports staff up to where it is and has expected and gotten little in return.

Soon his name will be gone from the Collegian pages, the sports staff will have another editor and the page will continue to grow, thanks to him.

John Nolan is the Collegian staff member with the unenviable task of trying to fill Abraham's boots next year.

An administrator is less than pleased...

The editorial on Commencement expressing the collective opinion of the Board of Editors does a terrible disservice to this academic community and especially to graduating seniors.

The "crackdown" on drinking has nothing to do with news reports of rowdiness causing administrators to twitch. There were no such news stories. The revision of Commencement exercises is occuring because of the letters of outrage received last year from parents who were embarrassed to bring relatives to the stadium; from seniors who condemned the administration for not doing something about alcohol at their commencement; from seniors who wrote to apologize for the conduct of some of their classmates and asked not to be judged by their behavior; from faculty who said they did not want to be a part of debaucherie masquerading as an academic event; from staff who had volunteered as marshals because they thought it was an important occasion but would no longer participate because of the verbal abuse and harassment to which they were subjected on the field.

The revision of Commencement began last summer long before Governor Dukakis was asked to be the speaker.

If the editors had done their homework, they would have known that for several years each communication to graduating seniors (letters, pamphlets, and ads in the Collegian) has emphasized the no alcohol policy in the stadium, all to no avail.

Students served on the task force to improve Commencement this year. The Student Affairs Office met with student leaders on the subject. The fact is that the visual search is a last resort. No one wants to believe that men and women who have spent four years here studying the great ideas of civilization would want to celebrate their achievements by acting as philistines in front of their families, friends and their mentors.

The Collegian editors believe that "Whitmore" is "neurotic" because of the above concerns. In fact, Commencement is not "Whitmore's Day;" it is a day to salute academic achievement, a day in which families can rejoice, and a day in which seniors can celebrate the culmination of four years of rigorous study.

There really should not be a problem with alcohol at graduation. It's a sorry note that it even has to be brought up. Wouldn't it have been more rational for the Collegian savants to have urged everyone to leave their bottles at home so that in future years even a visible search would be unnecessary. Commencement is a part of the academic year just as labs, lectures and hour exams, albeit a more joyous academic event.

While the editorial represents the majority opinion of the Collegian Board of Editors, I doubt that it represents the views of seniors, their families, or the University's academic community.

...but student leader praises editorial policy

I am writing in response to Trey Williams' letter that appeared on May 12. Williams is an assistant to Vice-Chancellor Madson, and in his letter he informed us that he has become "angry" after reading the "Editorial License" of May 8. Speaking for myself and many other student leaders, we found "Editorial License" one of the best things ever published in the Collegian. It accurately describes the status quo on this campus. "Editorial License" concluded with this statement: "They (the administration) have long been given a free hand to do anything they please with virtually no accountability to the people they are here to serve—the students."

It seems strange that Williams feels "personally attacked" by the term "faceless administrators." Yet, he claims to answer to the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, a faceless entity if ever there was one. I am amazed that Williams has not yet been informed that he is a public servant. He should have realized when he was hired that he is here to serve the students at UMass.

Spouting bureaucratic rhetoric, Williams goes on to say that "everything we do is done with valued and essential student input." Surely, he must be joking. How much did they value the student input into the Residential Areas Alcoholic Beverage Policy that students have been living under for the past two semesters? As a student leader who was involved, I assure you that this overly restrictive policy was formulated wholly by administrators who disregarded input from students. Where was the student input into the November 19 decree handed down by Randy Donant and Dennis Madson, through which they hoped to assume control of the Student Activities Trust Fund? This decree sparked widespread student protest that ended in the arrest of 23 students after Madson refused to speak to certain student leaders. Why did the students have to protest to have input? How much credibility is there to Trey Williams' letter?

"Editorial License" recognized the harassment that the Southwest Area Government received during Southwest Week. It is obvious that the police enforcement at the Southwest Concert, inconsistent with their actions at other concerts, was an attempt to defame the Southwest events as part of a plan to phase-out the Southwest Week and Concert tradition.

Williams stated that he has been "hurt, confused, frustrated" and is now "angry." I ask him to imagine how hurt, frustrated, angry, and disillusioned the students have become with the dubious actions of this administration. I would also like to make it very clear that if the administration plans to continue tightening its grip in the coming years, it can expect to meet the most organized and powerful resistance yet.

A final farewell

Rusty Denton

Here I am, stationed at my lookout, waiting for the old, white dinosaur to pull into the parking lot and haul my room away. Having spent last night packing up, stashing everything objectionable in a trunk which conveniently has only one key, now I have to kill some time. Man, even the civility class was more exciting than waiting. This waiting will dull my keen, razor-sharp mind, honed by the daily grind of pumping out C's for mediocre TA's. If I were any more excited by my studies, I would be a quivering, panting mass of nerves. No danger of that happening any time soon. Aha! Here they come. Boy, that car looks more like a corpse every time I see it.

"Richard! Richarrrrrd! We're here!" she shrills. I'm only ten feet away; I wonder how Ma missed me. Maybe it was the two days of beard. Maybe it was the residual glazed look from my last party. Maybe she was hoping it wasn't me.

Pop gets out of the driver's seat. I wonder if I inherited my chronic boredom from him. I see another body emerging from the car: it's the goober in all his dubious glory. Brothers like him should be found only in literature, not in flesh and blood.

I have never figured out why the whole family has to go tramping about as a foursome. I can't even pick up a suitcase without three pairs of hands trying to help it get out to the car: "Turn it sideways, Richard, or it won't go through the door." "You'll have to lift it to get past the bed." "Richie, are you sure that won't open and spill?" Chill out—it's just a lousy suitcase!

The goober sticks his pimply face in the door. "Man, this place is gross. And the bathroom stinks!"

"You didn't have to come, sweathog," I retort.

"Now, Richard," Ma interjects, "he got along fine while you were away. Don't start in on him." I have only just begun, Ma.

"Richard, did you wash the sheets before you packed them?"

"I didn't have time, Ma. I had to study for finals." There will be a better time to show her my six weeks of dirty laundry.

My pretty neighbor looks in. "Leaving, Rich?"

"Yeah. Give me a call in a couple of weeks. Maybe we can get a party together." Suddenly, Ma is all eyes and ears; it's embarrassing. As soon as my neighbor goes down the stairs, Ma is at it.

"What a nice looking girl! Is she a friend of yours, Richard? How do you two know each other? Do you want to invite her over?"

"What's with the third degree? Can't I have a female friend without wedding bells?"

"Don't get excited, Richard. We just like to meet your friends." I doubt that. My friends are party animals, not marriage material.

The car is almost packed; only the trunk is left in the room. I smile thinly at the goober. He gives me his best innocent look.

"Gee, Richie, what's in here? See, Ma, this one is locked." It's not one of those locks with a universal Samsonite key, either, sweathog. No way you're getting into that one.

Ma is curious now. "What's in there, Richard?"

"Just some personal letters and stuff. I don't want just anybody reading my mail and papers," I say, looking at the goober. Ma will lay off if she thinks Pandora's box is full of love notes.

"Sounds funny," says the goober, shaking it.

"Leave it alone, Edward," says Ma with a little half-smile. "Richard has a right to his privacy." Score one for me, goober.

The room is empty, the car is full, and I'm in the back seat, trying to fend off the goober, who has a Rasputin smile spreading across his loathsome features.

"You boss says you can start the summer job any time now," Pop intones. I could just cry. I'm going to miss this place. I wonder if it's too late to sell them on a summer course at UMass...

Rusty Denton will continue to be a Collegian columnist in the fall.

This nation was conceived in liberty and dedicated to the principle — among others — that honest men may honestly disagree; that if they all say what they think, a majority of the people will be able to distinguish truth from error; that in the competition of the marketplace of ideas, the sounder ideas will in the long run win out.

Williams named CCEBMS scholar

Twenty-one-year old senior, Christopher R. Williams, will graduate with honors in the department of Social Thought and Political Economy.

For his outstanding academic performance Williams has been named Collegiate Committee for the Education of Black and other Minority Students scholar for 1986. He received a plaque and an award of $500.00. Williams said he hopes to use this award to assist him in his law school expenses.

Williams, delivering the valedictory speech at CCEMBS family day recently, emphasized the plight of Black students. "They [blacks] have a legacy to themselves and to their community, because they have a crucial role in the shaping of the world and to humanity."

Last summer Williams received a scholarship for Oxford University in England where he studied Comparative Law and Literature. He also received the CCEMBS scholarly achievement award and the CCEMBS First Honors Award. This year he retained the CCEBMS scholarly achievement award.

In April he was inducted into the Golden Key National Honors Society, a national honor society for outstanding juniors and seniors. Williams is a contributing writer for Black Affairs.

Williams will be entering the University of Michigan Law School in the fall.

We, the undersigned students, staff, faculty and administrators of the University of Massachusetts strongly disagree with the anti-gay remarks made by Paul Cameron on April 11, 1986. We support individual rights of expression, but cannot support self-expression that encourages hatred and harassment of any individual or group of people.

Cameron's remarks were clearly intended to devalue gay men and lesbians and to polarize the community by intensifying fear. The resulting increase in verbal and physical harassment of gay men and lesbians attests to the destructive effects of his message.

We believe that "an injury to one is an injury to all". The support of gay and lesbian rights is the support of human rights.

ARTS

Amherst Cinema offers variety but the glowing clock stays

Cinema Profile

By THOMAS HARRINGTON
Collegian Staff

Besides being the most convenient theater for UMass, Amherst College and Hampshire College residents, the Amherst Cinema on 30 Amity St. provides the most varies repertory of films in the Amherst/Northampton area.

Early week, the theater showcases two new double features, usually connected by a theme, but the themes are different each week. A Humphrey Bogart double feature will be followed by two films by Japanese film director Akira Kurasawa, which could be followed by some Bill Murray comedies.

"I don't think this format could work in most areas," said manager Judy Cole, "but because there's about 30,000 students in the immediate area, we always have a new audience interested in seeing different kinds of films.

The repertory format was first adopted eight years ago, when the cinema, then a "second-run" house showing major films near the end of their distribution, was trying to find a way to compete with the more popular multi-cinema complexes that were emerging.

"Mike Romanowski, the manager then, just asked people what they really wanted to see," said Cole. "since then, so long as we've worked hard on scheduling the right films, we've done well."

Cole describes the scheduling process as "sitting down and making a list of every film you've ever wanted to show. Then, from that 'wish list' you eliminate the ones that you know aren't available and try to arrange the rest into good double features."

The chosen films are then booked by the Western Mass theater chain, which owns the cinema.

"It takes a lot of effort to get such a wide variety of films," said treasurer Marlene Goldstein. "Our film bookers are in Boston, but most of the older films shown in the theater have to be obtained from the Classics departments of distributors like MGM and Universal, which are located in California. Often, there's only two prints available in the whole country, and we have to rearrange our schedule in order to show the film at all."

Much of the format is taken up by favorites such as Casablanca and The Wizard of Oz which play every year. "About half of our films come back at least once," said Cole, "and we try to schedule them at a regular time. Diva is always played in the fall, and Harold and Maude and King of Hearts always play in the spring.

"Of course, we also have surprises. Compromising Positions was an unexpected hit for us last fall, and we also got a good crowd by showing Igmar Bergman's The Magic Flute for Christmas, which is usually not a good time for us."

The Amherst Cinema has also had its second successful science fiction marathon in February, and Cole says it will be repeated next year.

The cinema was built on the site of a former livery. Cole does not know the exact date but says "It's been here since at least 1926, which was the date on the fuse box we replaced last year. We've yet to replace the projectors."

In recent years, the theater was made over extensively, with new wall paint, carpeting and bathrooms. Cole hopes to see more work on the screen and seats in the near future.

Incidentally, the glow in the dark "Amherst Savings" clock on the theater wall is not coming down. "It's been there for fifteen years," says Cole. "We've grown rather possessive of it."

On Strike Against God: A 'lesbian love story' for everyone to read

By BECKY LOCKWOOD
Collegian Correspondent

On Strike Against God
Joanna Russ
The Crossing Press Feminist Series
107 pages, $6.95

Joanna Russ, author of On Strike Against God, is a woman proud of her identity. She is a spirited, able to criticize the patriarchal system that entraps her with a refreshing sense of humor and sarcasm.

Her novel is identified on the cover as a "Lesbian Love Story," and is a description of the "coming out" of Russ' main character. Esther is an English professor and published critic in a department where her success and feminist views are not well-received. Esther is despondent of male company and submissive women and seeks comfort from her best friend, Jeanne. Much to Esther's surprise, she falls in love with Jeanne and discovers that Jeanne is receptive to her own feelings. After an initial admission of love, both women go through periods of denial and separation. In the process of accepting her love for Jeanne, Esther's assertiveness and feminist views are strengthened. Ultimately, despite lost friends and time, Esther and Jeanne again become lovers and with each other's support, openly challenge their male-dominated worlds.

On Strike Against God is a funny and perceptive novel. It is enjoyable reading even though the chronology of the story is difficult to follow at times. The novel is written in a first person stream-of-consciousness style that had both advantages and disadvantages.

Among the advantages is a clear understanding of Esther. The free-flowing style creates an illusion of sometimes actually being Esther, or at least speaking with her. Because of this, it is easy to understand her disgust with men, for example the therapist who tries to convince her that feminist views are a form of penis envy, or "Carl Muchomacho" with whom she is set up on a date. The major disadvantage with Russ' style is its lack of a clear chronology of events. Because the narrator is "Esther thinking," she often intersperses her narration of contemporary events with stories of past happenings, imaginary histories of people with whom she's out of touch, or pure fantasies about Jeanne. This form of narration is confusing because the timing and the reality of Esther's situation changes from one paragraph to the next.

In terms of movement, this is not a novel for action-oriented readers. Most of the "action" takes place in Esther's head. This is a novel of changing ideas and philosophy and these changes often do not involve the physical environment or location of the characters. What is important in On Strike Against God are the conversations in which Esther and her lover learn to empower themselves in a world they are not, as women, supposed to have any power.

In some ways, Esther is a perfect feminist; she always has an answer; always defends her views (even before multitudes of sex-starved chauvinists); always has a literary quote or metaphor that perfectly illustrates her point. Because she is so strong and "politically correct" however, her arguments sometimes lack the sincerity and spontaneity that make a character seem real.

Both Esther and Jeanne are very admirable women. Their love story is a tale of empowerment and as such, is of interest top anyone who has felt helpless and without support. On Strike Against God gives the reader insight into a different perspective. Esther and Jeanne's funny and warped methods of attacking patriarchy are worthwhile reading and may even give someone a few good ideas for their own struggle.

Baseball in finale today

In many ways, it has been a frustrating season for the University of Massachusetts baseball team. In other ways, because ?en made, it has been an inspirational one

But whatever the feeling, it will all be behind them tonight, after a doubleheader at playoff-bound Providence College (24-21) today at 2 p.m.

UMass junior outfielder Matt Sheran rides a 26-game hitting streak into today's games. Jay Zerner comes in leading the team in batting at .400. Steve Allen leads the club with seven homers. Jeff Cimini has 32 RBI's while Zerner has driven in 30 runs.

Softball's in; Northwestern for 1st round

By ROGER CHAPMAN
Collegian Staff

The waiting game is over for the University of Massachusetts softball team.

The question of whether or not the Minutewomen would receive a bid to the NCAA Division I national tournament was answered yesterday, as UMass qualified for the sixteen-team field. The Minutewomen will also host the first round of the tourney, as eighth-ranked Northwestern University visits Totman (NOPE) Field in a double-elimination, best-of-three series.

The first game will be played Friday afternoon at 4 p.m., with a doubleheader scheduled for Saturday, if necessary. Those games are slated for a 1 p.m. and 3 p.m. start. The winner goes to the softball World Series held at Creighton University in Omaha, Nebraska.

Because this is an NCAA tournament, admission will be charged at the game. Admission will be two dollars for students and three dollars for non-students, a small price to pay to watch two of the nation's best go at each other.

"It's like a fantasy come true. We are all thrilled to death," head coach Elaine Sortino said. "It's a great honor for us, not only to be in the tournament, but to also host the first round and have highly ranked team here."

There existed much speculation that UMass would not get a bid into the tournament because the Minutewomen were not ranked as one of the top sixteen teams in the nation. However, as the top seed in the Northeast region, UMass had tradition on its side. In the past, the top finisher in each region of the country received a bid to the tourney.

In addition, the 36-7 record the Minutewomen posted during the season was the fourth best record in the nation in terms of winning percentage. These factors, along with regular season and tournament Atlantic 10 championships, had to be heavily considered by the NCAA tournament selection committee.

"There was never a doubt in my mind that we would be here," Sortino said. "It's been a long haul for us. We've hung on to the number one ranking in the Northeast since March 25 and I think it's nice that fact was recognized. This is what they've been waiting for."

The bottom line is, while it may seem that an injustice was done to a team that may have been ranked ahead of UMass nationally, the better team was accepted, fair and square. Forget national rankings. The Minutewomen are the best in the East and belong in the national tournament.

"If you ask anybody who would be the last team selected in the tourney, there would be no doubt that we would be that team," Sortino said. "That's what everybody thinks and I think it will work to our adavntage."

There do not exist any seedings in the tourney itself, but it's fairly clear who the favorites are. Top ranked Cal.St. Fullerton (50-9 on the year) should be considered the team to beat in the tourney, although several teams, including second-ranked Texas A&M (35-11) and third-ranked Louisiana Tech (43-9), are in the hunt for the national championship.

It will be Garber vs. Garber on Wednesday at Boyden Field as New Hampshire's Ted (left) faces his father Dick, the UMass coach.

Gorillas will face UNH at Boyden

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

Tomorrow, 4 p.m., Boyden Field. Be There.

The University of Massachusetts lacrosse team will host the University of New Hampshire in the first Division 1 playoff game between two New England teams, Wednesday afternoon at Boyden.

A conference call yesterday at 12:45 p.m. between representatives from both schools and James Grube, the secretary-rules editor of the NCAA Division 1 Lacrosse Committee decided upon Boyden as the sight for the game, not McGuirk Alumni Stadium, where many thought the game would be held.

The NCAA did rule however that anyone over the age of 12, including students, must pay $4 for a ticket to the game, not $2 as expected.

NCAA regulations call for all spectators to purchase tickets. The money goes to pay expenses for the game and to the teams. UMass students normally get into athletic events for free throught payment of an activity fee, but this is a special event.

"I'm pretty pleased that the game is at Boyden," said UMass coach Dick Garber. "We've had good crowds there all season so I hope the fans come out for this game, it's our biggest in four years because it's the playoffs. I hope the price doesn't keep too many fans away, because it will be a hell of a game and we need the support."

The game, with little doubt, will be the most important athletic event any current UMass student will have the chance to see. The price, hopefully, will not keep the crowd down.

Consider this. Students at Syracuse pay $6 to see a regular-season lacrosse game. Want to go see a basketball game at a Big East school? Expect to pay $10. A football game at Penn State? Try $15 and you need a season ticket.

This is the Big Time, UMass. The National Collegiate Athletic Association Division 1 Men's Lacrosse Championship. That's why it costs $4. This is the chance for the school to prove, once and for all, that it is a good sports school. A big crowd at this game will be remembered for a long time by a lot of people.

Four bucks. Big deal. 16 quarters. If you're lucky, two loads of wash. Don't let the money keep you from going to the game. Beg, borrow or steal the steal the cash, but go. This is the chance for UMass to look good and the Gorillas appreciate the support.

Coach Garber decided yesterday to buy an ad in the Collegian Wednesday to thank all the fans for attending the game. Name other coaches or teams that do that. You can't. The man and his team want you there. You, face it, want to be there (if you've read this far, chances are you're a lacrosse fan). Again, just $4. You've spent that much (or more) on worst things than this.

Lacrosse is a unique sport at UMass. It's our one major spectator sport that suceeds on the national level. Keep it that way. Go to the game.

Lacrosse tournament notebook

It'll be Garber vs. Garber, again

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

Ted Garber is still smarting from his dad's last beating.

The University of Massachusetts lacrosse team, with Dick Garber at the helm, gave the University of New Hampshire (and Garber's son, Ted, the Wildcat coach) the lax version of a good spanking, 15-7 when the teams last met.

Since then, however, UNH has not lost a game. The Wildcats have run off seven straight wins by an average margin of 7.4 goals-per-game. They have outscored opponents 98-46 in that span.

Since beating UNH, the Garber's Gorillas have gone 6-3, including losing three of their last four games. UNH beat Army, a team UMass lost to. The Wildcats also easily defeated St. John's, Harvard and Dartmouth, three teams UMass looked sluggish against offensively.

The stage is set, it seems, for an excellent game.

Gorilla Grumblings: Junior defenseman John Jordan will miss the UNH game with a deep bone bruise. The injury, suffered against Harvard, has kept the hard-hitting junior-college transfer out of the last four games.

Fellow juco defenseman Chris Knapp, who has missed all but the first three games of the season with a severe knee injury, is appealing to the NCAA to have this season count as a redshirt. A favorable ruling would give Knapp two more years at UMass.

Finally, senior co-captain Tom Aldrich (also a defenseman) has been listed as questionable with his nagging back injury. Aldrich, however, will probably start and go as long as possible.

The UMass defense, with all these injuries, has still allowed only 7.2 goals-per-game. They allowed 11.6 goals last season. Also consider that All-New England selection Mark Stratton would've been on the team as a senior defenseman, had he not flunked out of school.

C.W. Post and New Hampshire will be in the tournament for the first time in its 15-year history. UMass and Rutgers have been in five times, Syracuse seven times, North Carolina nine times, Virginia 12 times, Navy and Maryland 13 times and Johns Hopkins all 15 times. 22 teams in 15 years have qualified for the Division 1 tourney.

Health hazard feared in fire's aftermath

By STUART GAMBLE
Collegian Correspondent

Angered by the University's apparent delay in assessing the dangers from a March 23 fire in Stockbridge Hall, 50 students, faculty and staff members who use the building have signed a petition citing potential health hazards.

The petition, recently circulated in the building, says substances at the site of the fire could form dangerous pesticide-like compounds when "cooked" at 400 to 1,000 degrees Fahrenheit.

The petition also states that people using the building "have been reporting suffering from headaches, loss of voice, hoarseness and coughing spells," and that they have not been told the results of tests for toxic materials.

It notes that graduate student Ronald Lavigne, whose laboratory was destroyed by the fire, said the fire may have produced highly toxic dioxins.

The blaze, which left an estimated $10,000 damage, was caused by a malfunction in an oven used to test soil samples, said Rick Mears, a fire inspector for the Environmental Health and Safety department, which is responsible for removing health hazards.

Donald A. Robinson, EHS staff administrator, conceded that equipment salvaged from the fire placed in the corridor still had an odor 10 days later, but said his department has done its best.

He said the hazards are still difficult to determine and that he referred the complaints to University Health Services.

Lavigne, who signed the petition, Monday said EHS personnel responded well in cleaning up after the fire, but that a more thorough approach should have been taken.

"The most intelligent thing to do would be to hire a professional fire-cleaning team to clean up," Lavigne said. "We learned later that the Physical Plant wouldn't use outside experts because they lacked equipment."

No one from the Physical Plant department could be reached late yesterday to comment on the cleanup.

John Snyders, a student employee who works in Stockbridge Hall, said, "I had a sore throat and cold after it [fire]. I didn't think of it [connection] until somebody mentioned it."

Suicide victim's brother charges harassment

By DANIEL SOBEL
Collegian Staff

A Hampshire College student, whose brother last month killed himself at the college on closed-circuit television, Monday said he and his family are being harassed by college officials who are trying to get rid of him for "political reasons."

Stephen Hermann, a senior art student, said that acting dean of students Sue Alexander requested a meeting with him and his mother May 2 to "determine if I was fit to stay on campus.

"If I had gone to the meeting, I would have been thrown out. That's typical procedure," Hermann said.

Women's center gains more space

By LINA PANAGOPOULOU
Collegian Staff

Three programs run by the Everywoman's Center will move to a new location, easing the center's space problems but dividing one of the programs.

Nelson House, at 513 East Pleasant Street near Fraternity-Sorority Park, will house a program to combat violence against women, the Third World women's advisor/gay rights advocate and the Working Women's Program. "It is vital that we have the support of [the Office of] Student Affairs in this move," said Charlotte Haines, assistant to the director of the center. "The remaining programs serve a lot of students, so it is necessary to have them closer to campus.

Aquila Ayana, the center's public relations director, said, "The best situation is to be relocated in one building with adequate environment, differentiated and confidential space," "Nelson House does not really solve the problem. We look at it as a temporary solution." She said space in Goodell Library is another option the center is considering for the future.

The center's antiviolence program will be split by the move, with one counselor moving to Nelson House, and another remaining in Wilder Hall.

The new house will eliminate overcrowdness and lack of privacy but accessibility for persons with disabilities is still a problem. "There is a work order for a ramp; at this point we try to enlist Student Affairs to buck up with the money," Ayana said.

Another problem the new location faces is that the Orchard Hill bus does not run all year around, according to Ayana.

The programs will move next Tuesday.

Affirmative action posts filled

Student government office had been vacant for months

By CAROL TANNENBAUM
Collegian Staff

After a months-long vacancy, the affirmative action office of the Undergraduate Student Senate has been filled.

Lisa Bernard and Dunstan Brooks, both juniors, were appointed to head the office two weeks ago.

Bernard said she and Brooks have had a harder job than past officers, because "there has not been a transition. The problem is there is no acting officer."

Brooks said their job includes "strictly enforcing" student government and UMass affirmative action policies.

Both expressed a desire to acquaint themselves with the registered student organizations and offices which serve disadvantaged groups and "find out what they'd like to see from us," Bernard said.

Lisa Bernard, right, and Dunstan Brooks will head the affirmative action office of the Undergraduate Student Senate next semester.

"Any RSO that pays out of, or gets funded from, the Student Activity Trust Fund has to tell the affirmative action office" when it is hiring, she said. These groups have to submit reports about their search committees and screening processes.

The pair is planning on giving presentations to the first meeting of search committees that are formed. This would give them an idea of affirmative action and the benefit of it, Brooks said.

Brooks, an Afro-American studies major, is a transfer student from Cape Cod Community College. He has worked for the Student Center for Educational Reasearch and Advocacy for one year, and has been a student senator for three weeks.

Bernard also transferred to UMass, from the University of California at Los Angeles. She majors in zoology with a women's studies minor. She has been a commuter area senator for one year.

"Lisa and I get along well," Brooks said. "I see myself as more of the quiet, controlled [one], and Lisa is more outgoing and outspoken. It's a good mix."

He said the job is sometimes made difficult by people who try to play the two officers against each other.

But Bernard said, "We've gotten a lot of support from some people and some people don't see it as necessary."

UN: War could cause mass famine

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) - An all-out nuclear war would kill about four billion people, four-fifths of the world's population, primarily through starvation brought about by radical changes in the environment, a United Nations officials predicted yesterday.

Sir Frederick Warner, citing a new UN report gauging the effect of a total nuclear war on food production, said, "One of the alarming results of this report is that the big powers can no longer say that nuclear was is their concern alone, and that they will fight it our if they want."

Sir Frederick, a chemical engineer by training, chaired the panel which produced the 800-page report issued March 15. He spoke at a news conference after briefing the UN Environment Program, based in Nairobi, on the research. "People think of the dreadful sights in Hiroshima when they picture nuclear bombs. Hiroshima is not the pattern to think about. It's the starvation of Ethiopia on a massive scale," said Sir Frederick, a 76-year-old Briton.

The explosion of the entire nuclear arsenal would release into the atmosphere about 180,000 tons of black smoke that would block the sun's rays and lower temperatures on earth, Sir Frederick said. The result would be cold summers, changed rainfall patterns and drought.

Gain for nuke-test victims

WASHINGTON (AP) - The House voted unanimously yesterday for a bill that would allow individuals exposed to US atomic weapons tests to sue the US government for injuries from radiation exposure.

The bill, which went to the Senate on a voice vote, would provide victims a legal remedy that was lost last year, when Congress ended the right to sue contractors who conducted the tests.

The change was made on request of the contractors, sponsors said. Until then, the government had assumed financial responsibility because it reimbursed contractors for any judgments against them,

Last year's legislation effectively left those exposed to radiation from the tests without a legal remedy. The only avenue open was the Federal Tort Claims Act, which contained enough exceptions to effectively absolve the government from liability for the testing program.

The new legislation would make the United States the sole defendant in the atomic radiation cases, while limiting court defenses to those that would have been available to the contractors.

Soviet Union says disaster was averted at Chernobyl

MOSCOW (AP) - Soviet officials said yesterday that the white-hot Chernobyl reactor core nearly burned into the ground last week, but catastrophe was averted, and radiation from the stricken plant now has nearly ceased.

The reactor is being sealed in concrete to shut off radiation. Ivan Yemelyanov, deputy director of the oranization that designed it, said the reactor will remain encased for centuries while the radioactive core decays.

The scientist confirmed reports that the 1,000-megawatt reactor had no containment structure of the type used in Western countries to prevent radiation leaks in case of an accident.

So far, the Soviet Union has reported at least six people killed and about 200 injured as a result of the explosion and fire April 26 in the No. 4 reactor of the Ukrainian nuclear power plant 80 miles north of Kiev.

'Like it or not, this is a recording ...'

By JEANETTE DeFORGE
Collegian Staff

Reporters make many phone calls during the course of a day, and often encounter the dreaded answering machine while seeking an interview on deadline.

Below is a sampling of the messages some campus leaders record for callers, some of which almost make one happy the owner is out.

Jim Neill, program director for WMUA radio, was expectedly musical in his message: His machine begins with a harmonica solo, then Neill singing to a blues tune, "Well you called us up but we was not home, so we left the machine here to answer the phone. Leave your message at the sound of the tone and we'll call you up when we find our way home."

Undergraduate student senator M. Lynne Murphy's recording was less creative but instructional: "Hello, this is Lynne Murphy, please do not hang up. You've reached my answering machine. All calls to this number are fielded through the answering machine. If I'm in, I will answer the machine during your message and our conversation will be recorded ..."

Southwest Area Government president Bill Collins' machine plays the theme from Felix the Cat: "Whenever he gets in a fix, he reaches into his bag of tricks."

Some owners, like residential assistant Jeffery Katz, even apologize for their machines: "Hi this is Jeff, sorry about this machine but my secretary quit because of lack of calls ..."

There are a number of answering machines on the market, according to George Herrick of Radio Shack. "The most basic costs $59.95, is a single cassette, the outgoing message is a voice-synthesised program," he said.

The most expensive unit costs $300 and allows the owner to receive messages from a remote location and change the recorded message, Herrick said.

When calling Dode B. Levenson, editor in chief of the Collegian, reporters, administrators or folks with complaints were recently greeted with, "Hello. Dode, Peter, Gregory and Daniel cannot come to the phone right now; they are sampling sushi. Sushi, as you know, is raw fish wrapped in seaweed and served on a bed of rice. So they won't be back for a while ..."

'Hands' vs. hunger in Mass.

By MARGO MULRENIN
Collegian Correspondent

Thousands of New Englanders are expected to join hands in Boston and Cambridge May 25 in an effort to fight hunger and homelessness.

The event, Hands Across Massachusetts, is the state offshoot of Hands Across America, a 4,100-mile chain planned for the same day. Hands Across America hopes to attract five million volunteers to link New York City and Los Angeles and raise money for the nation's homeless and hungry.

"Financing and staffing reasons excluded New England in the national effort," said Miriam Zoll, a 1984 University of Massachusetts graduate who is Hands Across Massachusetts' media coordinator. She said support from Coca-Cola Bottlers of New England made the Boston event possible.

"We expect to have between 10,000 and 20,000 people actually holding hands and to raise about $200,000," said Zoll, who served as Collegian women's issues editor in spring 1984.

Each participant will contribute $10 for a place in the line, or $25 for a place and a "Hands" T-shirt, she said. Proceeds will be contributed to the national effort, which in turn will be administered by USA for Africa.

Entry blanks are available in Amherst at Food for Thought books, the Time Out bar, and in Hadley at Super Stop & Shop. The "Hands Hotline" is (617) 482-4464.

Graduate Senate wraps up elections

BY SEAN CASEY
Collegian Staff

The Graduate Student Senate last night elected a new vice president and voted down a motion to void last week's election results because of a voter eligibility controversy.

Jonathan Frank, a history student, defeated Ralph Sbragia for the senate vice presidency in a runoff held to break a tie vote in the regular senate elections.

Frank said that next semester he will encourage more input into the senate by students and departmental groups.

Antony Zografos, a mechanical engineering student who lost his bid for executive officer to Nancy Muller Milligan last week, sent a petition signed by himself and nine other graduate students which asked that the election be voided, that Program Fee students be allowed to vote in future elections and that elections committee chairman Dave Gobran be impeached.

Program Fee students pay a nominal fee to remain connected with the University but do not pay the Graduate Senate tax or such fees as MassPIRG, which was the center of a referendum question on last week's ballot.

The senate voted not to void the elections, not to impeach Gobran and to entertain any possible constitutional amendments about voter eligibility next semester. Zografos did not attend the meeting.

The senate also voted last night to deny revenue sharing funds to the School of Education's graduate student assembly because they did not fulfill requirements and turned in illegally composed paperwork by combining various parts of other forms.

The department would have received $200 with which they could have bought, among other things, paste and scissors.

Skateboard theft probed; use of false ID reported

Amherst police are investigating the alleged theft of a skateboard, valued at $150, by a 15-year-old Amherst Regional High School student.

Police responded to a call at 10:49 a.m. Monday from the school principal who had been approached by a person claiming to be the skateboard's owner. The person reported he saw the boy with the skateboard, which was reported stolen two weeks ago from the man's apartment in Puffton Village.

The boy told police he bought the skateboard from another student, police said.

Amherst police said they are holding the skateboard as evidence.

In other reports:

•Police responded to a call at 5:25 Monday evening at the C & C Package Store on Main Street, after an employee confiscated an altered Connecticut driver's license, police said.

Police issued a summons for the arrest of a 20-year-old male Amherst College student, who left the store before police arrived. A complaint was filed in Hampshire District Court against the man for the use of false identification with the intent to procuring alcohol.

•Chicopee police apprehended a 26-year-old Sunderland man at 7:47 p.m. Monday in Chicopee on a year-old warrant for allegedly stealing radiators from Amherst Auto Parts. The man was also charged with speeding, police said.

Radio 'for, about' women

By SUE MILLER
Collegian Correspondent

A program broadcast weekly from the University of Massachusetts radio station aims to raise campus awareness of women's issues.

"We are a group on campus aiming to keep women informed on issues concerning music, art, rallies, workshops, current events, and women's issues. We also perform interviews and converse with other colleges on women's issues," said Maureen McCarthy, the women's affairs director of the Women's Media Project.

McCarthy said she and co-workers Claudia Traub and Janet Moskowity strive for a show that is "not just for women; we are about women." This entails addressing not just women's issues, but how these issues affect men.

For example, the project recently aired "Fakes, Frauds and Imposters," concerning women's insecurity in the workplace. McCarthy said such programs prepare women for the outside world.

The media project is broadcast from 6 to 7 p.m. each Tuesday on WMUA radio.

Downtown sidewalk sale planned

By KATHLEEN MOYNIHAN
Collegian Correspondent

The annual Amherst Center sidewalk sale along Main and North Pleasant streets, will begin tomorrow and continue through Sunday, featuring sale items from most retail stores.

When asked whether they wanted to participate, some merchants and employees shook their heads. Organizers, however, said most are looking forward to the event, called "the biggest of the year" by Michael Sever, manager of Bolles Shoes.

Nina Lussier, manager of the Shoe Bin, said that this is the "optimum time" for a sidewalk sale. "The atmosphere is always fun — this is a good time of year because of the change in season. The air of the whole thing is 'festival.' It's the same time as the community fair [on Amherst Common]. The sale comes right before finals or after classes and a lot of the students come down," she said.

One can find excellent bargains at the sale, especially this time of year, Lussier said. "There might be a one-of-

Aikido instructor teaches to 'protect, not destroy'

By ADAM LAVINE
Collegian Staff

Monday morning, Boyden Gym. Paul Sylvain, fourth-degree black belt in aikido, a Chinese martial art, stands on the exercise mat facing one of his students. They bow, assume a defensive posture, then the student reaches over and grabs one of Sylvain's wrists. In one smooth movement, Sylvain steps behind his student, bending the student's wrist behind his head. Without hesitation, Sylvain twists his body away from the student, tossing him on his back. The student rolls over and flips himself into an upright position.

"Hai!" says Sylvain. The rest of the class, kneeling silently in two rows, bow in unison, then pair off to practice the new technique.

Aikido is a relatively new martial art which, according to Sylvain, is designed to "protect rather than destroy." It is based on a older art, Hokkaido, which in turn is rooted in ancient martial arts.

"Most martial arts such as karate center around killing and maiming," Sylvain said. "Aikido concentrates on capturing without maiming or killing."

He explained that aikido does not block or stop strikes but allows the moves to complete themselves, then uses the momentum of the blows to subdue the opponent.

Sylvain, 35, said he was always athletically inclined, but dropped athletics and practiced zen meditation for two years before he began to search for a martial art.

He said he found tai chi, exercises of balance and posture, mentally inspiring but slow and a poor substitute for exercise, and karate he described as "bloodthirsty." Aikido, however, has "flowing, circular movement with aesthetic appeal," he said.

In 1976, Sylvain went to Japan to "find the source" of his art. There he practiced aikido four hours a day. "In Japan the attitude toward martial arts is much more integrated into daily life," he said. "It's total commitment and very hard work."

In 1980, Sylvain returned to Amherst, where he immediately began teaching. His class will be offered again next semester.

Hang gliding enthusiasts stress their sport is safe

By PATRICIA FAVREAU
Collegian Correspondent

Some students on campus are dedicated to dispelling images of ill-fated flights and broken bones of their sport: the University of Massachusetts hang gliding club.

"I find it important to let the public know hang gliding is a safe sport," said club president Andy Oxman. "I still have employers ask me if I'm going to be around the following weekend."

Longtime club member Peter Stark said he agreed with Oxman's goal to convince skeptics. "The old days of unregulated home-made gliders are over. Failure is a thing of the past," he said.

Ratings from the United States Hang Gliding Association serve as qualifications for pilots to fly at various sites, with ratings from "hang one" to "hang four."

"A University student is at a big advantage over outsiders," said Blake, whose rating is hang three. "I achieved my status while still in college and without ever personally owning any hang gliding equipment."

A glider costs about $2,500 plus other equipment and a club member's first and only charged lesson costs about $75, he said.

"Hey, if I can do it anybody can," said Sherry B. Konowitz, the five-foot-tall vice president of the club. "Hang gliding builds your self-confidence and gives you a freedom you couldn't find anywhere else."

Brent Blake a former club president who now serves as adviser, added, "Pilots are a unique lot of people. You can feel a type of bond between you and the others. The sport would lose out if it wasn't for the group.

"Flying is the ultimate experience," he said. "On occaisons I've soared heights of 12 miles and seen birds circling below me.
It's an incredible experience."

It's been crazy and unreal—no regrets

Ian Polumbaum

It was the sickest thing I've ever done, the most taxing on my physical and academic condition — not to mention on my social life and overall sanity.

My life was this: spending up to eight hours a day in a stuffy basement, thrashing through stacks of ancient papers, cigarette debris and other squalor in search of a computer screen to stare at for the rest of the evening; crawling home at 11 p.m., not having eaten since morning, only to be forced out of a near-coma moments later by a crisis back at work; attending board meetings that degenerated into boozy shouting matches.

But it ranks among the best things I've ever done, right up with leaving the staid University of Chicago to come to UMass.

As managing editor of the Collegian, I existed almost exclusively in Campus Center 113. If I was home, chances are I was wolfing food at an alarming speed, preparing to go to the dungeon.

If I was outside, I was probably rushing late to class, or marveling at sunshine I would miss as I headed for the dungeon.

If I was in class (and I did attend most, except yoga, for which I fear a one-credit D), I was probably doing wax-pencil markups of each issue, fuming under my breath at mistakes, making mental notes of what I would do when I got back to the dungeon.

If I was partying, it was with other diehard dungeonites: Some of us lamented spending 25 hours a day together, but we were too wrapped up in the Collegian to have any normal friends.

Usually, fondness for my fellow pseudo-students carried me through the most harried times. When newsroom rapport broke down due to everyone's lack of food and sleep, my love of the English language kept me from taking hostages: In few places am I more at ease than before this infernal VDT with a cursor at my disposal.

In January, I was thrust into more responsibility yet more freedom than I could have imagined. Any ego trip garnered from manipulating what thousands read was tempered by utter disbelief that we managed to produce a NEWSPAPER EVERY FREAKING DAY!

Thanks to everyone I worked with for putting up with me. We knew each other at our best and worst. Thanks also to Geri from Noo Joizey, who despite my marriage to the Collegian drove four hours each way to cope with me on weekends.

I will long remember the highs of finishing a good-looking, news-laden issue, of churning out a scathing policy editorial, of reaching the end of a roller-coaster week; and the lows of a day without "hard" news stories or an editorial on which five editors disagreed. But most embedded in my brain are memories of total VDT breakdowns, typesetter disasters or interminable layout meetings during which we looked at each other and burst into uncontrollable laughter at the absurdity of it all.

It's been real.

Ian Polumbaum has been a Collegian staff member.

Just a few comments

William Spain

Well, boys and girls, another spring of the ZooMass experience bites the dust. All the Christa McAuliffe jokes, aborted romances, attacks on terrorism and (most of all) the leering are fast fading from my mind as the summer closes in. Before they are completely gone, there are a few comments I would like to make.

•Space shuttle humor is part of our delightfully sick world. We make fun of what we fear as a way of coping with it. Helen Keller, lepers, dead babies, etc. are all part of this. Even nervous laughter is better than none at all.

•Getting close to someone is about the only real relief from life's more depressing moments that our sad species can avail itself of. Initial intimacy should never be regretted, no matter how things end up. It would, however, be nice if one's confidence and peace of mind could come out unscathed as soon as a break is made.

•When my man Ronnie did his Sylvester Stallone act on the North African nutcase and his wretched subjects, I went out on a limb and praised it on these very pages. I took a lot of crap from my fellow liberals for it, but my sentiments remain the same. Terrorists are international criminals and murderers who deserve no right of sanctuary — in any place or at any time. We have huddled behind walls for too long.

•Several weeks ago, I wrote about something that is on the mind of every red-blooded young man and woman. It pleases me to note here that the response from both genders was overwhelmingly positive (or at least tolerant). Thank you for the open minds. Hold on to them, folks. I will be back next year.

Ridiculous reactionism

Rob Skelton

Well, it's that time again, to take final pokes and make some last-minute jokes before summer comes and ruins everything.

Seriously, I've got to drag out the recent breach of freedom from interference that WMUA suffered from — of all people — the right-wing reactionary Jonathan Kaufman.

Kaufman, in an act of blind patriotism of the extreme the Shiites employ, insisted that an American flag which he considered defaced be removed from the staging of a Blue Wall WMUA showcase, or that the show be stopped.

As a performer myself, I am especially concerned that one indignant self-appointed watchdog, a minority whacko, could disrupt an artistic presentation with foul calls from a freaked-out political mindset.

I am not GOP-bashing. Even his comrades in the movement recognize him as a liability; in his Monday attempt to gain the Republican club presidency, he was soundly defeated by a colleague whose pragmatic policies will attract, rather than alienate, future members.

Don't misunderstand me. I love this country; I wouldn't live anywhere else. I understand there are laws governing use and misuse of a national symbol, but when it comes to direct interference in an artistic production, the champions of non-interference ought to stay the hell out.

That means you, righteous protectors of the public morale. I am very conservative in that I don't tolerate folks messing in my affairs; a lot of people are this way. When the art world is infringed upon, watch out. Those freaks will do anything to make their point.

Jonathan Kaufman, I rest my case.

Truth comes out at last

At last the truth is revealed. Administrators on this campus are not here to serve students. Who then do they serve? Trey Williams would have us believe he serves the Commonwealth (of which I am a voting member) and not the 26,000 students of this University directly. Well, Mr. Williams, I sent a copy of your letter to the Governor who, I'm sure, will be overwhelmed by your loyalty to this state.

In addition to your shocking announcement, I also sent him a request for the return of all tuition, room and board, and fee money which I have thus far paid the University for my education. I see no problem with this request since it appears the Commonwealth bankrolls the salaries of all administrators and faculty on this campus. The amount of time this will save me on financial aid applications is enormous.

It appears I was wrong about contributing to your salary so I take back all the bad things I was thinking about all the loyal state employees I thought were taking advantage of the people this institution exists for. I am sure, Mr. Williams, that you will pleased to know that part of my refund is going towards the purchase of a gift for you. It is a pair of blinders so you never have to view students or the truth again.

Larry Bouchie, Rob Skelton, and William Spain would like to thank all of our contributors this year. Even if you did not get published, we appreciate the time and effort you put into writing the letters and columns we received. For non-graduating folk, we urge you to continue sending us your work. For the rest, best o' luck outside.

More than one face

I, too, am 'hurt, confused, frustrated and angry.' Trey Williams is not a faceless administrator. As one who has worked with/against him, I think he is a two-faced administrator.

Thanks

Soon, a few thousand more UMass students will be thrust into the world. For communication majors, there is a person who must be thanked. April Tidlund, in the eyes of many of us, is the backbone of our department. Constantly there for us, her help and guidance have been invaluable. With a quick wit and sarcastic smile she has solved our problems, answered our questions, and calmed our paranoia.

Thanks, April. Maybe we could have made it without you, but you sure made things a lot more fun and a heck of a lot easier.

Write 'em a letter

This summer when you are lying on the beach, take a minute to stop and think about how you're going to pay for school this fall. With the present reductions in financial aid brought on by the Gramm-Rudman bill, students are finding it increasingly more difficult to obtain financial aid.

Students Advocating Financial Aid is urging students to write their congressman about the necessity of keeping financial aid programs as they stand. A sentiment expressed by members of Congress is that they do not hear from students and do not realize the impact they have on them.

As of March 1, 1986, financial aid took a 4% across the board cut. The future for financial aid looks even more dismal with cuts for 1987 being as much as 25% of the existing programs. The Gramm-Rudman bill seeks to cure the deficit by hacking away at vital programs, such as financial aid.

The lobbying group SAFA got to express student concern first hand by going to Washington D.C. and meeting with Senators and Representatives.

Though we feel we had a positive impact while lobbying the Capitol, it is not enough. By writing your Congressman, you can express your displeasure at the thought of you or some of your peers not being able to return to school because they lack the funding.

If this country wants to invest in the future, we must start by investing in the minds of our people.

Ted Flood
Vice President, SAFA

College daze

Reflecting back on the fours years I've spent at UMass, it amazes me to think how most of us walked in freshman year totally naive to walk out of here with a much more mature outlook on life. We have all experienced college life at its best.

Sherry Sharfman

It all began our first year when the big thing to do was to head down to Southwest Pyramids and catch the action. Dorm life was a huge adjustment for most of us. Where else do you share a 2x4 room with someone and a bathroom with 30 others? Sophomore year brought a little more studying and a little more confidence as we walked the campus paths. As junior year approached we had to relieve ourselves from blasting stereos and nonexistent quietness to achieve the much needed proper study environment. Off-campus living was calling.

Remember cramming for those tough exams and getting all nerved up? I recall one instance when, on a rainy Wednesday evening, I began to proceed down North Pleasant Street for a midterm exam.
Everything was under control until my 1973 Dodge decided it did not like the weather and just quit on me. I tried to remain calm as the cars behind began to honk and the time approached the 7:00 p.m. exam starting hour. I envisioned failing the course. However, I survived this episode and all the other badly timed events that threatened my academic career.

Now, as senior year closes, we have attempted to find ourselves a good job or the admittance to grad school that we came to college for in the first place. We do not know what the future holds in store for us but I am sure we can all say that UMass has been a positive experience, for the most part. It has developed our minds and broadened our views. We may be leaving here for now but our college daze will be in our hearts forever.

Is it Coffiditis?

I've never been on this page before — 10 lines to sum up this experience — I walk to the bottom of the Campus Center, work all day into late evening, listen to calls (most concerned), read green letters, listen, be heard...and get something done, which is a good end product. It's not done because we just enjoy working, it's done because some of us have to do it. There's a group of people down in room 113 who find themselves in this position. It's the only job they can do, and they happen to do it well.

Joel P. Coffidis has seen his name spelled more DIFFERENT ways than Elizabeth Taylor has had husbands.

Under fire, still

The revised Code of Student Conduct, which has just been returned to the University counsel in Boston after extensive revision here in Amherst, is a necessary but disturbing document.

The original code, drafted in 1967, was crying out for changes to fit our growing University. However, what the campus does not need is a policy which includes ways to infringe upon students' constitutional rights.

The draft awaiting approval from the counsel and ultimately the Board of Trustees does just that.

It seems the Yvette Henry fiasco that rocked the campus two years ago and attracted national attention is being used as a tool by the administration to chip away at those rights.

The updated document has been changed to spell out the rights of students who charge someone under the code and those who are accused of violating University regulations. It also substitutes rules pertaining to mass disturbances with strict regulations that, according to administrators, ensure that the University can "efficiently respond to the willful and continuous disruption of the business of the campus by students engaging in protest activities."

Although the intent of the new code may not be to put clamps on a vocal and active campus, the revisions threaten to stifle legitimate grass-roots actions by students.

Worse yet are efforts by the administration to put what it calls "interim restrictions," before a formal hearing, on individuals it deems dangerous to the community or accuses of a violation. Henry, a resident assistant accused of arson, was suspended and fired from her campus job immediately after she was arrested. Charges against her were later dropped.

Associate Dean of Students Robert Brooks dismissed the episode and her subsequent lawsuits against the University, which were settled three months ago, as "ancient history."

One administrator tried to justify the restrictions by using the scenario of a person accused of running around with a machine gun as a rationale for barring him from campus before he is found guilty. This is hardly an everyday occurrence here — and such a suspect would probably be locked up by police anyway.

Also, as usual, this important piece of policy will be decided on while students are out of town on summer break. Unfortunately, we have grown accustomed to these behind-our-backs tactics. After all, we must remember that some in Whitmore believe they only "work for the Commonwealth of Massachusetts," "do not work for students" and are not "here to 'serve' anybody," according to a recent letter published on this page.

What bureaucrats and top officials — Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey, Vice Chancellor Dennis L. Madson, Dean William F. Field and others — must remember when they are drafting disciplinary rules for a diverse community such as UMass is that the best policy is a tempered one.

Key parts of the revised code are in no way tempered; they are reactionary. The Board of Trustees should not accept what is now an anti-rights document.

Good shows, but . . .

It is always sad to watch reforms of the past 20 years fall by the wayside. Often, the little things which are rarely missed mark the greatest change.

Here at the University of Massachusetts there has been an unwritten rule in past years that spring concerts should include a Third World act and a women's act. This year neither the residential area concerts nor the Union Program Council pond show included the latter.

In past years Bonnie Raitt, Patti Smith, Melba Moore and Nona Hendryx have performed. In 1985-86, UPC did not manage to bring a major female star to campus all year.

UPC deserves the benefit of the doubt; we hope this was just an oversight which will not be repeated in the future.

Thanks to all and sundry . . .

Although I have read a lot of pages, written quite a few Collegian columns, and consumed a number of beers, my days as an undergraduate seemed to have passed with lightening speed. I am happy for this last chance to thank the many people and things for which I am grateful. The UMass Republican Club - As a founding member I watched this organization grow to be an effective voice for moderate and conservative students at the University. I am grateful for the opportunity to have a leadership role during the election year. The UMRC is an organization for which I am very proud.

The Campus Radicals - Thank you for making me all the more aware that there is a need for ordinary people to get involved in politics. I an very grateful that the "happy valley" is not the real world. I feel sorry for most of you, for you seem to carry the burdens of the world on your shoulders. It's good to be concerned with politics but a smile and a willingness to listen wins over more people than a clenched fist or screaming voice

Sam Adams Beer - Although expensive, at last there's an American brew with a genuinely European taste.

The opportunity to drink with a Contra. Smith and Mt. Holyoke parties.

The loyal opposition - traditional Democrats like Bill Spain, Bill Bennett, and Paul Wingle who believe in the system and the values of the United States.

Small classes at UMass.

To my friends - I'd like to put a personal note in here for all of you, but space forbids. You know who you are darling. I hope we can stay in touch.

To fellow columnist Mark Caldeira - for laughs. I'm curious, though as to whether he gets his material straight out of Pravda or if he is their UMass correspondent?

To Larry Bouchie - a more fair and accomodating editor I could not have asked for.

Snickers Bars.

The faculty - It's been a pleasure to have gotten to know many of you. I am only sorry that it often seems you are underrated. Thanks for the education.

Professor Greenbaum - Thank you for the personal touch in what often seems such a big and impersonal environment. I am deeply appreciative of your friendship and guidance.

The Minuteman.

Coffee at the "Blue Wall."

Grateful Dead Concerts - When the Dead are around then their followers are not in the dorm so I don't have to listen to their music.

You, the reader. Thanks for reading what I have to say. I consider it an honor. Good Luck and Best Wishes, always.

Stephen Erickson is a Collegian columnist who also deserves thanks.

Words from swaggering Bill

Bill Collins

As an outspoken student activist for the past four years, I've been asked to pass on the wisdom gained through my experiences. Here goes:

•Get Involved There are 450 Registered Student Organizations on this campus— from the student government to sports teams, from programming organizations to recreational clubs. Join one of them and broaden your educational experience.

•Question Authority - especially the University administration. Always remember that you have rights as a consumer, a tenant, a citizen, and a human being. Also remember that the protest demonstration is the cornerstone of student empowerment — nothing worries the administration more. When student leaders call for a protest demonstration around an important student issue it is your responsibility to stand up and be counted.

•Get Arrested - Last semester, I was arrested for the Whitmore sit-in. I had a great time, I learned a little about our judicial system and I found out that UMass Police Chief Robert Joyce wears colorful golf attire to court.

•Graduate - Don't lose sight of the primary reason you are here. Go to class, read those books, and grab that sheepskin.

I would like to thank every one who helped, supported, and put up with my shenanigans. I promise to be just as controversial in the outside world. See you there.

Bill Collins has been a denizen of Southwest, the president of SWAG, responsible for many an adminstrator's headache and deeply involved in love/hate relationships with numerous Collegian editors and staff members.

Editor's note: Bill has provided all of us down here with much irritation but much amusement. Perhaps his greatest accomplishment was to go from the position of an absurd foe to that of a friend of sorts, or at worst an acquaintance to be regarded with placid ambivalence. Good luck on your New Hampshire Senate race — live free or die, Bill.

I confess!

Remember the submarine that sank in the pond two years ago? Well, let us just say we were human torpedoes.

Summer '86 Movie Preview

By DON LIPPER
Collegian Staff

Try to be strong, my loyal fans, I know you will lead wretched existences without a weekly dose of me and my ego. I think my erstwhile readers will go through withdrawl this summer if I do not give them one last fix of my cinematic words of wisdom. For both of you, here is my summer movie preview:

About Last Night I saw and liked this funny film based on the play Sexual Perversity in Chicago. It stars Rob Lowe, Demi Moore and Jim Belushi.

A Fine Mess is a Blake Edwards comedy starring Ted Danson and Howie Mandel.

Aliens is the sequel to the hit 1979 science fiction thriller Alien directed by James (Terminator) Cameron. Sigourney Weaver reprises her role as Ripley, the sole survivor of the monster in the last film. Now it seems that when humans colonize the Aliens' home world all contact is lost.

American Anthem stars Olympic gold medalist Mitch Gaylord and Janet (A Chorus Line, Flamingo Kid) Jones as atheletes hoping to get into the Olympics.

Back To School is a comedy starring Rodney Dangerfield as a successful yet vulgar businessman who decides to go to college to earn his degree.

Big Trouble In Little China is another weird John Carpenter film starring (once again) Kurt Russell as an adventuer who helps his friend find his kidnapped wife.

THEY'RE BACK — The Freeling family is back, battling the forces of darkness in Poltergeist II: The Other Side.

The Boy Who Could Fly Guess what this one's about.

Cobra is written by and stars Sylvester Stallone as a tough cop who makes Dirty Harry seem like Mother Theresa. Looks like Rambo is after American vermin this time.

Club Paradise stars Robin Williams, Peter O'Toole, Twiggy and Simon Jones in Harold (Ghostbusters) Ramis' new comedy about a Chicago fireman who decides to buy an island resort club.

Ferris Bueller's Day Off stars Matthew Broderick as a irresistibly charming high school student in John (Breakfast Club) Hugh's latest teen comedy.

The Fly stars Jeff Goldblum in the remake of the 1958 horror classic about a scientist whose molecules are scrambled with those of a common housefly.

Heartburn stars (are you ready for this?) Meryl Streep and Jack Nicholson in the adaptation of Nora Ephron's comic novel directed by Mike (The Graduate) Nichols.

Ishtar stars Warren Beatty and Dustin Hoffman as a duo of hard-luck singer-songwriters from New York who end up traveling all over the world.

Jumpin' Jack Flash stars Whoopi Goldberg as a computer operator who gets caught up in a comedic spy yarn running from both the KGB and CIA. The Karate Kid, Part II in this sequel Ralph Macchio and Pat Morita reprise their roles as student and martial arts mentor. This time the pair travel back to Morita's old hometwon of Okinawa where the kid must face a competition and the master must face his memories.

Labyrinth is produced by George (Star Wars) Lucas, directed by Jim (Muppets) Henson from a screenplay by Terry (Monty Python) Jones with conceptual designs by Brian (Faeries) Froud and stars David (you know who he is) Bowie and Jennifer (you don't know who she is) Connelly. This fantasy adventure film is about a girl's hazardous journey in a desperate race against time to rescue her baby brother, who has been kidnapped by the ominous and compelling ruler of the labyrinth. Legal Eagles stars Robert Redford and Deborah Winger as lawyers who must defend Daryl Hannah in this comedy murder mystery directed by Ivan (Ghostbusters) Reitman.

The Little Shop of Horrors is a horror/ musical comedy about a nerdy flowershop employee (Rick Moranis) and his people-eating plant that eats almost everyone in the cast. Steve Martin, Bill Murray, Steve Guttenberg have cameo roles.

The Mission stars Robert (The Deerhunter) De Niro and Jeremy (Brideshead Revisited) Irons as (respectively) a repentant slave trader turned Jesuit priest and his spiritual mentor who journey to South America in 1750. This "political epic" is being directed by Roland (The Killing Fields) Joffe from an original screenplay written by Robert (Lawrence of Arabia) Bolt.

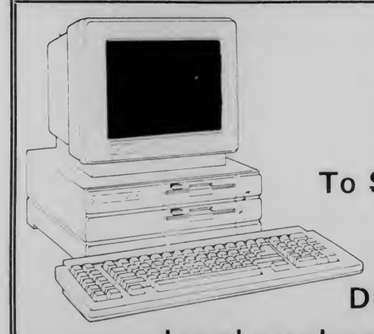
Nothing in Common stars Tom Hanks as an advertising executive who has to learn to cope with his parents as individuals after they divorce. Jackie Gleason and Eva Marie Saint star as the parents in this comedy directed by Gary (Happy Days) Marshall.

RAMBO TURNS COP? — Sylvester Stallone wrote, directed and starred in Cobra, one of this summer's newest releases.

Poltergeist II: The Other Side in this sequel to the 1982 horror smash in which the ghost come back to bother the beleagured family of the first film.

Psycho III Anthony Perkins directs and reprises his role as Norman Bates, the hotel owner we first saw in Alfred Hitchcock's Psycho many years ago.

Raw Deal is the story of what happens when the mob foolishly tries to fight with Arnold Scharzenegger. Running Scared stars Billy Crystal and Gregory Hines as two rugged NYC cops in this comedy.



Shanghai Surprise stars Sean Penn and Madonna as missionaries in China in the 30s.

Spacecamp stars Kate (Indiana Jones and the Temple of Doom) Capshaw and Lea (Back to the Future) Thompson in a story of what happens when a bunch of aspiring young astronauts accidently go up in a shuttle.

Sweet Liberty written, directed and starring Alan Alda this movie is about what happens when a historians serious book is made into a trashy movie.

Top Gun Tom Cruise and Kelly McGillis star in this story about a young man who wants to become the Navy's top pilot.

Those are just some of the major releases the studios have in store for us this summer. As you can probably guess anyone wanting to see any serious films will probably have little to choose from in this summer's crop of films. Enjoy yourselves .

Academy of music offers nostalgia; 'midnight madness' brings the cults

By THOMAS HARRINGTON
Collegian Staff

The Academy of Music in Northampton is the sixth oldest theater in the United States and the oldest owned by a city.

The Academy specializes in foreign films as a movie theater, but also shows live stage entertainment, and is host to a number of Valley Ballet. Recently, it hosted a performance of "A Chorus Line."

Operated as a public service, the theater is a great resource if only for its noteworthy architecture. Built in 1890, it is one of the few theaters left with the appearance of a real movie palace. Beautifully decorated, it has two glass windows separating the lobby and foyer that are believed to be original Tiffany creations.

The Academy has only been suitable for stage productions since 1975, when it completed five years of renovations, paid for by a number of fundraising projects. The Academy's current manager, Duane Robinson says that especially on the roof. Robinson is quick to point out that the Academy is non-profit, and supports itself not with tax dollars but with box office revenues. The Academy remains a movie theater though, and Robinson says that "We try to gauge ourselves to the college and faculty community, with foreign films as our main forte."

The Academy has hosted the Western Mass. premiers of films like La Cage Au Folles, Diva, My Dinner With Andre, and Abel Gance's Napolean.

According to Robinson, the theater's line up "depends on what people want to see," and that they're "becoming more broad in our selection."

Recently, the theater has tried showing some more mainstream features such as Monty Python alumni Terry Gilliam's bizarre Brazil.

The quality of films at The Academy of Music is generally quite good, and the beautiful interior of the theater should be seen by anyone interested in finding out what movie houses looked like before they became rectangular boxes.

Probably no type of "alternative" film is more famous than the midnight "cult" movie. In the valley are though, the only place to see them is at the Hampshire six theaters in the Hadley Mall.

Billing its shows as "Midnight Movie Madness," the Hampshire shows four or more films every Friday and Saturday night for $3.50 a piece. Among the most popular features are Pink Floyd's "The Wall," Monty Python comedies, and "The Rocky Horror Picture Show," which has earned over 26 million dollars in rentals over twelve years of midnight showings across the country.

Built in 1978, the Hampshire 6 along with the Mountain Farms 4 Theatre nearby is owned by AMC theatres the country's 3rd largest theater chain. The two theaters are the company's only holdings in New England.

Ramsden says that the midnight movies, though popular, are not huge moneymakers. "It's tough to get people to a show that plays when most people are asleep." he says. "Of the AMC theaters, only a minority are approved to show midnight features. The Mountain Farms, for instance tried it a few years back, but it didn't work out.

Of the people we get here, 95% are aged 18-25, and a lot of those are regulars. A lot of people show up in costume for "Rocky Horror," because there's a $0.50 discount for them. In the spring, a lot of people show up straight from their proms, still in tuxes and dresses.

"We try to put forth as good a mixture as possible and still be profitable. Mostly, we show 'Young' pictures. Rocky Horror remains 'week after week, our most popular show. Even if it did badly for a few weeks, we wouldn't drop it because it's almost impossible to find another print." The famous horror musical recently finished its 333rd week at the Hampshire.

A Jorma Kaukonen update

By PETER WISSOKER
Collegian Staff

"It was really easy. It was alot of fun," said guitarist Jorma Kaukonen about the recent Hot Tuna reunion tour. Kaukonen along with bass player Jack Cassidy have been touring recently in acoustic formation, playing rags from the twenties and thirties as well as Kaukonen's own songs.

In a recent telephone interview, Kaukonen talked about a few of his projects. "I've been working on some new songs, they should be done in the next week or so. Then I'll see if Jack and I want to do some recording together or if I'm going to do them myself...I would record with other people depending on what the song required, I just have to see how these things come out as I finish them up."

Jorma, who has given up living on the west coast to move to New York, is teaching guitar lessons at the New School. "It's great...I've really figured out how to explain what I do both to myself and to other people. It's really been neat. This is my fourth semester. I like teaching, I'm going to keep it up. It's nice to pass that stuff on."

As for the last few Hot Tuna shows, where they played with former Hot Tuna violinist Papa John Creach:'They were great. It just worked out good. Everyone was listening. Everyone was in good condition mentally and physically. It was just alot of fun.'

As for his days with the Jefferson Airplane and Hot Tuna:'Percentage-wise more of them (concerts) were fun than weren't. I can't even remember any horrible ones. So I guess basicaly it was just a good time.

Collegian: When you used to play acoustic shows up here at Hanger One you used to play much louder and used phase shifters. Have you given up on that sort of thing?

Jorma: Well I just like hearing all that stuff around. I like the tone of the pure acoustic guitar better, I always have. The answer's no I haven't given up on it and I'll probably be bringing some stuff back. But when I have to carry that stuff myself...that rack of stuff weighs about four hundred pounds and I'm getting to be an old man, let me tell you.

Collegian: Did Janis Joplin ever sing on stage with you(with the Airplane)?

Jorma: Not that I can remember. She might have jammed with us in the very early early years but not that I can remember, which means probably not.

Collegian: Did you jam with anyone else, Hendrix, Arthur Lee?

David Brosa: a love for Israel

By RICHARD ROSENTHAL
Collegian Correspondent

David Brosa, Israeli singer, song writer, and guitarist extraordinaire brought his guitar and his repertoire of Hebrew and Spanish songs before a packed audience last week in Memorial Hall at the University of Massachusetts.

"Shalom, good evening," Brosa greeted the crowd in Hebrew. This is only one of the the three languages in which he is fluent, but he sang mainly in Hebrew with a sprinkling of Spanish songs. Along the way Brosa gave brief explanations of his lyrics, some of which were written by the Israeli poet Yonathan Geffen. Brosa is unique in that he combines contemporary Israeli music with the rich musical heritage of the Spanish tradition.

Before playing the third song "Yihiyeh Tov," translated to "And It Will Be Good," he explained that he wrote this song before Begin and Sadat met to discuss peace. "This was written at a time when there was a lot of hope among Israelis for peace," he said, adding, "I hope I don't have to sing this song forever."

David Brosa

Even though a large part of the audience could not fully understand the Hebrew or Spanish verses of his songs, Brosa was still able to communicate with them, winning over both first time listeners and veteran followers. Finishing with some brilliant guitar work during a song called "La Rumba," he brought the audience to it's feet, as he was called back for encore after encore.

Record Review

By NATALIE HEWITT
Collegian Correspondent
Modern Times
Latin Quarter
Arista

Trying to review the Latin Quarter's debut album, Modern Times (Arista), I am completely stumped as to where to begin.

This seven piece English band breaks all the conventions of unconventionality. They are a political band that refuses to be a Clash sound-alike or preach about social injustices; instead, Latin Quarter performs political songs in a mixture rock ballads.

Their lyrics are intelligent, sensitive observations with just the right amount of desperation and disgusted questioning—another aspect that makes them unconventional because an eighth member of the band, Mike Jones, writes all the lyrics for Latin Quarter. What is unconventional is that Mike Jones is a non-musician and he writes the lyrics after he has heard a tape of the music that the rest of the band has written.

Multi-racial and sporting three lead singers, both male and female, this band doesn't seem to do anything by the rules. Their music is deceptively accessible—it's when you listen to Mike Jones' lyrics that Latin Quarter's true character shines through. The title track, "Modern Times" is about the McCarthy era and starts off with a powerful excerpt from the trials.

This is not an album for the unmoved apathist, though perhaps it will make some of them think. Nor is it an album for Reaganites or Maggie Thatcher admirers. "America For Beginners" may offend some Americans with its question "Is it bedtime for Bonzo?/Is it time for change?" but I think Latin Quarter has hit it right on the mark. Unemployment is handled with a sensitive desperation in the song "New Millionaires," while "No Rope As Long As Time" is a portrait of an Afrikaner who sits on his porch, holding his gun, and talks about change in South Africa. Powerful stuff here.

Latin Quarter's first U.K. single is "Radio Africa," and it has received a heavy dose of critical acclaim. With a reggae beat, Latin Quarter shows a picture of South Africa where "The hands on the purse-strings are white." This is very much a pro-divestment song—and Latin Quarter doesn't beat around the bush about it.

Jorma: We jammed with Hendrix, but not on stage.

Collegian: Anyone on stage that you can remember?

Jorma: Garcia, Santana, Mike Bloomfield, Larry Coryell. There were lot's of people but it's kind of hard to remember, when you put it that way.

Collegian: What do you think of the new Starship?

Jorma: I don't really think about it much at all I think it's great that they're self-supporting but it's just not my kind of music.

Collegian: What was the relation between you and Garcia(Jerry Garcia-lead guitarist with Grateful Dead) was in those early years?

Jorma: Basicaly we were all friends and saw each other alot which we don't anymore. We worked alot of shows together and fooled around together...I suppose we were all going through a heavy learning process together. We come from the same roots.

Collegian: Was there a rivalry between you an Garcia and say Cippolina(Quicksilver) and the guys from Big Brother?

Jorma: Not really. Guitar players are a competitive lot at all times. Everybody likes to be as good as they can at all times. The answer is yes and no. We were a pretty close knit group of people, we all came out of the same little world.

Collegian: How did Papa John like playing with you again?

Jorma: Oh, it was great. He really had a good time.

Collegian: I heard that in New York he played a really high note and one of the lamps broke.

Jorma: That's right. That's exactly what happened. It was a big one too: It was incredible.

Jorma will be playing in Jamaica at the end of the month and Jorma and Jack will be playing some dates in August.

Are we really going to miss the Westside Gang? #?!? Yeah!!

Alexander referred any questions concerning the incident to the college's public relations office, but Russell Powell, director of the office, declined to comment.

On April 16, Hermann's brother, 17-year-old Andrew Hermann of Belchertown, drank a mixture of cyanide and Kool-Aid after denouncing Hampshire for its admissions policy and other problems. The event was filmed for a satirical talk show, "The Voice of the Top Two," co-hosted by Stephen and Hampshire graduate Dave Taub, and viewers and witnesses at first thought the suicide was a joke.

Videotapes of the episode were seized by police. The show's producer, Philip Jackson, has since filed suit in Hampshire County District Court in an effort to retrieve them for the family, Hermann said.

"My family and I want the tapes returned. They're personal," Hermann said in an interview. "I don't want them to be held onto by the district attorney. It's my brother's last moments."

The district attorney's office would not comment on the case.

Hermann said Alexander was "insensitive and rude over the phone. After all that happened, you'd think she'd be more kind."

Ten days after the suicide, during a spring concert at Hampshire, Taub and Hermann were invited on stage and sang a song about Andrew because "we missed him, but we believed he's still around," Taub said.

Taub said an administrator who appeared intoxicated approached them and said they were "sick." A week later, Taub said, he received a letter from Alexander informing his behavior was "grossly offensive" and would not be tolerated at the college.

Taub said he will continue making appointments with a psychiatrist on campus, though he said a Hampshire security guard last week warned him to stay off college property.

Lussier said that the sale occurs every year at the same time as the fair on the common, which includes the Farmer's Market and usually an auction.

The events at the common are the kinds of things "a small community does," she said. "The students are still here, and they feel the same as local people do [about the event]. We've been telling our customers all week — 'Don't forget the sidewalk sale!' "

With all of those statistics in mind, the outcome of this first round match up will probably come down to the pitching. Both Northwestern and UMass sport dominating pitching staffs and with neither team having a decisive edge.

As a staff, the Wildcats sport an earned run average of 0.68 and have 19 shutouts. Northwestern is led by junior pitcher Lisa Ishikawa (12-8, 0.56 ERA and 195 strikeouts in 150 innings), senior pitcher Cathy Tawse (8-4, 0.56 ERA and 10 shutouts), and freshman hurler Nanci Clement (8-3, 1.31 ERA and three shutouts).

Ishikawa is the workhorse of the staff appearing in 24 games this season. She is the ace of the staff, but is still recovering form a seperated shoulder injury suffered earlier this year. Ishikawa is one of the nation's best, but runs hot and cold at times.

If Ishikawa is on, there could be trouble for the Minutewomen. The Stockton, CA, native also pitched for the Hi-Ho Brakettes, a very well-known amatuer summer league team. Last year, Ishikawa led the Brakettes to the World Amatuer Softball Title, tossing a shutout against the People's Republic of China in the championship game.

For UMass, the name of the game has been pitching all season. Three time All-Atlantic 10 Conference pitcher Lynn Stockley leads the staff with a 20-2 mark and an ERA of 0.23. The senior left-hander has struckout 147 batters in 152.7 innings and will see a lot of work this weekend. Sophomore right hander Lisa Rever, who last pitched April 29th against Rhode Island, is 14-5 with a 0.86 ERA. Combined, Rever and Stockley have posted more wins than the entire Wildcat pitching staff.

Sophomore right fielder Chris Ciepiela leads the Minutewomen offensively with a .357 mark and 16 runs scored. Junior second baseman Carol Frattaroli (.350, 15 RBI's and 15 runs scored), sophomore shortstop Paige Kopcza (.321, 23 RBI's and 44 hits), and senior center fielder Sally Maher (.309, 23 RBI's and 22 runs scored) have all exhibited good late-season hitting.

Senior left-hander Lynn Stockley will start Friday against Northwestern in the first round of the NCAA Division I Tournament at NOPE Field.

Sophomore catcher Ilene Freeman (.304, 21 RBI's and 15 extra-base hits) and senior first baseman Beth Talbott (.263, 17 RBI's and 35 runs scored) have also been hitting well as of late.

Pop Flies: Friday's game will mark the first time the Minutewomen have been to the NCAA Division I championships. In 1980, UMass won the East Regional of the AIAW tournament, but lost to the University of Oregon and Cal. Berkeley in the World Series. The Minutewomen made it to the AIAW East Regionals in 1979, but were beaten twice by Glassboro St. . .UMass went to the AIAW American Softball Association tournament in 1978 and was beaten by Southwest Missouri and Texas Women's University.

Gorilla Grumblings: The stats are in, thanks to Michelle and Jane, and they read like this:

In groundballs, Fisk leads with 62. Byrne and LoCascio have 57 each, Greg Cannella has 56, Carmean has 52, Kelley Carr has scooped 50, Neal Cunningham has 45 and Matt Woods is at 40.

The UMass attack, suprisingly, has more penalties (23) than the defense (17). . .UMass leads opponents 48-20 in the second period, but trails 31-21 in the quarter. . .the UMass man-up team has scored 23 goals in 90 attempts (25 percent). Opponents are at 21-of-76 (27 percent). . .UMass has cleared the ball 296 times successfully and has been riden off the clear only 63 times.

UNH stats: Fraser, a junior attackman, leads the team with 37 goals. . .Snow leads the team with 25 assists. Soma's save percentage is .638 with a goals-against average of 8.17.

Carmean leads UMass at 34-20-54. Cannella is at 21-18-39 with Fisk standing at 21-12-33. Carr has 20-10-30 numbers as junior midfielder Doug Musco is at 12-5-17.

LoCascio is second in the nation in save percentage (.673) and boasts a goals-against average of .6.7. The UMass defense is one of the nation's best, holding opponents to 7.2 goals-per-game.

Ted Garber's in-laws will be at the game along with many more Garbers. . .The famed UMass Gorilla (a.k.a. Cliff) will be at the game once again. . .the media crunch for the game is expected to be heavy, also the New England Sports Network (NESN) could not manage to get to cover the game. The Eastern Mass cable station covered five UMass games this year. The Gorillas were 4-1 in those contests. . .Aldrich has been bothered by a bad back and has been listed as questionable for the game. But the senior co-captain practiced with the team and reported he will start and play as long as he can. . .UMass is 0-4 in the NCAA's. . .What will Garber say to the team before the game? "I'm not a rah-rah type of coach," the hall of famer said. "I'll tell the fellas to remember what they're been taught, play hard and have fun. That's what the game's all about. Garber took an ad out in today's Collegian thanking the fans for their support.

UMass: Hey, Hey, Hey — Goodbye

Editor's Note: Peter Abraham ends two years as sports editor of the Collegian with this column).

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

It seems funny to be typing that for the last time. It's been quite a two years. It seems too much to wrap-up in 71 lines, but here goes.

Someone once asked me why I wanted to be a sports writer. I thought about it for a minute, then said, "It beats the hell out of working for a living."

Laugh, but it's true. My literary idol, Dr. Hunter S. Thompson (the currrent poetry and weapons editor of the San Francisco Chronicle) once wrote that the two keys to success as a sports writer are "A blind willingness to believe anything you're told by the coaches, flacks, hustlers and other official spokesmen for the team-owners who provide the free booze and a Roget's Thesaurus, in order to avoid using the same verbs and adjectives in the same paragraph."

Sports writing, to be frank, is a joke. What other job is there where you can go to a sporting event (usually a football, baseball or basketball game), write a few lines about it, and get paid? If all newspapers closed today, I'd have to take up golf or something.

When I was 16, I was on a tour of the newsroom of the New Bedford Standard-Times and I saw the sports editor. I asked him why the paper didn't cover the New Bedford High swim team (which a few of my friends were on).

"You want it covered?" he asked. "You do it."

Four stories (and a lot of editing) later, I was mailed a check for $120. That's a lot of beer when you're 16.

I thought it over. I had watched a few swim meets, interviewed the coach for a couple of minutes, and spent about an hour typing it out. Plus I got my name in the paper. It was like the scene in the Blues Brothers with Jake (John Belushi) in the church. I had seen the light.

I'm sitting here now, realizing that more than a few people don't like me. New Yorkers (I was kidding folks), women's coaches, women athletes, club sports team and intramural teams aren't shedding any tears over my graduation. But, I do say this: I have no regrets over anything I did.

I edited the paper like I thought the average sports fan would want it. I covered the big sports, pushed the hell out of popular events and covered my tracks with everything else. I grew up in journalism on a "real" newspaper and treated the Collegian like one. I decided early on I wasn't here to provide scrapbook material for anybody. The Collegian isn't the best college paper in America, but it's damn close. I like to think I played a role.

So, I'm gone. Today I'll actually watch a lacrosse game and not worry about getting an angle for my lead paragraph. Then finals, graduation and the real world. But first . . .

The Collegian is like a family to me. I've never worked with a bunch of more dedicated people in my life, and I probably will never again. So to Dode (you nut), Ian, Anne, Lesley, Joel, Pat, Bill, Rob, Paul (SE Mass Rules!), John, Janet, Sherry, Liz, Conman, Sod (the two best cutters I've ever been associated with), Z-Man, Larissa, Paul, Jeff, Jen, Laura, Becky, Anita, Larry, Michelle (my Jersey trip buddy and the best hoop photographer on the planet) and yes, you too, Kelly, I thank you for putting up with me.

Of course, there's the sports staff. John (my successor), Roger, Matt, Joe, Stuart, Bryan and Gerry. You guys are the best. Stay in the business. The best of luck.

There are the coaches. I've had a unique chance to work closely with these dedicated people. I believe I've benefited personally from knowing people like Dick Garber, Jim Reid, Ron Gerlufsen, Dick Bergquist, Mike Hodges and Russ Yarworth. Special thanks, too, to UMass sports information director Howie Davis, who taught me how to respect the business and get better in it.

Thanks especially to the people whose names I don't even know. The sports fans. To anybody whoever recognized my name and told me I was a bum or a good guy, whoever read any of my stuff, or who is just a sports fan - Thanks. Without people who cared about sports, I'd quit this business. It wouldn't be worth all the trouble.

But, I save the last for my friends. Steve, my roomate with the good fastball and the best lines, Al (the most informed sports fan I've ever met), the Tull, Rob, Bob, Tara, John ("We're on a mission from God."), Rich, Jack, Matt "The Missing Link" Picard, Laura and the Amazing Nancy. You people are the balls.

By the way: Celts over the Fakers in six, where are the Rangers?, UMass 13-UNH 9 and Marvin over Sugar- KO 7.

So, Dad, Mom, Karen, Kris and Sneakers: Here I am. On to the "professional" sportswriting business. Thanks for everything, everybody. Now get out of here, you nuts. I mean that.

See you on the sports page.

Baseball is swept

PROVIDENCE — The University of Massachusets baseball team closed out its season by being swept by Providence College, 5-3 and 5-1 yesterday.

Junior outfielder-pitcher Matt Sheran had a hit in both games to extend his school record-setting hitting streak to 28 games.

Senior Bob Kotsro finished the season at 4-5, losing the first game. Junior co-captain Sean Flint hit a two-run homer for UMass.

Sheran (2-4) lost the second game for UMass. UMass ended up at 16-24 on the season.

The Friars, 26-21, will continue on in post-season tournament action today.

The Graduating Graphics Gurus Sod and Conman would like to wish their dedicated staff best wishes in life

Gorillas in playoffs today

Freshman defenseman Matt Woods won this battle over Army earlier this season. UMass faces New Hampshire in the NCAA playoffs today at Boyden at 4 pm.

UM at Boyden at 4, vs. UNH

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

They have their chance, and the Gorillas aren't going to blow it this time.

At 4 p.m. this afternoon at Boyden Field, the University of Massachusetts lacrosse team will face the University of New Hampshire in a NCAA Division 1 first-round playoff game.

Wecome, ladies and gentlemen, to the Big Time.

A huge crowd is expected to pack Boyden Field to celebrate the end of classes and see the first-ever playoff game in New England. Tickets to enter the field are priced at $4 and will be available at the gate. The Gorillas haven't been in the tournament since 1981. The NCAA's are a first-time experience for UNH.

Want some angles on this game? Here goes.

The Couch Angle: UMass head coach Dick Garber will be facing his son, Ted, the UNH head coach. They have met 11 previous times (father holds a 7-4 advantage) but never under this much pressure. Mary-Jane Garber, the wife and mother, has jokingly vowed to put Dick on the couch should his team beat Ted's. Stay tuned after the game, it could turn ugly.

The Previous Game Angle: UMass whipped UNH, 15-7 when the teams last met, April 5 at Boyden Field. UMass outscored the Wildcats 6-1 in the third quarter. Kelley Carr scored four goals, Tom Carmean dished out five assists as goalie Sal LoCascio made 15 saves before leaving in the third period. That was ugly.

The UNH Streak Angle: Since that game, however, the Wildcats haven't lost. They've beat seven straight teams (including Army, a team UMass lost to, 8-7 in OT). They also easily handled St. John's and Harvard, teams UMass struggled with. In that span, UNH has averaged over 12 goals-per-game and allowed only 4.8. Attackmen Barry Fraser, Tom Snow and Mike McCaffrey have been tough. Goalie Andy Soma is on a roll.

The UMass Slump Angle: UMass, in its last four games, has dropped three. The Gorillas have lost two straight (although both were to ranked teams, No. 7 Rutgers, 7-4 and second-ranked Syracuse, 13-8). The UMass offensive production has declined over the last seven games (6.8 ppg) but the defense has been excellent.

The Seniors Angle: UMass seniors Tom Aldrich, Gerry Byrne, Greg Fisk, Rich Abbott, Steve Moreland, Mike Tomasello, Seamus McGovern, Perry Seale, Pat Craig and Dave Mehlhorn all play a lot and will want to go out winners at home. They could spark the entire team to a great effort.

"This has been my goal since I decided to come here," said Aldrich. "This team is the best I've been on in four years, We want to continue on and see what happens."

"Ready? Hell yes, I'm ready," said Byrne. "I know a lot of guys back home to have been in games like this. It's my turn now. This is the highlight of the senior's careers."

"The seniors will be skying," said LoCascio. "If we go out and pump in a few goals quickly, we'll get them good. We can take UNH, we just have to do the job we're capable of."

The Uptight Wildcats Angle: Most UMass players are from big-time high school programs and play a rugged college schedule. They haven't had any NCAA experience, but they have played in big games. The entire UMass coaching staff is big-game savy. UNH hasn't played in this big a game, ever. For the coaches or players: The pressure's building on the 'Cats.

The Boyden Angle: The Hill is the wildest place to see a lax game in America. The crowd might not let UMass lose. The Gorillas are 4-1 at home this year. 8,000-plus could show if it's nice.

The Carmean Angle: In his last three games, UMass' junior All-American attackman has scored a total of five points. He has shot 1-of-21. Usually, he averages five points a game. He's due for a a big game and UNH doesn't have a defenseman who, normally, can play him straight up.

"I'm confident our offense can do well against their defense," Carmean said. "We were in a slump, but I think the offense is ready. The whole team's is ready."

The NCAA Angle: Whoever wins, plays at top-seeded Johns Hopkins on Sunday afternoon. Win that game, and you're in the lax Final Four at Delaware. Every step is a critical one. Which team will want the glory more?

The Strategy Angle: UMass will try and keep Fraser away from the net and pepper Soma with shots. UNH will look to double Carmean, pressure the UM midfielders into shooting and keep the crowd out of the game.

There you have it. This game is the biggest any player on the field has played in. "I talked to the captains and they told me the entire team is really up for the game," said Garber.

Softball hosts NCAA's on Friday vs. Northwestern

UMass, Stockley ready

By ROGER CHAPMAN
Collegian Staff

All season long, the University of Massachusetts softball team have been looking for a chance to prove that they are among the nation's best in a sport that for so long has been confined to the western part of the country.

On Friday, UMass will get that chance.

The 20th-ranked Minutewomen, 36-7 on the season and winners of 12 of their last 13 games, will host the first round of the NCAA Division I softball championships against eighth-ranked Northwestern University at Totman (NOPE) Field. Friday's game (slated for a 4 p.m. start) is the first of a best-of-three series. Game two is scheduled for Saturday at 1 p.m. and game three, if necessary will commence at 3 p.m.

For the winner: A trip to the eight-team softball World Series at Creighton University in Omaha, Nebraska. The double-elimination World Series gets underway May 21-25. The winner of this weekend's series will play the Cal.-Berkeley-Arizona St. winner.

"Hosting the first round is a tremendous advantage for us," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said. "It's really important for us to have our fans that have been with us through the whole season with us at this time."

"We're looking forward to playing UMass," Northwestern head caoch Sharon Drysdale said. "We're just glad to be in a post-season tournament with an at-large bid."

The Wildcats (31-15 on the season) were tri-champions of the Big Ten Conference with the University of Minnesota and Indiana University. But because of a better record in head-to-head competition during the season between the three schools, Indiana received the automatic bid to the tourney. Northwestern was second with a 15-9 conference record and also recieved a bid.

To be sure, the Minutewomen will have their hands full with the Wildcats. Northwestern has been to the final eight the past two seasons, and were Final Four participants last season. That, coupled with a tough Midwest schedule, will pose a test for UMass.

But on paper, it doesn't actually seem that way. If you compare season totals, the Minutewomen hold a decisive edge, especially on the offensive end.

As a team, Northwestern is batting only .227 and slugging .278. The Minutewomen are batting at a .291 mark as a team and have been slugging at a .377 clip. The Wildcat team leader in runs batted in is junior catcher Meg Haller with 18, while four Minutewomen have 18 or more RBI's.

Northwestern also has six players that have struck-out 13 or more times this season while only a single UMass player has accomplished the same. As a team, the Wildcats have struck-out 156 times. The Minutewomen have only struck-out 70 times.

We've had a good defensive team throughout the season, but our offense is a bit questionable," Drsydale admitted. "Overall, we have been pretty consistent this year. We just hope we can pull out a few wins in the tournament."

But when tournament time rolls around, any coach can tell you that numbers, no matter how lopsided, don't mean a thing.

"In a post-season tournament numbers really don't mean a lot. Statistics are very deceivivg," Drysdale said. " Anything can happen on a given weekend."

Students face new course requirements

By LESLEY CLARK
Collegian Staff

Students entering the University of Massachusetts this fall will be the first class subject to a new set of more stringent course guidelines, titled General Education, which will replace the system of core requirements.

The core requirement system came under fire five years ago when it was criticized for being too vague and not providing students with a well-rounded education

The new plan, designed by the General Education Council, and passed by the Faculty Senate in May 1985, replaces the "C," "D" and "E" core requirements with specific courses in areas called "analytical reasoning," "physical world and biological world," and "social world."

Students can no longer be allowed to take any required classes pass/fail.

James Wright, the council chairman, said the council's major concerns were to develop a curriculum that would give students a knowledge of their own societies as well as others, an appreciation of the science and the arts, and the ability to reason mathematically and quantitatively.

He said that unlike the core requirement system, the General Education plan "provides a coherent philosophy behind each required program."

Wright, a sociology professor, said that under the current plan, 1,200 courses satisfy core requirements. Under the General Education plan, roughly 400 courses will satisfy requirements.

"The core system was perceived as a vast, uncontrolled smorgasbord of courses from which students could pick at will," Wright said. "Many students traveled the course of least resistance, satisfying math and science requirements without ever taking a math or science course."

An aspect of the General Education plan which mandates that every student must take at least one science course with a laboratory section was postpone indefinitely by the faculty Senate, Wright said.

The plan requires a teaching assistant for every 50 students. Norman Aitken, associate provost for undergraduate education, said this may be difficult to do because of a lack of funding. The plan's requirements include two courses in analytical reasoning, the new math requirement. The first level may be satisfied through a competency examination. In addition, there will be six social world requirements.

In the biological and physical world, three courses, including one in each area, will be required.

Aid now requires more paperwork

Process more complicated

By BOB KIEVRA
Collegian Staff

The more than 15,000 University of Massachusetts students who receive financial aid are now required to fill out verification forms as part of a US government attempt to eliminate mismanagement in student aid programs, according to the University's chief financial aid administrator.

Starting this year, the Department of Education is financial aid offices verify income and household data of all financial aid applicants said Arthur Jackson, director of the UMass Financial Aid Office.

"This means that almost all unmarried students applying for financial aid will have to complete the verification forms and submit copies of their own tax statements plus those of their parents," Jackson said.

Young students claiming independent status will likely find the forms complicated, Jackson said.

"Unless you were born before May 31, 1964, the government now requires that independent students submit copies of their parents' tax returns along with their own," Jackson said.

No longer how long you may have been on your own, the government now wants to look at your parents' income also," he said.

"I don't like it any more that the students will," Jackson said. "Our own verification techniques were working fine. It's just one more hurdle that we're going to have to clear."

Jackson said that since the Reagan administration took office, the financial aid office has had decreasing control over financial aid programs.

"They [the federal government] think that there is massive cheating within federal student aid programs," he said. "I've seen more regulations implemented over the last six years that in my entire 14 years in this field.

"It's all done in the name of efficiency and accuracy," Jackson said. "It doesn't improve either. It just adds more paperwork to my staff and puts my budget up further in the red." Jackson cautioned students to take the forms very seriously.

"I believe the forms to be repetitive and unnecessary," he said. "Nevertheless, they are the law.

"We have to abide by federal regulations, and if students do not return the forms on time, the bursar's office will not credit financial aid toward student bills," he said.

Jackson said the forms are indicative of the type of people who run the Department of Education.

"Most of them are out of private industry with little background in the education field," he said. "A lot of them are political appointees who don't understand the consequences of their actions at the University level. They do not have interests of the students in mind."

Jackson said he hopes that students will not be discouraged by the forms.

"They're just another administrative process," he said. "I realize they come at a bad time with the semester winding down, with students having to choose housing and select courses. But in reality they shouldn't take more than a half hour to complete.

Tower gets a 'Mass Transformation'

For most of last year, the 12th floor of the library tower at the University of Massachusetts was like any other. Graffiti covered the walls and desks. The furniture was mismatched. The windows were dirty. But after a four-day project in early May, that all changed.

It was called Mass Transformation: A Class Act, and saw about 100 volunteer seniors and Physical Plant workers turn out to fully renovate one library floor. They washed the walls and desks, spackled, dusted books and bookshelves, washed windows, hung draperies, and painted. New fiberglass signs were mounted — replacing what had been stenciled on the walls before — for a basically new overall look.

Coordinators of the project — Grant Ingle, of the Office of Human Relations, Beverly Nuckles and Roger Cherewatti of the Physical Plant, and Bob Campbell of housing — deemed the effort an enormous success and are now looking ahead to the fall, when Mass Transformation will tackle the rest of the building.

That effort will involve up to 4,000 volunteers — faculty, staff, alumni and administrators, as well as students — who will provide the labor, while donations of all materials are being sought as well. The project will save the University up to $500,000, a figure based on what it would cost to enlist an outside contractor for the work, and is a community-building exercise as well, organizers say.

The 28-story tower library has been plagued with problems since it opened in 1973. Falling brick chips, first observed that year, led to its closure in 1979 and limited access thereafter; a leaky deck led to water damage on the first floor. The state Legislature appropriated $2.5 million for exterior repairs in 1980, but in June 1983 it was announced that no solution had been found to solve the bricks problem. The University then obtained permission to use the money for interior repairs, which began last fall and have seen several previously unfinished floors completed and the first floor repaired.

Mass Transformation calls for volunteer labor to restore the floors to good condition as part of a master plan. That plan includes placing netting outside the 26th floor to solve the 'pigeon problem' and reopening the deck there; a four-color coding system for the floors so that every six floors will be a different color (shades of blue, green, beige and yellow); murals in the stairwells and some elevator lobbies, chosen from designs by students in the art department; and the possibility of a snack bar inside the building. New signs, the opening of a new lobby, and the return of all books to the tower from Goodell Library will complete the project.

Information on how to sign up for the project is available from Bob Campbell in the housing office at 545-1960.

Bill Cosby addresses a special commencement in the Fine Arts Center last spring.

Cosby gets his degree

By ANNE McCRORY
Collegian Staff

There was pomp, circumstance, a host of University of Massachusetts dignitaries. But most of the 2,000-plus capacity crowd went to the Fine Arts Center last April for just one reason — to see one particularly esteemed alumnus.

And from the time he stood up to receive his honorary master of fine arts degree — revealing some argyle sock to a standing ovation that seemed prepared to roar without end — to the friendly greeting he gave a small child outside before he left, he was classic, comic, Bill Cosby.

On a rare visit to his alma mater — he holds a masters (1972) and doctorate (1977) in education from UMass — the man we know on Thursdays as Cliff Huxtable, obstetrician and father, and exuberant Coca-Cola and Jell-O spokesman the rest of the time, spoke with warmth, humor and only a little bit of modesty.

First he reminisced about the way he came to study at UMass. Here for a performance, he was recruited from a green vinyl couch in the Curry Hicks Cage — "which is still there" — convinced to give up a $7,500 a week salary to earn a master's degree "which would enable me to make in a year what I could make in four weeks."

Several years later, his extensively titled doctoral thesis — "An Integration of the Visual Media via Fat Albert and the Cosby Kids Into the Elementary School Curriculum," it begins — was published.

He blasted critics who claim he didn't earn his degree. "I don't care what person writes 12 more books about whether I went to class or not — tell them to come see me. I'll throw down all the things I've done...let's see if they can match it. They cannot."

And, before giving a little bit of comic advice to graduate seniors, he explained the force behind the "Cosby Show" and his other professional pursuits.

"Everything I do has to do with some form of education," he said. "It has to do with some form of giving a message to people. But, mostly is has to do with helping some people realize that there's a different way to do something, there's a different way to think about it. And perhaps because they saw, they now know that there's a way to change — not themselves, but whatever it is they're trying to figure out.

And finally, there was classic Cosby.

"When you graduate, you'll hear a lot of people tell you 'now this is your world and

Student bus drivers: taking the 12-ton challenge

By DAVE BOARDMAN
Collegian Staff

Guiding 12-ton buses through the five-college area gives student drivers a challenging and exciting alternative to the typical student job fare.

John King, a sophomore management major, says driving is a great job.

"I've had lots of jobs, but this is the best. The bosses are excellent, and the people working here are very courteous," he said. King has been driving for two semesters and said he has no plans to quit.

The white and blue buses, which provided 1.2 million riders with free transportation to jobs and classes last year, cost $150,000 each, and are owned by the Pioneer Valley Transportation Authority, a non-profit public agency based in Springfield.

The agency is funded from federal, state and local sources. Five Colleges Inc., a coordinating center for the region's colleges and their resources, provides 10 percent of the capital outlay for the system. The center is budgeted to pay $375,000 of the total $575,000 operating expenses for 1985-86, according to Bill Brandt, business manager for Five Colleges Inc.

Money from student governments of the five colleges are pooled through Five Colleges Inc. to provide funding. In addition, the towns of Northampton, Hadley, South Hadley, Amherst, Sunderland and Belchertown contribute directly to the PVTA.

Most routes in the five college system are operated by the UMass Transit, with the exception of the Northampton-Amherst line which is operated by the Western Mass. Buslines of Northampton.

Brandt said Five Colleges Inc. "has asked Western Mass Buslines to hire students whenever possible," to get student funds back into the hands of students.

UMass Transit uses exclusively student drivers. Its fleet of 27 buses is operated by 155 students on varying schedules, according to Assistant Operations Manager Paul Blanchard.

Drivers are paid between $4.60 and $5.55 an hour, and need a class 2 driver's license. In-house training is provided, and a road test at the registry in Northampton is scheduled by Mass Transit, Blanchard said.

One advantage to driving a bus is that students are requested to fill out time-exemption request forms, where drivers can block out times they wish to leave open.

Where's the beef on campus?

By CARYN BOWERS
Collegian Staff

Although they don't advertise, "Over 55 billion served," or "Home of the Whopper," the campus dining commons have most likely gone through enough hamburgers to compete with any fast food chain.

Better yet, they don't have to advertise, and with approximately 11,000 mouths to feed, business is good.

But here's the beef: Franklin dining commons in the Central Residential Area uses at least 650 pounds of hamburger for one meal, said Production Manager Brenda Newton. Considering that for the average meal, between 2,000 and 2,500 hungry people pass through, the typical hamburger meal calls for one-third of a pound of beef per person.

What's more, according to Josephine Keeley, acting director of Food Services, there are more males living in Central, so the number of people requesting second helpings is higher than in the Southwest Residential Area or Worcester dining commons.

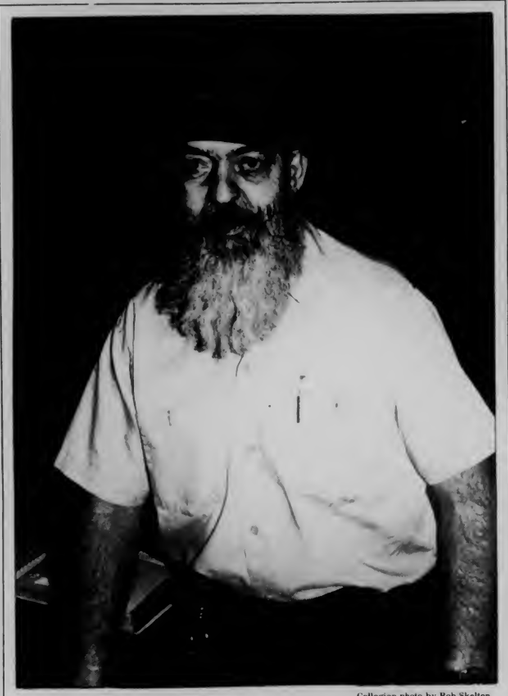
Newton is responsible for ordering all the food and coordinating all food production. "That's everything from soup to nuts, right down to the croutons on the salad bar," she said.

Newton's words prove what none of us wanted to admit all along: That, yes, the d.c is a carefully planned environment, and nothing that goes on the glass plates — the ones the servers so carefully guard — ends up there by accident.

Ordering is done daily in accordance with menu services, which prepares weekly menues and distributes them to each of the dining commons five weeks in advance. This allows time to make estimations on the amount of food that will be needed.

Supervisors and cooks keep track of how many portions of food are used for each meal. This information is recorded on a computer and sent to data processing in the Whitmore Administration Building, which tells how much food to order for each meal and recipe specifications broken down into individual categories.

On the average day, Franklin will go through about 760 quarts of milk, 60 loaves of white bread, 720 eggs, and 850 pounds of turkey, a popular delicacy among the clientele.



Meet the undergraduate student senate

By PATRICK JOHNSON
Collegian Staff

Incoming spewsters [a trendy University of Massachusetts word for people who are not hesitant about giving their opinions] are advised that there is a medium at the UMass designed exclusively for them. It is called the Undergraduate Student Senate.

The Undergraduate Student Senate is the chief undergraduate legislative body at UMass. Every undergraduate student is eligible to be a student senator. On-campus students living in dormitories may be elected as dorm representative. Commuters may be elected through a general election or by the Commuter Area Government. Minority students may become members of the Third World Caucus by petitioning the caucus for membership. All elections and appointments are subject to approval by the senate body.

Larry Center: He keeps it clean.

He's the 'Center' in the Campus Center

By JOE SHARTRAND
Collegian Staff

He can usually can be found in the University of Massachusetts Campus Center, pushing a portable trash bin on wheels, and identified by his thick, grey beard, a worn-blue baseball cap, and a heavy Southern accent.

His name is Larry Center and he has been a custodian in the Campus Center for five years. Students who frequently

"It's interesting and I meet lots of people -Larry Center study or relax there can appreciate Larry, who flips ashtrays onto tables with precision in front of the tables where students sit between classes.

All the while Larry scoops litter off the floors, and dispenses it into his bin, he offers a nod or friendly smile to those who know him — which amounts to hundreds of Campus Center travellers daily.

"My job is to keep the place clean," he said. Center said he sweeps, cleans, and polishes the Campus Center, from the third floor to the coffee shops and three restrooms.

"I like my job and I like the kids (students)," Center said. "It's interesting and I meet a lot of people."

Center first came to work at UMass as a custodian in the summer of 1980 because "I knew a guy who worked here," he said.

He also worked as a dishwasher at the Lord Jeffery Amherst Inn from last October until the inn closed in December 1985 following a work stoppage caused by stalled contract negotiations between union and inn officials. "I don't want no more to do with it, " he said of dishwashing.

Center has lived in this area since October 1979. He has lived in Greenfield, Lake Pleasant, and currently resides in Leverett in a three-room trailer.

"I'm still paying on the trailer, and it's on a piece of land my brother-in-law owns," he said. "Moving around from place to place was too expensive, so we bought the trailer."

Center was born in Jackson, Ky., where his father worked for 18 years in coal mines. Center said he has moved from place and once lived in Florida for seven years. "I've lived in Ohio; I've been everywhere."

He said he met his wife Dorothy in 1962 while in Kentucky, and they have five children, four granddaughters, and one grandson.

Center admitted he has had a few days.

"I do it one day at a time. If my day gets too bad, forget it. I'll just sit it out."

Program addresses violence

By BARBARA DeLOLLIS
Collegian Staff

The goal of the educator/advocates at the Everywoman's Center is to prevent violence against women.

"We address the issues of rape, battering, campus violence, media violence, child sexual assault and incest," said Kathy Alexander, who coordinates the group.

The group of 13 trained volunteers working to educate women on and of campus have been part of the center's Against Violence Against Women Program for more than 10 years.

Women who wish to volunteer for the program must undergo a free 50-hour training program which includes training in areas such as public speaking, resume writing, how to teach women's issues, how to advocate these issues and creating personal safety awareness, Alexander said.

Educator/advocates may earn college credit as well as letters of reference, she said.

"The biggest benefit," Alexander said, "is working against violence against women."

The center is recruiting volunteers from various majors for the summer and fall, Alexander said, adding that they are seeking women who will make a 10-month commitment to the program.

Diane Arico, a 21-year-old senior at UMass, is finishing her 10 months this semester.

"I was a counselor/advocate for a year," she said. "I wanted to concentrate on education."

"I feel like I've reached quite a few people through the workshop," Arico said. The educator/advocates do most of their workshops in the dormitories, she added.

As for the benefits Arico will receive from this: "I'm doing it volunteer because I believe in the work," she said.

Award given to underachievers

Two University of Massachusetts graduates have offered a $350 scholarship to "underachievers" as an incentive to improve academic performance.

James Kwiecinski, a 1975 UMass graduate, and his wife Cynthia, who graduated in 1977, will accepting applications from any full-time student who has completed at least one semester at the University and has a grade point average of 2.85 — or less.

The catch? "I'm then committing them to get a 3.5 or better for fall 1986," Kwiecinski said.

The winner of the $350 will then be chosen from those who make the commitment. "I'll pick them out of a hat," he said.

The scholarship, named the "Kelimegs" after the Kwiecinskis' daughters, Meaghan, 2, and Kelly, six months, was originally planned as three $300 scholarships, but "I decided that wasn't enough of an incentive," he said.

Kwiecinski, now a real estate agent in Holyoke,said of his time at UMass, "I am a person who didn't live up to his potential; I was even on academic probation for one semester...I did turn around and ended up with 3.5s and 3.7s for a couple of semesters. The award isn't the issue, everyone who gets a 3.5 is a winner," he said.

UMass Debate Union ranked in top three

By YOAV SHORR
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts Debate Union, having won more tournaments than anyone else last season, ranks among the top three teams in the country.

"We have a winning record against all our competition. In fact, the big name this year is UMass," said Joel Willmore, the union's director and coach.

During the 1985-1986 season the union defeated such schools as Dartmouth College, and the University of North Carolina. UMass's competitors for the top spot are Dartmouth and Baylor University.

"There's absolutely no doubt that we will be among the top three in the coaches poll, Willmore said.

The union consists of two teams with two members each, as well as a public debate squad of 12 to 20 members, which competes at high schools and at various civic organizations.

Most of the travelling is done by debators Daniel Povenelli, a senior anthropology major, and Mark Friedman, a sophmore political science major. As a team the two have debated as far away as Texas and California.

"These two gentlemen have clearly been one of the best teams in the past two years," Willmore said.

Also scoring high are first-year debaters Dayna Scott and Stacey Kinnamonn.

Preparations for tournaments requires long hours of research, sometimes lasting through the night. "We place a very large expectation on our debaters," Willmore said.

"The four people going to tournaments are the equivalent of professionals in terms of the level of preparation," he said.

Ten weekends are devoted to tournaments, which can last up to four days each. "It's physically trying," Friedman said, telling of long debates and little sleep."

"A lot of people tend to underestimate what a team does for the University. We're representatives for the school, literally from coast to coast," Willmore said.

UMass no place for autos

By JENNIFER HEMENWAY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts is not the best place to park a car. Aside from heavy competition for certain lots, some cars get ticketed, towed, vandalized, or stolen.

There is no clear solution to the problem of limited parking on campus, said Gerald T. O'Neil, the director of public safety, but he offered one suggestion: "I recommend not having a car on campus. Give it a lot of thought before bringing a car here."

Vandalism often occurs when cars are parked in various hidden spaces, he said.

"The basic problem is people not locking their cars. They should not make it easy for others to get into their cars," he said.

Vandalism happens at almost every location on campus, especially in lot 22 by the Southwest Residential Area, lot 41 behind the School of Education, and the three outlying P-lots, O'Neil said.

He said most of the arrests made in the P-lots have been for the theft of car stereos.

More than $500,000 worth of tickets were issued on campus last year. "All of the money collected goes to the ticket fund which is used for financial aid," O'Neil said.

"We don't have a favorite spot to ticket. Southwest gets a lot because there are so many residents and limited parking," he said.

In order to obtain a parking sticker for certain parking lots, students must get on a waiting list, said Barbara Konieczny of the parking office.

More lots are needed on campus because it is difficult to get a space close to a specific dorm, she said.

The price of the stickers, which are issued for a full year from Sept. 1 to Aug. 31, ranges from $8 to $153, depending on the location.

Students travel far for aid

By ANDREW WOLFF
Collegian Staff

WASHINGTON — An eight-hour bus ride through the night that made two days feel like one, a shooting across the street from the Skyline Inn where the group stayed and sore feet were the unglamorous parts of the trip to the nation's capital by 46 University of Massachusetts students in March.

When it was over, members of Students Advocating Financial Aid headed back to Amherst, confident they did their best during the three days of meetings with legislators and their aides to stress the importance of higher education and student aid.

"I think people listened to us, this is what makes SAFA attractive and professional," said Peter Alfano, a senior political science and economics major on his second SAFA trip. "We weren't jumping up and down wearing signs. We were very informed. We spoke our piece."

A typical SAFA day began with a 7 a.m. wake-up call to all hotel rooms. But Monday, no calls came and most of the group overslept.

After wake-up, students had to make a trek about five blocks up South Capitol Avenue to the Rayburn Building, the office building for most members of the House of Representatives, adjacent to the Capitol.

By 9 a.m., phone calls and visits were made to various offices on both sides of Capitol Hill. The goal: to meet with House and Senate members or their legislative aids.

After a full day of lobbying, the students would head back to the Skyline to nurse their tired feet.

"It's a kind of trip that makes you feel good," said Eric Sokol, a senior political science major. "It's also a time to meet people, to party, and to visit a great city."

At 9 p.m. on the final night, shortly after most of the group returned to the Skyline, a dispute between two local residents across the street ended when one fired four shots with a handgun. One bullet struck a man before the assailant fled in a car.

SAFA vice president Steven R. Sullivan walked out of the front doors of the hotel and the victim fell into his arms.

"There was blood on his forehead, and a hole in his sweatshirt," Sullivan recalled. "I said to him, 'Did you get stabbed?' he said, 'No, I got shot.'" Sullivan brought the man into the lobby, helping him to a couch before telling someone to call the police. The man was taken to a nearby hospital. No other information was available.

The shooting did not mar the trip, students said later.

"There was a lot of enthusiasm," Alfano said. "Everyone wanted to go out and do things. I saw a lot of emotion.

We have a lot to offer

Welcome to the fun and confusing world of the University of Massachusetts. Although this initial exposure lasts only a few days, it is an important part of the transition from home/high school/childhood to the realm of independence, responsibility, and maturity.

You chose the right place to do it. UMass is one of the finest institutions of higher education, public or otherwise, in the country. Our size may well be intimidating — for a while. However, the diversity of people, ideas and culture to be found here will soon make up for any feeling of being overwhelmed.

In addition to a talented and hardworking faculty, there are literally hundreds of extra-curricular, student-run organizations. Many of them have budgets running into the thousands of dollars and all decisions on how to spend this largesse are made by us — the students. Get involved and chances are that you will be running the whole show after a few years. This is a chance you will not have again until well into a post-graduation career.

The orientation process, as you are discovering, is full of people freely giving advice and people laying down the rules. Some of them are upperclassmen, others are professionals but all have valuable things to say and we urge you to listen to it carefully and respectfully. Most of them went through it themselves so they know how you feel.

Upon arriving to start the fall semester, it will be a whole different ballgame. Then, all the pressure will be on you. There is no one around to tell you what to do and when to do it. This freedom brings many choices. To study or not to study, whether or not to party and how much and a host of other decisions are all up to you. Some people cannot handle the freedom but bear in mind that it is part of the rights and privileges of being an adult.

See you in September.

Sampling the fare

The editors

Like its real-world counterparts, the Collegian has its own pool of columnists, those who write on a regular or semi-regular basis. To become a columnist, one must have had five columns published over the course of a semester. Below are some excerpts from last spring's editorial discussion:

"A pseudo-intellectual is defined as one who professes to know everything about Einstein, Shakespeare, Nietzsche, and Freud, but who in reality can't even spell any of their names."

— Herb Ramy, Collegian columnist.

"Guaranteeing a standard of living makes people lazy. It undermines their self-reliance, it sabotages their mutual dependence on family structures and it reduces the voluntary labor force. Besides that, it costs me money."

— Rusty Denton, Collegian columnist.

"America's bombing of Libya, you see, was anything but discreet...and unilateral air strikes are hardly in the spirit of international cooperation. Particularly when West Germany had called for restraint just hours before the bombing.

— Timothy Harris, contributing columnist.

"We have to go to the source. Terrorists do not respect borders and neither can we if we plan to put a dent in their ranks. Our air strikes on Libya have hopefully put other nations who provide hidey-holes for these maggots on notice that it will not be tolerated.

—William Spain, Collegian columnist.

"If nothing else, Mikhail Gorbachev's proposal to rid the world of nuclear weapons by the year 2000 has opened the eyes of many people who at one time or another saw this illusion as reality. It has truly separated the realists from the idealists, and most of all, it has brought forth the reality that nuclear weapons are here to stay."

— Stuart Gottlieb, Collegian columnist.

"The easiest way to become an irrational person, and become a popular politican some day, is to master the art of calling opponents leftists, rightists, conservatives, liberals, fascists, communists, or madmen.; anything you think you're not."

— Jeffry Bartash, Collegian columnist.

"And when I see the new rebels, who flirt with the flag, get featured in newspaper supplements, and find a cause in the contras, I have to sigh, for they are fighting a losing battle. It will be long, but in the end, those who are right, and not necessarily right-wing, will prevail."

— Rob Skelton, Collegian columnist.

"Perhaps the most troubling example of lack or resolve involves our policies in Central America. While the Sandinistas, in both their rhetoric and actions, confirm their strong Soviet Bloc ties and their expansionist goals, our Congress closes its eyes to this to this reality and has left our allies in the are to fend for themselves."

— Peter Dow, Collegian columnist.

There are all kinds of devices invented for the protection and preservation of countries: defensive barriers, forts, trenches, and the like. All these are work of human hands aided by money. But prudent minds have as a natural gift one safeguard which is the common possession of all, and this applies especially to the dealings of democracies with dictatorships. What is this safeguard? Skepticism. This you must preserve. This you must retain. If you can keep this, you need fear no harm.

— Demosthenes, 340 BC

Some advice from a seasoned veteran

Daniel Sobel

As a third semester senior (that means I didn't graduate in the expected four years), who has been around the block a few times here at the University, I feel it is my duty to inform you 4,000 or so incoming first-year students about some interesting aspects of UMass. Some things are warnings, others are tips on how to stay on top of the game.

Lines — Each semester begins with long, irritating, nebulous lines as students frantically race about campus trying to pick up classes, buy parking stickers, find dorm rooms, wait to get into the dining commons, go bankrupt buying books, and get some of that tape that's sticky on both sides and comes in rolls or squares, so your Madonna and Calvin Klein posters stay beautifully on the wall. The key to lines is just to deal with them and use the waiting time wisely. Get your paper work in order so you can proceed quickly with business and run to the next line. Meanwhile, you can ask the person next to you where the big parties are that weekend or where to meet men/women.

Parking — If you own a car my advice is: Watch it carefully. A car parked illegally on the UMass campus has entered the world of "Towdom." As a freshman; my car was towed at least five times by our friends down at Amherst Towing. (I don't know what kind of deal the University has with Amherst Towing, but you may be paying for their beer). Also, the campus parking meter folks can sniff an illegally parked auto from a mile away and they love leaving their John Hancock's on as many tickets as their tired fingers allow (I won't mention all the parking problems on this campus. They're only doing their jobs). Another pearl of wisdom: Pay the tickets as soon as possible because they'll catch up to you. A former Collegian editor friend of mine owes the University about $2,000 and you don't graduate until you pay off ALL your UMass debts. (L.B., will you ever see the outside of this place?)

Resident assistants — Test them as soon as possible to see what their tolerance level is for crazy dormitory shenanigans like loud music, hallway frisbee, bathroom water sports and other oddities performed by the thousands who've passed through UMass dwellings over the years. Just kidding. Resident assistants can help you with room assignments, some can even get you a single, although I shouldn't be telling you this because patronage is against the rules.

Encounters — Simply put, this place is full of people. The largeness of the campus will seem to shrink as you become familiar with it, but there will always be a new face. If you catch someone's eye say hello to him/her. It's easy to look away in shyness but making a quick friend makes a new and often frightening experience a whole lot nicer. It's true what they say about college — that you form warm, beautiful and sometimes lifelong friendships. There's every kind of person here — rads, conservos, punks, earthy-crunchies, preppies, jocks, party animals and bookworms. You can find a friend in a place with all these diverse types. After four years, even I found a few.

Bars — Acquire yourself a fake ID or you'll be drinking in the dorm.

I could go on all day but I want to let you experience your first moments at UMass with a certain degree of naivete. Any new experience is scary; many of you will have no trouble adjusting to your first timeaway from home. For others, it will take a while. But, believe me, it's a wonderful little world here with a great deal to offer. UMass is a great place. Enjoy it!!

this is your life,' and they use this word forth. 'And as you go forth...' " he told seniors. "First I have a message for you from your parents: forth, f-o-r-t-h, is not back home.

"When you come out of that football stadium wearing funny shoes, and you're celebrating and you drank champagne and you smoked a joint, there are people waiting for you to beat upon you, to take advantage of you," he roared. "And I think it takes about three days for you to realize here's something else you're going to have to do — and work is not one of them. Adjust, you're going to have to adjust."

ARTS

Five College arts community: you name it and we've got it

The possibilties are endless

By KELLY SIEGER
and NANCY KLINGENER
Collegian Staff

The Five College area, made up of Smith College, Amherst College, Hampshire College, Mount Holyoke College and of course the University of Massachusetts, is reknowned for its cultural richness.

Anything is possible, as evidence by the diversity found on the campuses, especially at UMass. A wide spectrum of events, from art shows, to Broadway musicals, to orchestra performances, to well-known pop acts, are all available, usually with reduced rates for students.

Last year's line-up included such international acts as the National Theater of the Deaf, Mummenschanz, Marcel Marceau, the Springfield Symphony, Ballet Tap USA, and "42nd Street."

The community itself contributes much of the entertainment on campus, with entirely student-produced production such as "Tally's Folly," "Much Ado About Nothing," "Antigone Too: Rites of Love and Defiance," and "Lesser Pleasures: A Secret Opera."

Students are also involved in other 'artistic endeavors.' UMass itself sports five major art galleries, almost solely concentrating on student works, and each of the other Five Colleges, especially Smith, have fine galleries to offer.

The dance and music Departments of the five colleges at UMass likewise take their responsibilty towards performance seriously; various faculty groups and others, like the Jazz Ensemble, give regular performances.

David Mendes, Jonathan Curelop and Dana Williams (above) star in just one of the student-run productions, "All's Well That Ends Well." Student's art (right) is concentrated on by UMass' five art galleries. This piece was shown in the Hampden Gallery, located in the Southwest Residential Area.

UMass is not lacking in the so-called 'popular music' scene, either. This past spring, a record was cut by several bands who started out jamming on their floors in the dorm.

UPC is the student-run organization responsible for bringing the big-name bands to campus. Last year, Morris Day, Paul Young and Al Jarreau were among those who appeared; in the past, the Talking Heads, Elvis Costello and the Grateful Dead have all played UMass.

Besides flowers and sunshine, spring brings the concerts to campus. On consecutive weekends, the area governments and UPC sponsor free outdoor bashes with a number of bands, lasting all afternoon.

This year, the series started with the Del Fuegos at the East Side Concert and ended with Third World playing UPC's Spring Concert by the pond, two weeks later. In between, John Cafferty and the Beaver Brown Band at Southwest and The Fools at Orchard Hill kept people outside.

With a cinema in town, ten at the malls and three in Northampton, it's almost impossible not to like one of the movies around. Double features and classics are the specialty in town, and there is usually a foreign film in Northampton. Midnight Movie Madness, with Rocky Horror always at the mall, is also a favorite.

Al Jarreau (above) and James Cotton (right) are two of the acts seen on the UMass campus this year. Both were presented by Union Production Council. Other acts available through the year were UB40, the Del Fuegos, Marshall Crenshaw, Paul Young, Johnny Winter and the Ramones.

Brew got started on campus

By PATRICK JOHNSON
Collegian Staff

Jon Bove recently started selling his own brand of beer, "Portland Lager," 16 years after making his first batch in his room while a University of Massachusetts student.

"In 1970, I moved into Dickinson (House) with a Chicopee (resident) named Joe Walzack. And in between endless bouts of shooting pool and eating keilbasa sandwiches in Chicopee, he taught me how to make beer," Bove said.

Bove said that during the semester he learned to be a brewer, he attended one class out of a full schedule, and his grade point average fell from a 3.2 to a 1.8.

Bove said he Walzack were making between 15 and 25 gallons of beer a week and giving it away, to the benefit of the Dickinson party scene.

"It was kind of funny because all of the guys were just back from Vietnam, and when we first started, the bottles would be blowing up and everyone would think it was artillery," he said.

Bove graduated from UMass in 1975, and in 1983, he attended a series of seminars on micro-breweries at the University of California in Davis because he was "looking for something to do.

"We wanted to build a brewery that would make 19th century beers and ales. The whole idea was to bring back traditional brews, the kind people drank before Prohibition," Bove said.

One peculiarity about Bove's Maine Coast Brewing is that it is not located in Maine but Eau Claire, Wis.

"We tried for three years to find financing in Portland, I was jumping through hoops. There was plenty of bull, but no money," he said.

The primary responsibility of senators is to attend senate meetings. They are scheduled to start at 7 p.m. every Wednesday in the Campus Center, although meetings usually start around 7:30 because some senators insist on being fashionably late.

There is a great deal of diversity in the senate now, unlike recent years when the progressives, a bloc of liberal senators held a clear majority. The size of the progressives is now equal to the conservatives, a bloc of moderate to ultra-conservative senators, which leads to interesting debates during the meetings.

The main responsibility of the senate is the control and distribution of the $1.8 million Student Activities Trust Fund which is funded through the student activities fee, which all undergraduates pay.

The trust fund is distributed by the senate to more than 450 registered student organizations and services. Among the student groups funded by the senate are: campus radio station WMUA, Union Program Council, which produces concer's on campus, and the UMass Transit bus line.

Most student-run organizations at UMass depend on, and ultimately answer to, the senate for funding each year. Some organizations, including The Massachusetts Daily Collegian, are funded completely through their own efforts and are independent from the senate.

RAGE AT THE CAGE — Students wait in line for the re-opening of the Curry Hicks Cage last fall. The Cage, which is home to the University of Massachusetts Minutemen basketball team, had been closed for extensive renovations for about a year prior to the re-opening. Fans waited up to two hours in the cold to enter the building to see Minutemen's home opener. The Cage has also hosted concerts in the past.

Are you bored, looking for something to do?

Boyden, NOPE gyms open

By JOHN NOLAN
Collegian Staff

Welcome freshmen.

So you've just arrived on campus and are going to be looking for something to do once the semester starts in September. You've finally landed in your future home away from home and, whether or not you were a high school superstar athlete, the time will inevitably arrive when you must adopt an activity to keep yourself busy.

If you've got nothing better to do, then take some time to check out Boyden or NOPE gymnasiums.

Located behind the Curry Hicks Cage, home of Minutemen basketball, and due east across from Southwest Area, Boyden is the home for the majority of UMass athletes. The facility includes six full-length basketball courts, three racquetball courts, two weight rooms, a gymnastics floor, an Olympic-size swimming pool with both a low and high diving board, and a bowling alley. Outside Boyden are the countless intramural athletic fields and tennis courts.

NOPE gymnasium is located below Sylvan Area and across from Northeast Area. Also known as Totman gym, NOPE also provides students with many activities to choose from. NOPE has three full-length basketball courts and a swimming pool upstairs, an all-purpose open floor on the first floor, and a weight room, crew room and karate dojo downstairs. Behind NOPE are a pair of softball fields next to which is a field hockey/lacrosse playing field and tennis courts.

Sweating is an integral part of everyone's athletic activity but if it can be avoided, no one wants to soak up too many sets of clothes. But through the magic of mass laundering, both athletic facilities are able to amply supply students with a never-ending change of athletic apparel. When you show up at the beginning of the semester to look into these facilities, you can sign for a locker, shirt, shorts, socks, towel and a jock where applicable. With these items, students can sweat and roll in the mud to their hearts content, free of the worry of having to spend 60 cents on laundry.

So come September, look these two facilities up and immerse yourself in athletics. But enjoy the rest of your summer first.

SPORTS

See the action here at UMass

By JOHN NOLAN
Collegian Staff

High school is over. Welcome to big time athletics.

The freshman class is treated with the unique experience of witnessing the University of Massachusetts teams rock into action every fall.

When I came to UMass, I had never seen lacrosse, field hockey, or anything resembling decent athletics before. Though the initial thrill of standing in the Cage or Alumni Stadium quickly wore off, the quality of play was at a level I had never seen.

Last year, UMass represented itself as perhaps one of the nation's most successful division I schools in terms of total won-lost record. A quick glance at last season may give you a flavor of what you can expect this year.

Fall: Last season's football campaign may have marked the return of entertaining football here at UMass. Leading the team to a 7-4 record after consecutive 3-8 seasons, freshman quarterback Dave Palazzi completed 53 percent of his passes for 1152 yards and five touchdowns in eight games. Out for three games with a shoulder separation, Palazzi's return combining with the stellar play of division I-AA's best defense brought life back to the team and rejuvinated the wishbone offense. UMass football fans had something to cheer about for the first time in three years.

The women's soccer team came so very close to having a perfect season and a national championship. Running off 15 consecutive wins while giving up a microscopic two goals, the underclass-dominated Minutewomen entered the national tournament with the number one ranking. Travelling to George Mason, UMass collapsed under tournament pressure, falling in the semi-finals. With but two seniors graduated (Sue Bird and Jamie Watson in photo below), the Minutewomen are sure to be back in the title hunt.

The women's volleyball team, with little expected of them, pulled out all the stops, rampaging to a school-record 35 wins and narrowly missing the NCAA National Tournament. This season should be much more difficult, as the Minutewomen join the Atlantic 10 conference regarded as one of the nation's top conferences.

Both men's soccer and the field hockey team had excellent season's. The soccer team, despite the absence of a pair of All-New England players, finished third in New England. Likewise, the field hockey team finished the same, despite being ranked in the nation's Top-Ten the entire season.

Winter: The men's basketball team, playing in the newly rennovated Curry Hicks Cage had high expectations of a winning season. But when three freshman starters and four more are coming off the bench, expectations must be realistic.
A disappointing 9-19, the Minutemen can do little but improve.

Women's basketball fared slightly better at 11-17, dominating its New England opponents while dropping most of its decisions to conference foes. The gymnastics, indoor track and swimming teams all had strong seasons and should perform as well this year.

Spring: Spring seems to bring out the lacrosse in everyone. After a four-year drought, the UMass men's lacrosse team vaulted into the NCAA playoffs and crushed New Hampshire, 16-6, before 8,000 fans on Boyden Hill in the opening round. The Gorillas then travelled to Johns Hopkins after this story was printed. Sorry folks. If you've never seen lacrosse before, the Gorillas will definately provide you with an experience.

UMass Lacrosse, here seen in action against New Hampshire, is considered by some to be New England's best sports action. The team eventually bowed out in the playoffs, 13-6, to the number one ranked Johns Hopkins University.

The softball team was also hot in the spring, as Pittsfield Ma. native Lynn Stockley sported a phenomenal 20-2 record and brought UMass recognition by being featured on the front page of the Boston Globe sports section. The Minutewomen hosted the first round of the NCAA national tournament against Northwestern University but, same story fans, the season was just too long.

The women's lacrosse team also had a strong season, ranked in the top ten the entire season before fading at the end. The baseball team, with an atrocious 1-14 start, rallied to win 12 of its next 13 games to salvage respectibility. Heading into this season, another Pittsfield native, Matt Sheran, has a school-record 28 game-hitting streak.

Winners indeed. Catch Minutemen madness beginning this fall.

Women's soccer — Will the national title finally come to UMass?

Now you can be an athlete too

By JOHN NOLAN
Collegian Staff

It's going to happen, and you're going to want to get involved.

No question about it, during your four years as a student here at UMass, you will undoubtedly decide to get involved in athletics one way or another. Whether you were the county's top baseball player or the girl who dodged swimming volleyball in gym class, the time will come when you will get involved.

How do students compete if they can't make the varsity teams? Simple. Between the dozens of athletic clubs, gym classes and intramural activities, students can get in as much sports action as they want if they take the initiative to get involved.

Clubs competing in such sports and activities like volleyball, rugby, water polo, sailing, riding, wrestling, ultimate frisbee, parachuting, orienteering and racquetball give the opportunity for students to excel and expand their horizons through the many different student run organizations on campus.

The intramural season's begin immediately in the fall, so if you are interested in playing soccer or volleyball, you should organize a team within the semester's first week. Sports such as football, basketball, softball, tennis, badminton and an endless list of others are all available for those students who wish to ascend to the levels of glory once acheived during high school.

UMass also offers a huge list of gym classes that students may take for one credit as well. Classes range from lacrosse to slimnastics and are extremely popular with students trying to meet people. Every student should, and probably will, take a gym class before graduation. Gym classes are worth taking.

How does a student get involved? If you are interested in joining a club or organizing an intramural team, go to the intramural office in Boyden and either drop off a note in club mailboxes or pick up an application form for an intramural team. If you just want to take a gym class, your best bet would be to sign up for one on your pre-registration sheet.
